"During the past fifteen, $450,000,000 have been coined and I think the silver dollar has received enough attention in this line. A man named Bland claimed at one time that he had discovered the great panacea for hard times, and there was coined three times the number of silver dollars, but this did not improve matters. Bryan's ideas may be politics but they are not honest. Wages depend on the amount of general business transacted. In 1855 we experienced a real panic and wages fell to a low point and remained so for many years. All business men oppose Bryan and his free coinage system, and as a rule men don't like to leave their party unless they have good reasons for it. There is only about 5 per cent of this country's business carried on in cash. The balance is conducted on a credit system. Bryan's scheme is not a new one, and it has resulted disastrously. It affects the workingmen. What I tell you is no fairy story, but facts. Honesty is the best every time. Ex-President Harrison recently said that the worst sufferers from the cheap dollar are the workingmen, for it cheats them."

Following Mr. Atterbury's remarks an informal discussion of various phases of the political question was indulged in by several of those present. The speaker announced that every Tuesday and Thursday evenings meetings would be held at the same place and he urged those present to spread the news. He announced that on Thursday evening, Macready Sykes would speak. The following persons have recently joined the new party: H. F. Doball, Chas. Burnett, Howard Fleming, Col. J. F. Wilson, Andrew Selvin, E. C. Pearson, Elias Hatch, F. Linbe, and Mahlon Vail.

THE "COUNT" GOES TO JAIL.

Italian Bank Defaulter Committed to Await Extradition to New York.

"Count" Alberico Caroselli, the Italian banker, formerly of New York, who was arrested Sunday afternoon at the home of his brother, Carlo Caroselli, on Lincoln place, charged with being a fugitive from justice, also an absconder, was taken to Elizabeth Tuesday by Chief Grant to await the requisition papers which will be brought from New York. Justice Newcorn committed the "Count" until Thursday. Chief Grant telephoned to the Police Headquarters New York yesterday and they informed the Chief that requisition papers would be issued at once. It now looks as though the "Count" will be obliged to meet the depositors whom it is alleged he defrauded.

NOT AS THE BIBLE SAYS

UNCHRISTIANLIKE ATTITUDE OF VOLUNTEERS TOWARD SALVATIONISTS.

The Volunteers Encroach on a Heretofore Conceded Right of the Salvationists, and Latter Retire From a Point of Vantage.

For the first time since there has been an American Volunteer post in this city, the Salvation Army and the former organization have come in dire conflict, and the attitude reached last night seemed unchristianlike.

Two years ago the Salvation Army secured permission from the city officials to hold open air meetings on the vacant lot near the Babcock building on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. The army always took advantage of the privilege whenever the weather was favorable for outdoor meetings, but when the contention between the Booths and the subsequent organization of the Volunteers occurred, the Salvationists agreed to retire from this point of vantage every other Saturday night and permit their rivals to reach the crowds from that location, retaining the right, however, to meet there Tuesday and Thursday without interruption from the Volunteers.

On Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and every other Saturday, the Volunteers met there and held their service. There was no conflict between the two until last night.

Captain Brewer and four faithful Salvationists, with drums and tambourines, and many interspersed hallelujahs, marched to this spot Tuesday night shortly after 7 o'clock and started their simple service of prayer and testimony. As they formed a circle, the Volunteers were seen coming up Front street from the direction of their headquarters with unfurled flags, beating drums and a line of recruits that exceeded the Salvationists several to one. The Captain of the Salvationists was about to announce a hymn for his soldiers to sing, when the Volunteers whirled from their position in the street and marched directly up along side of their erstwhile co-laborers. Their was no cessation of noise or surprised look on the part of the newcomers, and they settled down to holding a meeting just as though the Salvationists were out of sight and out of hearing.

This action was such a surprise to Captain Brewer that it almost took his breath away and he commanded his few soldiers to be quiet for a moment. He awaited developments and the Volunteers continued the services unconcerned as to the position of the Salvationists. Kneeling on the ground they uplifted their voices in prayer, sang a hymn with accompaniment of drum and tambourines and followed up with their accustomed testimonies.

Meanwhile the Salvationists stood awed by the actions of the Volunteers in encroaching on what had been conceded their right that night and disturbing the service which they had already started. Captain Brew or seemed to realize that the Volunteers were resolute in their determination to hold a meeting there, and accompanied by his little band of followers he quietly marched off to the barracks. The Volunteers remained there for some time and continued their meeting and then went back to their own rooms in Reform Hall.

When seen by a Press reporter this morning Captain Brewer said that he was at loss to account for the strange and unchristianlike actions of the Volunteers. He was not severe in criticism of them, but spoke more in a tone of regret and sorrow that there should be such an unfriendly demonstration by an organization engaged in the work of christianity and along the same line of methods as his own.

Captain Bisbane was in charge of the Volunteers.

A Foolish Hawk.

A chicken hawk visited Plainfield Tuesday afternoon and here met his Waterloo. He went to the chicken yard of George N. Cortwright, of East Sixth street, and proceeded to devour a fowl. Edward Marcellus was going by. He picked up several stones and began to throw them at the hawk. The bird merely winked his eye and paid no attention until the fifth stone caught him in the neck, when he laid down and gave up the ghost.

Appealed the Case.

S. S. Swackhamer has appealed the case of Musgrave against Manning, in contract, for his client, the plaintiff. The case was recently tried before Justice Newcorn and a verdict was given of no cause for action. Ex-Judge W. A. Coddington represented Manning.

A FAST RUN ON RECORD.

A CENTRAL PASSENGER TRAIN ALMOST FLIES THROUGH SPACE.

With Engineer Mike Moynahan at the Throttle a Speed of 75 Miles an Hour is Maintained for Seven Miles.

Train No. 504 pulled in at Bound Brook Tuesday a little behind time, being due to leave there at 11:56 a. m. A bevy of legal luminaries of this city headed by Craig A. Marsh, were on the train scheduled to leave Bound Brook at the same time as No. 504. Engine 172 replaced the one which had brought the train that far on its way from Philadelphia and Mike Moynahan, upon mounting "old reliable," at the signal from Conductor Brokaw, pulled out. "Get out of our way," cried John Chandler, who was on the local. "Dont delay us by taking water at Green Brook," yelled another man anxious to be at his Plainfield home in time for lunch. Gentle Mike looked calmly at his repeater but said never a word. Twelve o'clock that repeater registered and Mike was due at Jersey City at 12:39. A smoother riding train never a man rode on. Watches were held from Plainfield station mile post to the one at Rahway river, east of Cranford, and the seven miles were made in the remarkable time of 5 minutes and thirty-six seconds or at the rate of 48 seconds to the mile, being a speed of 75 miles per hour. A stop was made at Elizabeth, but despite that the train came to a standstill at Jersey City one minute and ten seconds ahead of time.

Jealously, of course, exists and when the run was mentioned to another trainman, he asked "how many cars?" "Five," was the reply, "one Pullman sleeper, one express car, one U. S. mail car and two B. and O. coaches heavier than lead and all loaded down."

On being congratulated on the result of his run, modest Mike gave all the credit to the machine. "Good engine," said he, "and she made the time. I could not run a Mudd can fast it, and I did'nt have her wide open either. Heavy train though." And cool as a cucumber he strolled around to test the boxes.

THE AWNING ABLAZE.

The Fire Department Called Out for an Incipient Fire.

There is one thing that will effectually arouse Plainfield and that is the fire-alarm whistle. It was really wonderful how rapidly the crowd gathered Tuesday afternoon when an alarm came in from box 43, at the corner of Grove and West Front streets, and the word was passed around that the Babcock building was on fire.

Rumor was correct, but the blaze was so slight that it was almost out before the department arrived, and that was in short order. An awning over one of the Madison avenue side windows of Reed & Coddington's law offices, on the second floor, caught fire and ignited the shade inside. The window was closed, the shade extinguished, and the awning was about consumed, and only needed a little water to put out the last sparks. It is supposed to have caught from a cigarette butt or lighted match dropped from one of the upper windows.

Lively Express Package.

The United States Express Company had a rather strange package to handle Tuesday. It was a live bull calf, all crated, with a bed of hay of which he occasionally took a mouthful. This rather lively passenger is going to Mount St. Vincent, on the Hudson, and is leaving his birthplace, the Holly Farm. He is being sent by John I. Holly to Edward D. Randolph.

Goes to the County Court.

The case of Stevens against Nankin, in tort, which was tried before Justice Mosher and a twelve-men jury Monday, and a verdict of $50 given to the plaintiff, has been appealed by the defendant through his lawyer, Assemblyman W. R. Codington. S. S. Swackhamer was the counsel for the plaintiff.

A Harvest Supper.

A Harvest Supper will be held at Monroe Avenue chapel Tuesday evening. It is given by the Ladies Aid Society of the chapel. The Schubert Ladies Orchestra will be present and render a number of selections.

"Life in London."

In the Y. M. C. A. hall, on Thursday evening, Rev. Dr. S. F. Cadman, of New York city, will lecture. His subject will be "Life in London." Dr. C. R. Barnes will preside.

HOPE FOR MIKE WATSON

AN ATTEMPT WILL BE MADE TO RELEASE HIM TODAY.

Lawyer Swackhamer Has Gone to Trenton to Secure a Writ of Habeas Corpus —Proceedings Said to Be Illegal.

There was a faint expression of joy in the face of "Mike" Watson as he looked through the bars of the county jail Tuesday morning and shivered at Elizabeth's chilly reception. He knew that efforts were being made today to get him out of jail and the unpleasant company of Union county's choicest rogues.

This morning S. S. Swackhamer, who now represents Watson, went to Trenton to get a writ of habeus corpus from the Court of Chancery. Now the object of such a writ is to release men who have been detained illegally. At first sight it would appear that Watson's sentence was perfectly legal, but Watson's friends claim that it was not. Whether their claim is correct remains to be seen.

As was told in The Press at the time of Watson's arrest, he promptly pleaded not guilty. Then he reconsidered the matter and changed his plea to guilty. His friends state that he did that without the advice of counsel, and after he was told by the *authorities that he would save him*self lots of expense and trouble by pleading guilty as the proof was undeniable. Watson was thus beguiled, they claim, into throwing away his liberty.

After this, he consulted Mr. Swackhamer, who advised him to plead not guilty. With great anxiety and trepidation he again hurried to Judge DeMeza's office to change his plea again.

The Judge said he would consider the request, and last Monday he informed "Mike" that he couldn't change his plea again and then sentenced him.

Watson's friends claim that he had a right to change his plea on the advice of counsel, and that therefore he was detained without trial and illegally.

Then their plan is to get a writ of certiorari and have the proceedings reviewed by a higher tribunal. Meanwhile Mike remains behind the bars and hopes for better days.

ANOTHER VIOLATOR GOES TO JAIL.

Judge DeMeza Imposes a Heavy Sentence on Hugh O'Donnell.

Verily, this seems to be a hard year for the illegal liquor dealers. Michael Watson is languishing in jail, and "Hughie" O'Donnell has just gone down to join him.

"Hughie" was to have been tried on Friday, but this morning he appeared before the Judge and remarked that he thought he would change his plea. He pleaded guilty and the judge pronounced sentence at once without giving him a chance to change it again. The sentence was a fine of $100 or 60 days in jail. As "Hughie" is not flush he went down to join Watson.

Bicycling on the Way.

J. E. Murray, son of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Murray, of Central avenue and Eighth street, left New York on his bicycle, Tuesday, for Boston, where he will remain for an indefinite period with his sister, Mrs. A. A. Tilney. John W. Murray, Jr., received a telegram from him last evening stating that he had arrived in New Haven safe and sound and had covered the mountainous district of seventy-two miles without accident or mishap. In New Haven he was to spend the night, and proceed on his journey today.

Slept in the New Bank Vault.

Two ordinary intoxicated men went to roost in the vault of the City National Bank, at Front street and Park avenue, night before last, and about midnight their loud snoring aroused some of the chowder eaters at Delmonico's, across the way. Patrons, hired help and all went over and found the two men snugly tucked under some lime sacks and reposing peacefully on the floor of the vault. No complaint was made.

Wandering Equines.

Marshal Lines found one of P. M. French's horses wandering about the streets of the borough Tuesday morning. He returned the animal to the owner. Early this morning Marshal Hansen captured a stray horse belonging to Chris Lubach, of Grove street. This horse was also returned.

THE CRACKAJACKS HERE

FAMOUS RECORD BREAKERS NOW TRAINING AT THE OVAL.

The Track is in Good Condition, But the Big Guns Say That the Sharp Turn Will Preclude Any Record Breaking.

In Cooper, Ziegler, Gardiner and Bald, the Crescent Wheelmen will have a speedy quartette for their National Circuit meet Saturday afternoon. Not but what there will be other fast riders, but those four men are among the few professional riders in this country who have some claim to the title of champion. Eddie Bald has decided to ride here and has telegraphed his intention of doing so.

Altogether the prospects for Saturday's race meet are most promising. The fastest of the professionals and the amateurs are coming, and a host of wheelmen are coming to see them ride.

The members of the Morgan & Wright racing team made their first appearance on the track yesterday afternoon. They found it a trifle muddy, but were greatly pleased with its condition, for the track is now as smooth as could be wished and the ruts, that heretofore impeded fast riding, have been done away with. The crack-a-jacks have only one fault to find with the Oval and that is the short turn. The sharp curves there causes the riders to slip quite a little and that will prevent any phenomenal time being made. The track record is likely to go, however, even if none of the world's records are lowered.

There will be some familiar faces in the professional ranks. A. H. Barnett, once of the Crescent Wheelmen, is entered as a member of the Orient team. Howard B. Mosher, of Storm King, N. Y., is all ready in town and expects to ride on Saturday when he may be heard from, especially in the two mile handicap. Our old friend, Jay Easton, will not be here. He is now at Chicago training for a match race.

And by the way, you all remember Joe Donoghue, who made his debut in the amateur ranks at the Crescent Oval on Decoration Day. He appeared at his home in Newburgh last Labor Day and rode a mile in 2:17 and won great praise. A temporary grand stand had been erected to take care of the big crowd, and the people became so excited over their favorite's performances that they wrecked part of the grand stand.

Plainfielders are too staid for anything like that but they will probably see some very fast time made, especi*ally in the mile open for the "profs."* Here the kings of the track will meet on an equal footing and the man that wins has got to show some tremendous pedaling powers. A few words in regard to some of the cracks would not come amiss.

One of the kings of the track this year is Tommie Cooper, the Detroit wonder, who sprang from obscurity early last season, and who made things very interesting the balance of the season for Eddie Bald, then the biggest man in the game. Cooper joined the circuit last year about the latter part of July, but so well did he employ his time that by the close of the season he stood second in point of winnings and of meritorious work. This season his work was of such a high order that it was not until the season was half gone that he knew what defeat meant. At Louisville, during the recent national

EPWORTH LEAGUE RALLY

YOUNG CHRISTIANS HOLD A PROFITABLE CONFERENCE.

Rev. W. B. Judd, of Cranford, Defines the Duty of the Christian in Reference to Participating in Governmental Affairs.

Members of the Epworth Leagues of this city, Dunellen and Westfield, held a rally at the Dunellen M. E. church last Thursday and, although the storm of the afternoon kept many away, those that did come made up in enthusiasm for their lack of numbers. Rev. S. F. Custard, pastor of the Dunellen M. E. church and president of its Epworth League, acted as leader and opened the service with a hymn, prayer by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, of the Monroe Avenue chapel, followed and then Rev. Mr. Custard welcomed the visitors in a few words. After another hymn, Rev. W. B. Judd, D. D., of Cranford, was introduced as the principal speaker of the evening. His subject was "The Young Christian, the Young Methodist, and the Young American." His address was short and was listened to with great interest by all. He said that there was no life without a belief of some kind and that Christ was the indwelling power in all his disciples. He referred to the mystical connections between Christ and the human soul and compared it in a measure to the general influence of a teacher over a pupil in which the ideas and thoughts of the former are gradually instilled into the latter. Methodism was, he said, very much in line with the primitive Christianity. There was the free gospel for one and for all; it was possible to know when one is saved from sin, and the laymen of the church have their share of the work to do. The pastor, he said, does his work, but the Epworth Leagues and Christian Endeavor Societies are expected to do theirs also.

Christianity and the government were practically united in this country, he said. The men that formed this country were, with few exceptions, strong Christian men, while Christianity and its teachings are constantly being recognized by judicial and legislative powers of the nation. Such being the case, it is the duty of every Christian not to turn away from governmental duties but to take hold and do his share. All must seek, not individual good, but the good of the country. He then referred to the dark clouds on the political horizon, and he said if the spirit of applied Christianity be used the troubles would pass away.

George W. Stevens, of Plainfield, then sang "The Progress of our Country," after which the representatives of the different societies spoke. Robt. Davis, from Chapter 1, at the First M. E. church, Plainfield, told something of the work being done in his society. Walter L. McGee, of the Epworth League at Monroe Avenue chapel, spoke of the necessity of being always ready and prepared. Miss Etta Raybert, of Plainfield, recited the humorous selection "The Simple Story of George Washington." Mr. Stevens then sang "An Old Man's Story," after which W. H. Burr, of the Westfield Epworth League, told of the work of the officers, and Charles Hummer, from the Grace M. E. church, Plainfield, spoke of the relation of young people's societies to the church. Then everyone adjourned to the lecture room where refreshments were served by the enterprising social committee, Miss Milicent Vail, chairman; Miss Ella Fisher, Mrs. Arthur Vail and Rev. S. F. Custard.

FUNDS FOR THE CONVENTION.

Warren Chapel Endeavorers Adds $30 to the Receipts for the Convention.

An entertainment and sociable for the benefit of the Christian Endeavor convention, which is to be held in this city early in October, was held in Warren Mission chapel last evening, and the amount realized for the good cause was about $30.

The weather was far from being favorable, but the cozy chapel was nevertheless well filled during the evening. The programme opened with a piano solo by Mr. Squier, followed by a solo, "Dear Little Wooden Shoes," Miss Raynolds, and reading by Miss Morse. Then came a piano duet by Miss Shepherd and Miss Lillie Zeiss, and a dialogue in one scene entitled "Fortune's Wheel." There was also a Japanese drill and tableaux by eight young ladies, and another one, "The Old Oaken Bucket." There was also vocal and instrumental music by several members of the society, and each one acquitted themselves in a very creditable manner.

The committee of arrangements consisted of Miss M. Zeiss, the Misses Anna and Sadie Searing, Miss Mamie Koller, Henry Seader and John Hermann.

THE BATTERING BOYS.

Y. M. C. A. FOOTBALL TEAM READY FOR GAMES ON THE GRIDIRON.

A Strong Array of Athletes Will Defend the Punts and Kicks of Teams Whom They Will Line Up Against.

Now that the cool, autumn weather approaches and the first shades of red and yellow will soon begin to tint the heretofore verdant landscape, the enthusiast remembers that the football season is at hand. Last year, for the first time in several years, Plainfield had really a first-class eleven on the field, but it was only for a few games. The club was called the Y. M. C. A. team, but it received no support from outside of its own members. This year all will be changed. The eleven will still represent the Plainfield Y. M. C. A., but it will be actively assisted by that organization. The team will be supplied with uniform jerseys, stockings and shoes, while the Y. M. C. A. baseball grounds will be altered to suit this game. After the first few weeks of gymnasium practice the grounds will be illuminated for night practice. Games will be scheduled for the entire season, and Plainfield will have a team that will be able to hold its own with those from surrounding towns.

The supporters of the game in Plainfield will be glad to learn that Louis E. Waring will look after the team and coach the different candidates. Mr. Waring's complete knowledge of the game makes him very valuable for the position, and the result of his efforts last year showed how capable he is. Part of the season he will fill his old position at quarter, where he was very fast with the team. "Teddy" Freeman will again captain the team. He is too well known to the lovers of football in Plainfield to need any introduction. He will remain, as of old, as right half-back, and plenty of practice promises to make him a terror to opposing teams.

Thomas U. Smith is looked upon as the likely man to fill the position of left half, where he played last year. There are several candidates for the position of full-back. Geo. F. Schoonmaker seems to have the making in him of a good bucking back to send into the line, while A. P. Simmonds is a good, all-round man, with lots of experience.

When Waring is not present, another man will be necessary as quarter, and Harry L. McGee, now out of college, seems just the one should he decide to remain in Plainfield.

Clarence Peck is almost sure of one end of the line, but there seems to be no special choice for the other. Volney F. Green, who will be unable to play this year on account of illness, is expected to fill that position. For tackles, Henry Lovell and Thomas A. Cuming have been suggested, although Lovell may go behind the line. Edward Brown will be the usual tower of strength as first guard, but Raymond A. McGee, who goes to Yale this fall, will be missed at the other. At present there is no candidate having the necessary weight and quickness for the position. Harry Rand will play in his old position at center unless some wonder shows up before the games begin.

Edgar I. Serrell is a candidate for halfback, but might try tackle as on previous occasions. William L. McClure and Van Resseller Schuyler are trying for positions on the line. And then, of course, there are other candidates.

It is hoped that Walter Stewart will appear on the gridiron before the season closes, and he then would play his old position at end or go behind the line.

Of course, it is impossible to pick the men so early in the season, but the team, however formed, promises to be a rattling one. It is to be hoped that Plainfield will support her team as well as she did at the few opportunities afforded last year. The nearness of the new grounds to the centre of the city and their easy means of access will afford all a chance to witness the games.

The candidates for the team will meet tonight at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium for practice. All are requested to wear rubber-soled shoes. All who wish to try for a place on the team are requested to be present, as it is necessary to know what material there is to work with.

Fell in a Faint at the Depot.

A young woman named Rogers of Westfield, who had been in this city on a visit, was at the depot, late on Saturday afternoon waiting for a train to convey her home. She stepped from the waiting room to a point in front of the weighing scales, when she was suddenly taken with a fainting spell, and fell face downward to the stone pavement, cutting her face and head quite badly. Her bruising her lower limbs. Ever ready Edward Martin rushed forward, and carried the prostrate form into the waiting room and assisted in dressing the wounds. He also accompanied the unfortunate woman on the train to Westfield.

THE CRESCENTS PROSPER

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WHEELMEN SHOW A SOUND FOOTING.

Credit Has Been Restored and Now New Members Are Flocking to the Club—The New Officers Selected Last Night.

It was with much satisfaction that the members of the Crescent Wheelmen listened Wednesday to the great advance that had been made in the interests of the club during the last year and to the bright prospects for the future. When the Board of Directors, who has now finished their term of office, first took charge of the club's affairs, the club was in a very precarious state—its credit was badly damaged, the treasury was in a bad condition while many of the members were leaving the club. Now all is changed, the debt has been reduced by over one-half, the credit has been restored and members are again flocking into the club.

The main object of the meeting last evening was to elect officers for the ensuing year. The following Board of Directors was then selected: Clarence E. Teel, H. E. Rider, W. J. Stephenson, Frank Jones, S. P. T. Wilbur, L. N. Titsworth, Thomas Hanna, Jos. Haynes, James Buckle, Edward White and Charles C. Lister.

Charles C. Lister was unanimously elected captain. He will appoint his own lieutenants.

The treasurer's report showed that all the old debts of the club had been paid except the notes for the building of the Oval, which had been materially reduced. The indebtedness of the club had been reduced during the year from $5,900 to $2,000, and the prospects of clearing that away during the coming year were bright.

The secretary's report told that there were seventy-five members in good standing. The rest of the meeting was spent in discussing plans for the future and listening to the details of the coming National Circuit meet on Sept. 26th.

A meeting of the Board was held after the club meeting and the officers elected and committees appointed. They were as follows: President, Clarence E. Teel; vice-president, H. E. Rider; secretary-treasurer, William J. Stephenson. The committees were, House, Frank Jones, chairman; Alonzo Titsworth, Albert Demarest, C. C. Pierson, Jr., Harry H. Coward and Thomas Hanna.

Entertainment, Edward White, chairman; N. R. Titsworth, Harry L. Van-Emburgh, George O. Stevens and Charles W. Runyon.

Auditing, S. P. T. Wilbur, chairman; H. H. Coward and Wheaton S. Lowry.

Race, Charles C. Lister, chairman; S. P. T. Wilbur and N. R. Titsworth.

TO LIVE WHERE WEDDED

SAFFRAN-OLDMAN NUPTIALS SOLEMNIZED AT THE GROOM'S HOME.

The Ceremony Performed in a Veritable Bower of Flowers by Rev. Geo. Hauser—Honeymoon to be Spent in Easton, Pa.

A pretty September wedding was celebrated last Thursday when Miss Minnie Oldman, of East Sixth street, was united in marriage to Andrew L. Saffron, of East Second street. The house recently furnished by the groom presented a bright and cheery appearance. In one corner there was a massive bank of flowers consisting of golden rod, potted plants and bridal vine. In the centre was an elegant wedding cake. In front of this elegant floral display the marriage was performed by Rev. George Hauser, pastor of the German Reformed church. The bride was attractively gowned in brown cashmere, trimmed with white satin and pearl trimmings. She carried a bridal bouquet. The bridesmaid was Miss McKay, of Paterson, who wore a gown of dark cloth, and carried pink roses. The best man was Elmer Mills, of Summit avenue. A reception and supper followed the marriage, during which Mr. and Mrs. Saffron received the congratulations of all. Later in the evening the bride and groom left for Easton, Pa., where they will spend their honeymoon. A number of costly and handsome presents were received.

Among those who witnessed the ceremony were: Mr. and Mrs. Hess, Miss Lillian Hess, John Hess, Miss Staats, Miss Saffron, George Saffron, Miss Hill, Miss Kennell, Miss Johnson, Mrs. William Sharp, Miss Snyder, Mrs. Jackson, Miss McClaip, Miss Brennan, Henry Bergen, of Plainfield; Miss Anna Oldman, Frank Oldman, Charles Oldman and Mr. Johnson, of Perth Amboy. Eugene O'Reilly furnished the music for dancing which was enjoyed until a late hour.

High Standard Being Built Up.

Superintendent Warne, of the North Plainfield Public School, is rapidly bringing that institution up to the first rank. Saturday he received notification that the University of New York had decided to accept the diplomas of the school in lieu of preliminary examinations for entrance to the law and medical colleges in New York State.

WEDDED AS NIGHT CAME

MISS LILLIAN T. SLAPE MARRIED TO WM. STARR BULLOCK.

The Ceremony Performed at the Home of the Bride's Mother at 5 o'Clock Last Wednesday—To Reside in This City.

The home of Mrs. Slape, 1738 West Front street, was the scene last evening of a beautiful wedding, when her daughter, Miss Lillian Thompson Slape, became the wife of William Starr Bullock, of New York. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Frank Fletcher, of New Market, at 5 o'clock.

The parlors were prettily decorated with potted plants, chrysanthemums and golden rod, presenting a picture of taste and beauty. The bride and groom entered the room together while Mendelssohn's wedding march was being rendered by Miss Jennie Thompson, of New Haven, niece of the bride. The bride was given away by her brother, William Slape.

Congratulations were showered upon the bride and groom after the ceremony, while several classical selections were executed on the piano by Miss Thompson. A sumptious wedding supper was served in a pleasing manner.

The bride's gown was a white organdie beautifully trimmed with valenciennes lace and embroidery, with a profusion of white satin ribbon in bows and streamers.

The gifts, consisting of gold and silverware, cut-glass china, etc., were numerous and beautiful.

During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Bullock left for a three weeks wedding trip and on their return will reside on East Sixth street, this city.

The bride was formerly stenographer for ex-City Judge W. A. Coddington and lately for the firm of Reed & Coddington. The groom is a well-known newspaper man and was for some time a traveling salesman. He now holds the position of city editor of The Dry Goods Chronicle, of New York.

About fifty guests were present at the wedding from New York, New Haven, South Jersey and Plainfield.

MARRIED AT OAK TREE.

Plainfield's Suburb Witnessed a Pretty Nuptial Event.

The marriage of Miss Eveline VanCourt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. VanCourt, of Oak Tree, and William H. Randolph, also of the same place, was celebrated in the pretty chapel at Marcennier Wednesday afternoon at 5:30. Rev. Mr. Jones, of Oak Tree, assisted by Rev. William Judd, of Cranford, performed the ceremony in the presence of a large assemblage of friends and relatives.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Margaret Bennett, of this city, and Nellie Dickson, of Willow Grove, and the maid of honor was Miss Lenora VanCourt, sister of the bride. William VanCourt, brother of the bride, was best man.

The decorations at the chapel, consisting of palms and flowers, were arranged by the Christian Endeavor Society. A reception followed the ceremony at the bride's home, which was beautifully decorated with chrysanthemums chiefly. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Randolph were taken in a special car to South Plainfield. They left by the "Black Diamond" express for a wedding trip through New York State. They will reside at Woodbridge on their return. A large collection of costly presents were received. Herbert and Halstead Freeman were the ushers.

HIGHWAYMEN AT WORK.

ALFRED BAKER HAS A THRILLING EXPERIENCE ON PARK AVENUE.

He Was Coming Home From New Brunswick Last Evening Was Knocked From His Wheel—Pocketbook Missing.

The cozy new clubhouse of the Crescent Wheelmen is the gathering place every evening for many of the members, and Wednesday night more than the usual number were lounging around the rooms.

It was nearly 11 o'clock when the door opened and in walked Alfred Baker, of West Fifth street. It was not the usual jovial Al, however, for he looked dazed and there was an ugly bruise on the side of his head.

"I've been sandbagged" was his explanation. And then to his comrades he told his startling experience.

Yesterday afternoon, in company with Frank Clarkson and Judson R. Giles, he rode to New Brunswick and distributed a number of posters of the Crescent Wheelmen's national circuit racemeet. Baker went to see some friends there while the other two young men returned home. He remained to dinner and came home late in the evening.

His ride from New Brunswick to Avon Park was without incident. As he passed Campbell's clubhouse, he looked at his watch and noticed that it was a few minutes past ten.

The brilliant harvest moon had partially dispelled the darkness and it was easy to see some distance ahead. Baker noticed two men walking in the road just beyond the road leading to Hillside cemetery. He yelled at them and they separated.

He doesn't remember what happened after that until he recovered his senses and found himself lying in the road. His wheel was close by, minus the lantern, and he finally managed to crawl on the saddle and ride into town. He had evidently had a severe blow, and not by collision with the ground, for the skin was broken and there was no dirt on the wound.

His pocketbook was missing, but he still had his watch. He does not remember the exact amount in his pocketbook.

THAT STIFLING SMOKE.

A Few Picture of the Ills of Burning Leaves in Bonfires.

Numerous complaints have been already received by the Town Improvement Association from people who have been troubled by their neighbors building bonfires in proximity to their property. The annoyance has chiefly been caused by the smoke and disagreeable odors which arise from the burning rubbish. The wind that blows the smoke from A's house (and A usually waits until such a wind arrives) fills B's house with the disagreeable odor, obliging him to keep his windows closed a part of the day and sometimes the whole night. In the late autumn, when the leaves are so generally burned in all sections, the smoke hangs over the town like a great pall, and obliges sufferers from asthma and kindred affections to leave their homes until the burning mania ceases. When we remember that many people with bronchial troubles are sent from New York and Brooklyn to Plainfield by their physicians, for purer air, we must now wonder

When their homes are filled with bad odors And the smoke always blows the other way. That they pack their trunks in a hurry And mournfully go away.

HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETES

ARRANGEMENTS MADE FOR A YEAR OF LIVELY AND HEALTHY SPORTS.

New Officers Chosen, a Field Day and Plans for the Various Games Discussed and Settled on in a Business Like Manner.

Plainfield's athletes have had the chance in general athletics for the past few years except in the High School. There the Plainfield High School Athletic Association has looked after their interests and given the field days every year since it was organized. Last year, the formation of the New Jersey Inter-scholastic Athletic Association increased the interest to a considerable degree and this year promises to be the most active in the history of the association. While the High School lost many of its best athletes last June, yet the present material is very promising and the High School will probably be well represented in the state meet next spring.

The association began its fall work yesterday afternoon when the annual meeting was held, the officers elected and the autumn games, open only to the High School boys, arranged. The officers were elected as follows: President, George Proctor Smith; first vice president and manager of general athletics, Walter T. Serrell; second vice president and manager of the baseball team, Arthur Ledgerwood; third vice president and manager of the football team, Roy T. Phillips; fourth vice president and manager of the hockey team, Carroll Runyon; secretary, Charles Noble; treasurer, Sydney R. Titsworth.

The officers of the bicycling division were then elected as follows: Captain, Lindley M. Hillman; first lieutenant, E. S. Peck; second lieutenant, V. V. Nash, Jr.; color bearer, Walter Long. The field day was next discussed and it was decided to hold it on the afternoon of Saturday, October 10, at the Crescent Oval, if possible. After considerable deliberation the list of events was decided upon.

The events which are all to be handicap are 100-yard dash, 220-yard dash, 440 yard dash, one-third mile bicycle race, one mile bicycle race, running high jump, putting the twelve-pound shot, pole vault and three legged race, 100 yards.

President Smith then appointed the committee of arrangements to consist of the following: Walter T. Serrell, chairman; Lindley Hillman, Sydney R. Titsworth, William A. Fisher, V. William Nash, Jr., and Henry W. Brower. The committee was given complete power to arrange for the field day except to make the handicap. The following handicappers were then elected: Edgar I. Serrell, Charles B. Morse and Thomas A. Cuming, all graduates of the High School. There will be the regular prize at the games for the all-round championship of the High School and three prizes for each event. The games will be open only to pupils of the High School.

The question of records was brought up at the meeting and it was decided to have a record committee of three: Charles Noble, Sydney R. Titsworth, and Walter T. Serrell, to examine a pass on the authenticity of all records and adopt a list of standard performances.

The difficulty, last year, of arranging dual field days on account of a disagreement regarding the event showed the necessity of an advisory body of graduates to look after such matters. It was decided to elect an advisory board of five members, all graduates of the High School, and the following were selected: Charles E. Angleman, '92, Charles B. Morse, '96, John W. Kirkner, '94, Thomas A. Cuming, '93, and J. Hazelwood Craig, '96. Another meeting of the association will be held shortly.

TEMPLAR FIELD DAY.

Line of March Planned for the Parade of the Knights.

In connection with the Knight Templar annual field day, which will be held this city, Thursday, Oct. 1st, the following will be of interest for those who desire to decorate, and surely there will be many: The colors will be black and white. The emblems consist of a Passion and Maltese cross and a cross and crown.

The following line of march has been selected: The line will form at 2 p. m. sharp on Park avenue, right resting on Seventh street, and the centre will be at the Revere House.

The dress parade will start promptly at 2:15 and will proceed as follows: Park avenue to Seventh street, to Liberty street, to Eighth street, to Crescent avenue, to LaGrande avenue, to Franklin place, to Watchung avenue, to Seventh street, to Park avenue, to Somerset street, to Craig place, to Grove street, to Mercer avenue, to Sycamore avenue, to Miller street, to Washington avenue, to Prospect place, to Grove street, to Front street, where the Grand Commander and other Grand officers, together with distinguished guests, will review the parade.

Plans are now being arranged to erect a hancsome arch across Park avenue near Front street, and other plans are rapidly assuming definite shape.

E ORDER OF "MULES."

Peculiar Anti-Crime Organization of Kentucky and West Virginia.

It Has Become a Terror to Murderers and Cattle Thieves and Evil-Doers of Every Description—Its Origin and Conduct.

Unquestionably the most unique order in the United States is the "Mules," a secret organization of farmers in this county and the several adjoining counties of this state and West Virginia. Organized just after the close of the war, and on somewhat the same plan as the regulators of the far west, or perhaps more after the fashion of the rangers of the Texas plains, the order has constantly grown in favor until now the membership is estimated to reach well on toward 3,000.

Following the close of the war there was for a number of years in the immediate neighborhood an alarming run of lawlessness. The principal occupation of a great majority of this hard county communities appeared to be horse stealing and general thievery. Something had to be done to stop it, as the authorities were wholly unable to cope with the offenders. In this extremity the resourceful mind of one of the best known physicians in the county evolved the idea of an organization for the mutual protection of the farmers. The result was soon felt in the presence of the Mutual Protective society, of which only the quiet, commonsible farmers and citizens, regardless of occupation, were eligible to membership.

The first proclamation of the new order was a candid statement of its purposes and principles. These were shortly worded for the benefit of all transgressors of the laws of the county and state. A promise of the early breaking up of the several bands of horse thieves then operating in this and the Big Sandy country was also made. This latter provision was the source of considerable surmise on the part of the gangs named, who resorted to the white cap manner of placarding their avowed intentions. When the first raid was made on the farmers' stock it was of a more general character than had ever before been attempted, presumably to show the small esteem in which the officers, and the lodge as well, were held.

The members of the order turned out en masse and speedily ran down several of the gang and so closely chased the leaders that they were compelled to flee to the mountains. Convictions soon followed, and the order became recognized as an important factor in the county government. Similar experiences followed, and the membership of the order increased at a rapid rate. Now lodges are up in the adjoining counties, and each community had a branch, with an organization and a code of signals sufficient to enable the running of the entire membership to the field in short order on notice. Whenever a case of horse stealing was reported the order would turn out 400 or 500 strong and scour the whole region until the animals were recovered or the thief captured.

Other and similar offenses were given attention equally substantial. Under these conditions the gangs soon became scattered, their work most hazardous and the morals in general of the county as good as could be asked. Through out the past 25 years the unceasing watchfulness and energy of the order have maintained the same effect in the mountainous country. Only recently the "Mules" turned out nearly 800 strong and in Lawrence county to investigate the supposed murder of an Arab peddler from Cincinnati. They soon resolved the case into one of pure spite-work, in which the victim was an innocent party. Everyone up to the offering to cast a suspicion upon one of the natives as would cause him to leave the county. A warning was left publicly posted for the benefit of the conspirators. Down in Greenup they are still working on the mystery of the murder of one of one of their members whose body was found nearly two years ago in a creek with a rope around his neck and unmistakable evidence of violence. They will never leave the trail until somebody responsible is developed. Here in this county but a few months ago the order sent a representative almost to the Atlantic coast to bring back a man wanted for breaking the law. The man was produced for trial at the time originally appointed. Over in Wayne county, W. Va., two convictions were made at a recent term of court as a result of the order's work.

While the work of the order has been most acceptable, and most of the members are known in their intentions at their joining, it has also been made the tool of politics to some extent. Numerous men have become members simply to wield a little political influence over the order, to their personal benefit, or in the interest of their friends. Still, it is steadily growing, and surprisingly so in the towns along the river, where their hold formerly was very insignificant. The peculiar designation, "Mules," comes through the adoption some years ago of the outline of an attenuated mule as the emblem of the order.

Once a year the "Mules" hold a meeting of their grand lodge, and this will be held this year at Greenup, early in the coming month. Last year the meeting was held at Lockwoods, in Lawrence county, and it was estimated that 10,000 people were present during the two days' session. The order is yearly adopting more refined rules, and it will probably eventually emerge into a full-fledged secret society of the old-fash*ioned order.* Though they still turn out en masse and ride over the country in the fashion generally accredited the moonshiners of the south, they are unalterably opposed to violence in any fashion and strictly adhere to the enforcement of the law along the ordinary lines.—Ashland (Ky.) Cor. Louisville Courier-Journal.

DINNER-GIVING ETIQUETTE.

Points to Be Observed by Both Hostess and Guest.

The dinner is the most important of social ceremonies. It is a function, an observance, a solemnity, the most flattering form of entertainment that can be offered to a guest; and as such it should be duly respected and appreciated. The art of giving dinners that are at once dignified, delightful and distinguished, is a rare one, yet it is possible to achieve it with a more expenditure of time and pains so well laid out that it is a marvel that such dinners are the exception and not the rule among us. As a rule, the dinner is regarded as an affair of perfunctory, and people who do not give dinners themselves are but seldom asked to dine, except in the case of stray girls or bachelors, asked chiefly to stop a gap. Dinner-giving is about the most formal form of hospitality when it is largely indulged in, and people who cannot give dinners as they should be given had much better not attempt them at all, but confine themselves to less formal entertainments of which afternoon teas, lunches and ordinary "At Homes." The dinner is the one social function in which the host plays as important a part as the hostess. His name appears with hers on the invitations, and he dispenses hospitality in the same active measure as herself. But though modern custom has robbed his post of much of its ancient glory in the way of carving heavy dishes and passing wine, he is still the holder of the foot of the table with all the dignity which that position entails.

The length of a dinner invitation varies with the size and importance of the dinner. For a large and ceremonious one two weeks' notice is required, and the notice is sometimes extended to double that time. For small and informal dinners, from five to ten days' notice is sufficient. Printed cards may be used, on which blanks are left for the names of the guests, hostess and guests; data, address and hour. These cards are, as a rule, only used when the dinner is one of ceremony. Invitations to small dinners are generally written, and may be worded to suit the taste in the formality of the entertainment. They are written in the third person, if it is a friendly and impromptu matter. In any case, whether the invitation be friendly or formal, it should be answered within 24 hours after it has been received. Dinner-giving is unlike any other species of entertainment in that it is all-important to have a certain number of guests to count upon and to select them with discretion. It is necessary to allow a hostess ample time to invite other guests to fill the places of any who may disappoint her. An invitation to dinner, it has been said, is based in the lines of host and hostess, though, of course, the hostess writes the note, if a note conveys it. The answer must be addressed to her, though the host's name is mentioned in accepting or regretting. The invitation may be sent and answered either by post or by the hand of a servant.

Some people are perpetually invited out to dine, not because they give many dinners in return, but because they are recognized as good dinner guests. They are generally provided with plenty of light small talk and the gossip of the day; are pleasant, popular and gifted with appetites which be one of the curses, as it is one of the most valuable, of possession. There are others who must be asked as a duty, on account of the dinners they themselves give, and who vex the righteous soul of a hostess so often as she has to include their names among the list of her guests. She knows very well that their mere presence will call for a mighty effort to keep the whole dinner from being "a frost," and that they will probably outweigh all her efforts.—Philadelphia Telegram.

MAKES THE MEN VERY WEAK.

A Sample of Domestic Woe That Louisville Husbands Are Subject to Endure.

A good many hundreds, and even thousands, of long-suffering husbands can bear sorrowful testimony to the fact that this is the sort of catechism the wives of their bosoms subject them to every time they put on their hats to go out in the evening:

"Where are you going?"

"Oh, I'm just going out for a few minutes."

"Where?"

"Oh, nowhere in particular."

"What for?"

"Oh, nothing."

"Why do you go, then?"

"Well, I want to go; that's why."

"Do you have to go?"

"I don't know that I do."

"Why do you go, then?"

"Because."

"Because what?"

"Well, simply because."

"Going to be gone long?"

"No."

"How long?"

"I don't know."

"Anybody going with you?"

"No."

"Well, it's strange that you can't be content to stay at home for a few minutes. Don't you be gone long, will you?"

"No."

"See that you don't."

This is one reason why so many marriages are a dead, flat fizzle and failure.—Chicago Chronicle.

Pineapple Preserve.

Fill with cold water a kettle containing six large, ripe pineapples, and boil them till tender. Drain off the water, and when the fruit is cool pare it, remove the leaves, and cut into slices half an inch thick. Take out the core, leaving a round hole in the center of each slice; weigh the fruit, and to each pound allow a pound of loaf sugar. Cover the bottom of a dish with the sugar, on this place a layer of the pineapple, and so on until the dish is full, finishing with the sugar. Set the dish aside in a cool place for 24 hours; then drain the slices from the syrup, put the syrup in a kettle and boil till the skum ceases to rise, skimming carefully; put in the pineapple and boil for 20 minutes longer.—Good Housekeeping.

ASTONISHED SPARROW.

The Rhinoceros' Sneeze Was Too Much for the Bird.

He Sat Contentedly on the Beast's Nose Until the Explosion Came, and Then Fled Into a Dark Corner and Meditated.

It is not easy to astonish a sparrow, says the English Illustrated Magazine. You can scare it—often scared as oft return, a pert, voracious kind"—and you can kill it easily, but there is only because the sparrow has the bump of self-preservation very prominently developed, and takes a hint as to personal danger with extraordinary promptitude. But though it may remove its small body out of harm's way for the time being, it is not disconcerted. You can see that by the way in which he immediately goes on with his toilet. Its nerves have not been shaken—that is evident from its obvious enjoyment of and the way it scratches its head and makes a nose of the fly which went by. It would not commence at once a frivolous alienation with another of its kind if it had been disconcerted.

And really, it is not to be wondered at that the sparrow should be beyond the reach of astonishment. Think of what it sees, and sees quite unconcernedly, in the streets of London. Put a dead cat in the street, with a rear at the bank, and the poor beasts would go crazy with terror. A single omnibus would stampede a troop of lions. Yet a sparrow surveys the approaching fire engine undismayed, and it sits with perfect self-possession when the unwieldy van comes thundering death down Ludgate hill. The small bird's life is, in fact, so made up of surprises that it regards the astounding as commonplace. A fly, sitting down in a train, thinks nothing of finding itself in the next county when it gets up. Its whole existence is volcanic and seismic. It cannot settle on a hand without the hand moving. What would a dog think of, on coming into a ten-acre field, the field suddenly turned over? But the fly is not put out of countenance by such "phenomena." It comes back to *the hand. It is the same with the spar*row. It thinks no more of another wonder than the seven companions did of another dragon in the day's work.

All the same, I have seen a sparrow totally confounded and all to pieces. It was, I confess, only a young one, with just the promise of a tail, nothing more, and some odds and ends of fluff still clinging between the red feathers. I was looking at the rhinoceros, which was lying down close to the railings, and a very sleepy rhinoceros it was. Except for slight twitches of the tail and an occasional fidget of the ears, it was quite motionless. And the young sparrow hopping about in the inclosure, coming to the beast, hopped onto it, looking in the chinks of its skin for chance grains or insects. And it hopped along its back onto its head (the rhinoceros winked), and along its head to the little horn, and from the little horn onto the big one (and it blinked), and then off the horn onto its nose.

And then the rhinoceros snorted. The sparrow was a sight to see. Exploded is no word for it. And it sat still in the air, over one of the houses and chirped the mournfullest chirps. "I hadn't the smallest notion the thing was alive," it said. "Oh, dear! oh, dear!" and it wouldn't be pacified for a long time. The compliment had been severe and had got "into the system." I remembered the story of the boy who sat on a whale's blowhole. Behemoth had got stranded on the Shetland coast. While the population were admiring it an urchin climbed on to the head of the distressed monster, and exultantly *seated his graceless person on its fore*head. He had but a short time to enjoy his triumph, and the next instant the whale, filling itself with air, blew and a blast through its blowhole that the boy was blown up into the air and out to sea. So said the veracious chronicler of the day—and I hope it was true, for little boys should not, under any circumstances, be allowed to ride on the backs of whales. Nor young sparrows on the nostrils of a rhinoceros.

Returned After Eight Years.

A traveler pigeon of Antwerp breed, belonging to a farmer at Kerstop-den-Berg, failed to return home from a prize flight to Orleans in 1888. This pigeon, after three years, blew ashore at the time, and is now 11, has just come back to its old pigeon-cote after an absence of eight years. It is evident the intelligent creature must have been captured on its return in 1888, and was unable to effect its escape until quite recently.

Cruel and Unusual Punishment.

The singular punishment of bigamy in Hungary is to compel the man to live together with both wives in one house. Something of the terrors of the situation is indicated by the fact that a number of Hungarian bigamists have petitioned the government to have their sentences changed to 14 years' penal servitude.

ACCOMPLISHED DOG.

Exhibited Intelligence Unusual in the Brute Kingdom.

A Newfoundland named Oscar, belonging to myself, had often listened with much interest to stories of rescue of drowning persons by dogs, says Andrew Lang in Longman's Magazine. I happen to possess an engraving of Landseer's "Member of the Humane Society." Oscar would contemplate it for hours, and study the pose in the mirror. One day two little children were playing some on St. Andrew's pier, and I was sketching the rocks at a short distance, Oscar running about on the pier. I happened to look up and saw Oscar, as if inadvertently, but quite deliberately, back one of the children (Johnny Chisholm by name) into the water, which is there very deep. The animal then gave three loud bowls to attract attention. He had been taught to give "three cheers for Mr. Gladstone," jumped into the water, rescued the child, and carried him, "quite safe, but very wet," to the local photographer's, obviously that the deed might be commemorated by art. Nobody saw the beginning of this tragedy except myself.

Oscar, when brought home, deliberately rapped out "Humane Society" with his tail on the floor, but, much as I appreciated his intelligence, I could not bring myself to publish, give him a testimonial. This present year he might be accompanied a party to the top of St. Rule's tower, and deliberately leaped from the top, being dashed to pieces at the foot. But as eminent divine whose works he had often, unluckily, entreated me to review in an unfavorable sense. His plan was to bring the book, lay it at my feet, and return with the carving knife in his mouth.

A NATURAL BEAR TRAP.

One Place in the Yellowstone Park Where Nature Suffocates Wild Animals.

F. H. Knowlton tells in Recreation about a natural bear trap in the northeastern portion of the Yellowstone National park, on a small stream called Cache creek, about ten miles above its junction with the Lamar river. Knowlton and a friend were going up through a gulch Cache creek had made, when near the head of it, about the extent, they saw a huge grizzly bear curled up as if asleep. Considering it to be impolite to awaken it, and nothing to offer but prospectors' picks, they climbed out of the gulch at once, quietly and expeditiously.

Out of reach of the bear, they stopped and fired rocks and anathemas at it, but as the bear continued in the same position they finally made up their minds was off the bear's head and had been dead about five hours. There was no wound on its body, but a little blood had dripped from the nostrils. They then became conscious of a sense of suffocation, and strong ammonia fumes arising from mineral springs thereabouts. The bear had wandered in them, tempted, perhaps, by the skeletons of four other bears, an elk, squirrels, numerous butterflies and other insects, and had been asphyxiated by the noxious gases.

The head at the gulch made a sort of a basin in which the gas settled. This gas is not very deep, a man's head being about on the level of it. The natural scoop's rim allows the gas to flow down the stream with the creek, in a sort of a gas river on the water creek.

THE YARD MEASURE.

Standards Have Varied in the Different Countries of the World.

The yard is the British and American standard of length. Down to 1824 the original standard of Britain (and from which ours was copied) was a rod, which had been deposited in the court of exchequer, London, in the time of Queen Elizabeth. In those days, says the St. Louis Republic, all measures intended for general use were taken to the court of exchequer to be compared with the standard rod. That official took the proposed measure and placed it parallel with the standard, and if found correct placed certain marks of identification upon it. By an act of parliament in 1824 the rod was declared a standard was superseded by another, which had been constructed under the directions of the Royal society 64 years previous. This act provided that "the straight line or distance between two certain fine points in the gold studs in the brass rod now in the custody of the clerk of the house of commons shall be the genuine standard of the yard measure in Great Britain." The act further provided that the necessary ments of the rod must be made when the temperature of the brass rod was at 62 degrees Fahrenheit.

That standard was destroyed by fire in 1834 and the commission appointed to replace it adopted the measure now in use. The new standard was deposited in the house of parliament in 1855 and authenticated copies of it are in the possession of our government officials at Washington.

More Pie for the Money.

A French journal tells a story of a lady who with a maid went to purchase a stuffed bird for a dining-room.

She selected a canvas on which were painted a bunch of flowers, a pie cut in two and a half-penny roll, and was paying 500 francs for it when the maid approached to whisper in her ear.

"Madame," she cried, "you are making a bad bargain. I saw a picture very much like this sold the other day for 400 francs."

"And was it as good as this?"

"Yes, madame, it was better; there was a good deal more pie in it."

Curious Remedy.

A centenarian in the Newry (Ireland) workhouse, being troubled with asthma, tried to relieve himself by opening his chest with a cobbler's knife, as he said "to let out the wind." It was thought to be an attempt at suicide, but the man had done the same thing before and had obtained relief in breathing; he said.

GOIN' HOME TO MARY.

Birds seem singin' all the way
Goin' home to Mary;
Roses on a winter's day,
Goin' home to Mary.
I can hear my heart keep time
With the bells that sweetly chime;
Happiest man that lives when I'm
Goin' home to Mary.

Far away her smile I see,
Goin' home to Mary;
How it lights the way for me,
Goin' home to Mary!
There, in groves where nests the dove,
In a cot with blooms above,
Shall the nightingale's trill'ps o' love—
Goin' home to Mary!

Down the walk come patterin' feet,
Goin' home to Mary;
Children's arms my neck entwines sweet,
Goin' home to Mary.
Rob comes climbin' up my knee,
Katie wants a kiss from me;
"Loves me all the world," says she,
Home with you, Mary!

Shine the lights for evermore,
Goin' home to Mary!
Love still leads me to the door,
Goin' home to Mary.
For her sake my toil is sweet,
For her sake my heart'll beat,
Till I rest at her dear feet,
Goin' home to Mary!

—Frank L. Stanton, in Chicago Times-Herald.

THE TRAIN CANNOT WAIT.

She is just 18, with golden hair and gray eyes—large gray eyes that laugh just as well as her red lips; her figure, though a little frail, makes one think what a pretty woman she will be soon. Her hands and arms are those of a child—is she not still a child? Clara left school but a fortnight ago. She is the beloved and only daughter of a rich miller in the neighborhood of Arsenas.

Nothing is more poetical than a mill in the country. It does not disturb the silence of the air with its monotonous tic-tac; on the contrary, its noise, strong and regular, like an accompaniment to the many other noises of the wind, and of the trees, and of the birds. Clara was charmed with it all.

During a few days after her arrival the mill was quiet, making and receiving calls, dinner parties, dancing parties, lawn tennis; the days were not long enough to hold their pleasures. Then all was quiet at the mill.

Above the orchard, which was large, the walks were spread over with sand, *and the trees, loaded with fruit, afford*ed a beautiful shady grove. This was Clara's favorite nook; here she would go and read poetry. She had been given a volume of Lamartine, beautifully bound. Now, Lamartine, is a very tender poet, and Clara was still in her teens, and this was summer, and the fragrance of the flowers and the murmur of the trees, lulled into her young mind; and through this book she would dream of things she had never dreamed of before.

One day her mother asked her if she remembered her cousin Albert.

"Oh, yes, indeed," said she. This answer came from her heart; she blushed and from her neck to her brow she felt that sort of electricity that is produced by a little shame and a great pleasure.

"Well," said her mother, "you will see him very soon."

Clara was about to say: "Oh, how glad I am!" but she thought it more proper to say nothing.

And why was she silent? I will tell you. It was because she had read Lamartine. Why! does poetry make one false? Well, I don't know, but it speaks of love, and love is never false.

"Well," said Clara, "I have not seen him for two years. I suppose he is changed!"

"Not more than you," said her mother, casting a loving glance of admiration to her daughter; "you were a little girl when you went away—you are a young lady now."

Clara ran off to her beloved grove to hide the blushes on her cheeks and the beatings of her heart. She sat down, drew from her pocket her volume of poetry, but read not a line.

Albert arrived a few days before he was expected, but she was thinking of him. Now always had roses on her cheeks, but these roses changed into peonies when she saw him, and her hands trembled. He took hold of those hands and kissed her on both cheeks.

He was a medical student who had not yet in his brain the least thought of anything serious; he had suddenly discovered in himself a vocation for the beautiful science of Aesculapius, that he might be able to spend a few years of his life and waste a few thousands of his father's francs.

"Ah! little cousin," said he, "you are pretty now. Why, I am afraid I shall fall in love with you."

She looked at him, not knowing what to say.

"Have you forgotten the good times we had in this garden, and over there in the woods?"

"Oh, no," said she.

"And when we would go rowing and I would scare you by swinging to and fro in the boat to capsize you!"

"Oh, no, I remember it all."

"Then why don't you put your arms around me as you and my pleasant things to me as you did then?"

"I don't know," she faltered.

Then he said to himself: "This country of mine must be a little simpleton."

Well," said he, aloud, "and what is this book?"

"Lamartine. It is beautiful."

"I don't think so. I think it stupid" —then seeing that she was somewhat abashed, he added: "Why does it displease you that I should not care for Lamartine?"

"Because I love his poems."

"Well, if I read poetry I want Alfred de Musset. I shall send you his works when I get to Paris."

At this moment they heard a quick and firm step on the sandy walk, and a young man came upon them.

"Excuse me, mademoiselle," said he, "if I have just learned that Albert is here and I have come to shake hands."

An old saying came to Clara's mind: "Two is company; three is a crowd." She was too well behaved to say it, so she left the two young men together. When alone she reflected that Albert was a very nice cousin, and might make a very good husband; as for his friend —well, he was a very good looking man, and might be a very nice fellow—but what a difference between the two.

"Your cousin is a charming girl," said Jack.

"Oh, yes, but else is only a school girl."

"Well, what else can she be? She is just out of school and not a woman yet. Do you know what were my thoughts as I looked at you both?

"How can I know?"

"I was thinking that you would make a pretty couple."

"Now, Jack, what harm have I ever done you that you should want to chain me down?"

"Are you not 25?"

"Is that my age?"

"Would you give an old man to your cousin, who will be only 18 next year?"

"In two years she will be 20—that will be better still. Then I will be a serious man and will be able to find a good match; our fortunates are about equal. I think I might make a living in this country. Well, who knows what may happen one day? I have plenty of time to think of it."

"I think your cousin deserves better than that, and you ought to be in love with her."

"What! Love at first sight! I do think Clara is pretty, but—plenty of time—plenty of time!"

Everybody seemed happy at the mill; even Clara, who listened with pleasure to the compliments of her cousin whenever he chanced to be with her, and she thought him as witty, that she almost forgot to show her own wit before him.

In the meantime she was hoping that he would propose before going back to Paris, but the last day dawned, and he had not said the least word about marriage. She hoped till the last hour; then, till the last minute.

Albert gave kisses all around and said to her: "I will come back next year. I will write to you, and send Musset's works, as I promised."

She plucked up courage and said to him:

"Is that all you want to promise, Albert?"

He understood what she meant, but would not promise more, and as his eyes rested on the clock he said:

"Good-by, cousin; the train is here—it cannot wait."

The life of a student, especially that of a student who does not study, is just as tiresome as any other.

There comes a time when he gets tired of beer, wine and cigars.

Albert was in one of his dark days; since coming he had felt cross, and would not even smoke; his pipe lay on the table with a pile of books and dusty papers. His tobacco pouch reminded him of Clara—she had embroidered it for him during the week he had spent with her. Then he was also reminded that he had promised to write and send Musset's works; he felt badly at these thoughts, and remorse made him go out to repair his forgetfulness.

There is a knock at the door; the servant brings up a letter to him; it is from his mother.

His drowsiness gives way as he reads the lines; he gets up in a passion, upsetting the table and everything upon it.

Clara is to be married, and in a week, too; and he is expected to attend the wedding!

"And whom does she marry, I wonder?" exclaims he; "some common country lad, I suppose. No, it cannot be! I must go there and stop it; she cannot be married in this way!"

Two hours later he started with a valise in one hand and a bundle under one arm; it was Musset's works.

Clara met him at the garden gate; she was looking as fresh as the flowers, and as he was speechless, although that the happiness expressed on her face was due to his presence. She was less timid than last year and a little stouter, one could read her heart through her gray eyes and her smiling lips.

"In what I hear true, Clara?"

"Certainly. I was about to write to you. I want you here for the wedding."

"It is impossible!"

"Quite possible and true."

"Impossible!"

"With Jack, of course."

"Ah, the scoundrel! There is nothing like a friend to betray one."

"Why, Albert, what a short memory you have, because you failed to speak of love before he was quite sure of your feelings toward me. I am very thankful that you set him at liberty to speak. I am so proud and happy at being loved by such a noble heart."

Albert threw his bundle on the table.

"What is that?" asked Clara.

"Musset's works. I had promised them to you."

"You are too late, cousin. Jack gave them to me long ago, and I was complaining of your forgetfulness."

"Tell me, Clara—this is all a dream, is it not? You are not going to marry Jack?"

She laughed. "And why not?" she said.

"Because I love you; because if you mean to marry Jack I start by the first train, and you shall never see me again."

She looked at the clock, as he had done the year before, and said, archly:

"Then hurry up, cousin, for the train is here, and it cannot wait."—N. O. Times-Democrat.

NEW INTERPRETATION OF LAW.

In rendering an opinion to the Excise Commissioners why the license in the case of a Trenton saloon keeper for selling liquor to a minor, should not be revoked, the City Solicitor stated that the Werts liquor law prohibits the sale of liquor to a minor, but does not say what the age of the minor must be, but leaves the question to be regulated by the act of 1880, which fixes the age at eighteen years, when liquor can be sold to either male or female minors. The fact that all saloon-keepers have always understood the law to fix on twenty-one years as the age of minors, is due to a confusion of law. There is another separate act, which was enacted in 1846, which prohibits the sale of liquor "to minors under the age of twenty, who are scholars or members of any school, college or academy in this State."

BOUND TO HAVE MARTINE.

Great pressure is being brought to prevail on James E. Martine to consent to accept the Democratic Congressional nomination in the Eighth district, though Mr. Martine has expressly authorized The Press on two occasions to say that he was not a candidate for the honor. A day or two ago a delegation of twenty prominent Democrats from Essex, Hudson and Union counties called on Mr. Martine and insisted that he accept the nomination, which, they assured him, would come almost unanimously. He is averse to any such idea, but his friends are just as perverse in their mission to thrust the honor on him. The convention will be held at Elizabeth, October 1st.

BROUGHT TO BAY AT LAST.

Every law-abiding citizen—and all we Plainfielders are much in this class—is glad to see "Mike" Watson, the most flagrant and persistent violator of the excise laws that the city officials have ever had to deal with, finally brought to bay. A sojourn of one hundred and twenty days in the county jail and the payment of $200 in fines, ought to have a salutary effect on this dispenser of intoxicants in breach of law and order. And the sentence should also have a deterring effect on other excise violators—of which common rumor says there are aplenty in the city limits.

A SHORT-SIGHTED POLICY.

While the taxpayers of Dunellen are paying $2 500 for the erection of a town hall, it seems to be a short-sighted policy that does not permit the expenditure of a few dollars more for the land on which the structure is to be built. The whirligig of time rolls fast and the expiration of a five-years lease of land will come quicker than it seems to look ahead If a longer lease cannot then be obtained, the cost of removal or disposition of the building will be greater than what the proper piece of land would be today.

MUST BE LOYAL TO GOLD.

Chairman Henry D. Winton, of the Gold Democratic State Committee, states that the committee has advised the local committees throughout the State to wait a few days longer before starting the sound-money campaign throughout the State. The names of the electors will be ready to announce at latest this week. No one will be named unless he is willing to subscribe to the Indianapolis platform. This has been deemed essential, and has delayed the work of securing the ten electors.

CHANGE OF BASE.

The Democratic State Committee will meet in Trenton tomorrow. The headquarters of the committee will be in Trenton this campaign. The capital is not as convenient as Jersey City is for the leaders of this section to congregate at.

A Republican statistician has been figuring out the majority for McKinley and Hobart in New Jersey. He makes it 32,400. Of this he figures that Union county will give 1,200, Somerset 600 and Middlesex 600. He allows Bryan and Sewall four counties.

NOT AS BAD AS PICTURED.

We have been taught in the lore of latter day journalism and funny writers to regard the racing bicyclist as sort of a wild-eyed, distorted-faced and spherical backed individual—distinct from any other tribe of human beings—who scorches along without regard to time, man or beast, and bent only on making a show of himself and a fool of everybody with whom he comes in contact. But what a difference when we observe the real article as it is in life. Just now Plainfield is the mecca to which all famous bicycle racers are wending their way, and we who study human nature find that the crackajack circuit chasers are a real nice lot of fellows—young, bright, modest, affable—the real personification of gentlemen. As a representative of the people, we welcome the bicyclists to enjoy all our multifarious attractions—good roads, picturesque residential sections, enterprising business men, pretty girls, and the Oval, and withal we trust you may capture some diamonds or the like on Saturday.

GETTING POLITICAL WISDOM.

New Yorkers may have been chagrined that they permitted Chicago and St. Louis to monopolize all the big political conventions this year, but with the aftermath of monster political meetings they are farting quite well. Last night Madison Square Garden was filled to the doors with people anxious to hear Palmer and Buckner, the candidates nominated at the National Democratic Convention. Their addresses were able expositions of the gold side of the currency problem.

FOUND NO FENCES TO MEND.

Robert Houston, the Elizabeth Republican who is out for the nomination of Sheriff, was in town last night seeking to patch up political fences, but unfortunately the Elizabethan found that Plainfield Republicanism had been cyclone swept of all vestage of friendliessness towards the politicians of the county seat, and that he had no fences to patch up. He went home convinced that Billy Kirk has the call for the delegates from the Colorado of the East.

A FRIEND OF CHARLIE'S.

The Real Estate News, Silas Drake's paper, promises its support to Charles A. Reed in the event of his nomination for Senator from Somerset county.

The Republicans concede the election of Agustus Cutler to Congress from the Fourth district.

Ex Mayor Charles Place, of North Plainfield, has issued the call for the Republican Third Congressional district convention, to be held in Asbury Park, Monday, October 3d.

It has been suggested that during the days of the great Christian Endeavor convention to be held in this city next month, it would be an admirable idea for all business however to close their doors at 6 p. m. A large number of the clerks in Plainfield are members of the Endeavor Society, and such a plan would afford them opportunity to attend the evening sessions without interfering with their duties to employers.

The custom of having women pall bearers is growing rapidly. Plainfield was one of the first towns in this section to witness such an innovation, and while there is an element about the practice that seems novel, yet wherever the gentler sex are in times when the pall of death hovers over the heads of the living, there seems to be a lessening of the sorrow for the bereaved. And so, no doubt, the custom will continue to increase.

We are in the habit of viewing the cruelty of the Siberian mines in Russia, the atrociousness of the Spanish in Cuba and the murderous Turkish raids in Armenia with mingled compassion and wrath, but these things are passed over with much more of a shudder of horror and regret than indignation and resentment, because we realize that these Nations have for centuries been cursed with institutions and instincts that are cruel and unnatural in practice. We view the conditions as something needing the reformatory influence of advanced civilization. But when we see the results of the practices imposed on men just released from English prisons—physical and mental wrecks as they are—it is not in a spirit of awe and pity that we look upon it, but with a feeling that to rise up and wipe the fosterers off the face of the globe would be giving just retribution. In a Nation noted as being almost at the pinnacle of sociological problems—the point from which reforms travel westward—the treatment meted out to the Irish-Nationalist prisoners in the English prison pens is a subject that deserves the severest condemnation. In the last two weeks two such prisoners have arrived in this country stark mad from the inhuman treatment given them while serving sentences as punishment for the alleged charge of conspiring against the government of England—a charge based on their endeavorers to free Ireland from her bondage.

The Executive Committee of the New Jersey Sound-Money Democratic State Committee has decided to name its Presidential electors next Monday.

Here we have newness. A New York Woman's Club has been discussing the subject of "How to Make Men Vote." We always thought it was "How to Make the Men Let Women Vote."

At last, Elizabeth believes she has solved the problem of making the Elizabeth creek a flowing stream of clarified water, instead of a canal of filthy and putrid sewage. This is to be done by the construction of a trunk sewer.

John Boyd Thatcher, Democratic candidate for Governor of New York State, announces his adherence to the views he expressed at the June State convention, when he declared against the free coinage of silver. His position is fully stated in today's telegraphic news in another column.

Senator Smith has jumped off the fence and landed on the gold standard side. In a letter he says that he finds his inland still adhering to the views he held in the Senate, and those were against the silver policy. He has therefore decided to resign the chairmanship of the Democratic State committee.

Among the names mentioned as possible successors to the late Elias R. Pope as President of the First National Bank, we are glad to note that of J. W. Johnson. Mr. Johnson is the present Vice President of the Bank, and a man whose selection as its chief executive officer would doubtless satisfy the best interests of the institution.

If public discussion of a question helps to mould opinion, the gold standard idea of the currency question should have converts galore. From now until election the Republicans will hold one and two meetings a week, and the gold Democrats announce their intention of holding public meetings every Tuesday and Thursday. The silver people are yet to be heard from on the rostrum.

GREAT INTERESTS AT STAKE.

The building and loan associations connected with the United States League have assets nearly $500,000,000, while their yearly receipts are about $200,000,000, and they pay out every year for withdrawals and matured shares at least $75,000,000. Each State has its general organization of associations for the purpose of securing needed legislation and protection, while the National League itself, which was first heard of by that part of the American public that does not belong to building and loan associations at Chicago in the Columbian year, contains representatives of all. There are no available statistics to show the recent growth of the associations, but it is not likely changed greatly since 1892, when Labor Commissioner Wright found the seven per cent of the members were bookkeepers, accountants, etc., five per cent men and women engaged in professional pursuits, sixteen per cent "wage owners." The classification is not quite satisfactory, for surely they are all wage owners, except those who own the shops and stores and pay wages. At least eighty per cent of the members are men, and a large proportion of them have votes to cast next November. It is a matter for public congratulation this year that the building and loan associations collectively, and their members individually, are strongly and milit antly in favor of sound money and opposed to repudiation.—Harper's Weekly.

ACTIVE FOR SOUND MONEY.

The Sound Money Democratic Headquarters in Jersey City are now in thorough working order, and the committee is daily sending out large quantities of sound money literature. Former Senator Henry D. Winton is in charge as chairman of the committee, and he is daily receiving letters which bear testimony that the movement for sound money is making rapid progress throughout the State.

A county organization has been effected in Burlington, and 150 sound money democrats from New Brunswick and vicinity are desirous of organizing Middlesex county. In Somerset an organization has been effected, and a large, handsome Palmer and Buckner banner has been swung across the main street of Somerville. In act, every part of the State is considered to be in good shape for the cause of hard money, with the possible exception of the Fourth Congressional district.

Letters are flowing in from Democrats from every section of the State indorsing the movement and pledging it financial support. The State Committee has secured a number of prominent and able speakers whom it is prepared to send out at a moment's notice.

In New Jersey there are 30 800 owners of farms, and about 9,000 of them have mortgages on their land. Elect Bryan, and thus threaten the country with free silver, and those 9,000 farmers will have to hunt in a lively manner for the money to pay off their mortgages, or make the acquaintance of the Sheriff. The mortgagee will not take the risk of being paid in fifty-cent dollars. On the other hand the 21,000 farmers who have no debt, must be investing their money in other places. They don't want to risk having their money depreciate one-half in value. That is what it would mean if we have free silver coinage.—Unionist-Gazette.

Members of the East Orange Democratic Club, which was organized four years ago as a tariff reform club, are almost unanimous against Bryan and his platform.

It is a sad plight for the city to be left without any money for the consolidation of streets, especially since the work on the principal business thoroughfare—Front street—is left half finished.

The Press is in receipt of a communication stating that ex Judge Freeman O. Wiley, of Orange, is prominently mentioned in connection with the nomination for Congress on the Democratic ticket in the Eighth Congressional district.

There is nothing that adds zest to local life, or gives the gossips a chance to talk about something besides than weather, more than a romantic wedding, and with Plainfield the scene of such a one as was enacted at the Sanitarium last Wednesday, it provided a sweet morsel that made the tongues wag.

The Democratic Congressional convention for the Eighth district will be held in Elizabeth, Thursday, October 1st. The basis of representation is one delegate to every 100 votes cast at the last Gubernatorial election. This entitles the First ward to two, the Second to two, the Third to one, and the Fourth to three.

In simple justice we are called upon to say that the remarks of Mr. Moody at the Republican meeting last Saturday night were most unjust and ungentlemanly when he said that "Jim Martine would sell his soul for a political job." However much people may disagree with Mr. Martine's ideas on political questions, they will all agree that he is honorable and honest in his declarations.

THE MAYOR TALKS MONEY

TELLS WHY HE THINKS THE WORKMAN SHOULD VOTE FOR M'KINLEY.

Says the Demonetization of Silver Will Not Increase Its Commercial Value, and the Wage Earner Will Suffer From It.

The Republican headquarters on East Front street were formally opened Thursday night, when Mayor Alex. Gilbert gave an address on the money question. Councilman Charles J. Fisk, presided and introduced the Mayor in a few well-chosen words. The speaker was greeted with hearty applause throughout his address, which was in substance as follows:

"Fellow citizens and neighbors, and I might add sound money Democrats, for I see several in the audience; If we could reduce the Democratic platform and all the speeches made by Mr. Bryan and his supporters during the campaign, into a few short pithy sentences, the substance of it all would be that during the past four years the experience of the country has been a general depression in business, the equal of which has seldom been felt. In 1873, Congress passed a law discontinuing the coinage of silver. This law, according to the Democratic platform, was passed by stealth and a great crime was enacted, by which, in one blow, wages were reduced one half and suffering was universal. The only remedy was to undo this great wrong and go back to the free coinage of silver. The Democratic party favored an income tax, and because the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional the income tax last winter, the party now favors a law giving Congress the power to increase the number of Supreme Court Judges, so that they may pass any law that suits the party. Now, if I was going to reply to these propositions, I should say that the demonetization law was not passed by stealth, and that the volume of money doubled. The panic was due to a different cause than alleged.

"The Republican party is opposed to a law that would change the construction of the Supreme Court for partisan purposes, and they favor law and order to the extent of giving the President full and unlimited power to protect this country without first obtaining the consent of any Governor.

"The Democratic platform, or that wing of the party which allied itself with Mr. Bryan, says that if they succeed they shall pass a law giving free coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1. Now 371¼ grains of silver are worth 51 cents, and it follows that the man who receives these silver dollars will be defrauded of just 49 cents. Commerce cannot be cheated. It knows how to estimate values. The silver dollar now in circulation has the pledge of the United States Government to maintain it at a parity with gold. The United States stands prepared to redeem them in gold. With the Bryan dollars there is no Government behind them, and under such conditions the silver dollar would be nothing but a coin that acknowledges our National dishonor, and the United States bonds, which are paid for in gold, will be paid off in silver dollars worth 51 cents. Is it any wonder that Maine and Vermont rolled up such majorities and repudiated the Democratic party.

"Bryan tells the farmer that if they will vote for him and free silver and elect him President he will secure the passage of a law that will double the price of commodities. He don't tell the farmer that he will raise his wages. Bryan promises cheap money. If there is anything we want it is an honest dollar. It is now only fair that I give the other side of the question.

"Free silver advocates say that at first the silver dollar will remain at the value of fifty-one cents, but it will increase in value. Silver is now worth sixty-five cents an ounce and to equal gold it would have to be worth $1.29 an ounce. In 1890, Congress passed what was known as the Sherman law, which provided that the government should take four and a half million ounces of silver monthly. This was about the limit of production and if anything would increase the price of silver it would be that, but why didn't the price of silver go up. The fact remains that there was a slight spurt in the market value, but it was followed with a downward tendency which reached the lowest point. Dollars are only valuable when you have a place to redeem them. The money system of the world and of the civilized earth is a product of evolution, a child of experience. Mr. Bryan is trying to infuse into the minds of the laboring men against capital. There can be no enmity between capital and labor. Some people spend their money, while others are saving, frugal and thrifty. The position for the laboring man is on the side of law and order and he should favor it. When disorder prevails, business languishes. If there is one thing in the life of Grover Cleveland that deserves a debt of gratitude, it is when he reached out and grasped Debs and his followers who were trying to overthrow society, and said 'you cannot do this thing'."

Loud applause followed the close of Mr. Gilbert's remarks. Mr. Fisk then stated that Mr. Gilbert was prepared to answer any questions, politically, which those present desired to ask. There were only two or three questions asked regarding the Bland dollar, as to the number coined, and its relation with the present silver dollar, and these questions were given satisfactory answers. Stephen A. Kross was then introduced and for a short time gave a clear and concise talk regarding the tariff. At times he was exceedingly witty and this, together with the political truths presented, won for him shouts of laughter and hearty applause. After Mr. Fisk announced that John Moody would make an address in the rooms Saturday evening on the subject "Why a Democrat should oppose Bryan," the crowd, at Mr Fisk's suggestion, gave three cheers for McKinley and Hobart, after which the meeting adjourned.

AFTER THE POT HUNTERS

WARDEN SEBRING BOUND TO BREAK UP ILLEGITIMATE SPORT.

His Exciting Episode With a Violator Whom He Had Arrested and Convicted, and Who Afterward Escaped.

Fish and Game Warden Charles P. Sebring, of Somerset county, some time ago made complaint before Justice Ayers Coddington, of Bound Brook, against one Peter Larsen, who lives near Adamsville, a small place between Bound Brook and Somerville, on the mountains, for Sunday hunting. A warrant was issued by the Justice and placed in the hands of a constable, who arrested Larsen and brought him before Justice Coddington. He fined Larsen and in default of payment committed him to the Somerset county jail for thirteen days. The officer who had the prisoner in charge was prevailed upon by the latter to take him to his employer, who, he said, would pay his fine. He accordingly did so, and through some trickery the prisoner escaped.

Warden Sebring made up his mind to attend to that part of the business himself hereafter, and had a new warrant issued recently. He found the fugitive in the freight yard at Bound *Brook, where, after a tremendous re*sistance on the part of the prisoner, Warden Sebring finally brought Larsen again before the magistrate, who fined him $20, and in default of payment he was committed to the county jail for ninety days.

Warden Sebring is determined to break up Sunday shooting in Somerset county, and the pot hunters who roam with dogs and guns on Sunday, would better heed this warning, for this class will be particularly looked after from now on until the game season opens. Any person found with dog only on Sunday in the woods will be arrested.

STEALING THE MURPHYS.

Potato Depredations Still Continue in the Vicinity of Fanwood.

Potato thieving still goes on unmolested near Fanwood. Only a few days ago The Press told of the stealing of some twenty-five bushels or more of potatoes from Joseph Tice's patch on Terrill road. Saturday night Mr. Tice had a sort of presentiment that another effort was to be made to raid his patch, so he put an extra charge of buck-shot into his army musket and secreting himself under a tree awaited further developments. At midnight the rain drove him into the house and to bed, but yesterday morning he discovered that a dozen or more thirty foot rows had been dug up and the potatoes carried away. The hills were located some little distance back from the road, and as various sized foot imprints were noticed in the soft earth, it is conjectured that several persons were implicated in the theft. Fresh wagon tracks were noticed in the roadway just outside the patch. One or two persons are suspected and search warrants will probably be taken out today.

Miss Lena Coles, of North Front street, who is visiting relatives at Flemington, is expected home on Saturday.

D. D. Smalley, of Manning avenue, who very peculiarly has been affected with a hiccough for some time past, is slowly recovering. The trouble is has almost ceased.

DUNELLEN.

The evergreen hedges in the station park were yesterday trimmed, adding greatly to the attractiveness of the same.

William Craig, of this place, has gone for a two-weeks wheeling trip through Pennsylvania. He started on Monday.

M. Agany yesterday put up his self-feeding stove in his store on North avenue. "Mat" says he does not intend to freeze to death even if he starves.

George Schenck, head clerk for Adam Dealaman, will return to his duties today after an absence of ten days on account of the illness and death of his mother.

Walter Brokaw's tame grey squirrel, which has been in captivity since last spring, and which was allowed to roam about the butcher shop during the daytime at will, died a natural death yesterday.

Most of the Dunellen people who have been out of town during the heated term are home again, and a series of winter cotillons and dramatic entertainments are already well under way for the winter season.

William H. Carman and his faithful hunting dog went to the mountains yesterday afternoon in search of squirrels. Mr. Carman knows a good thing when he sees it, so he knew the four squirrels when he got them.

John McFadden is said to be in possession of the names of three young men who stole his no-top business wagon early Sunday morning and hauled it to the Emeryside terminus of the street railway. Mr. McFadden is only looking for a little more direct evidence before he begins legal proceedings against them.

The work of excavating for Dunellen's new municipal building was begun with a vigor yesterday and, weather permitting, the contractors promise to complete their work within the specified time. As a matter of record it may be stated that Contractor Firman H. Gise turned the first spadeful of dirt and Adam Dealaman drove the first stake toward the construction of the new building.

It has been been suggested, and perhaps rightly, too, that a cornerstone be placed in the new town hall, at Dunellen, with a tin box containing borough documents, Dunellen and Plainfield papers, and a small quantity of coin, the same as is usually placed in cornerstones on all public buildings. The matter was broached to a borough commissioner yesterday and he immediately sanctioned the project, although it had never been considered before.

To Instruct the Deputies.

Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, I. O. of U. O. L. will meet in Red Men's Hall, in the Stillman building on Monday evening next, at which time Mrs. Emma K. Wilson, Supreme Deputy, of Worcester, Mass., will be present to instruct the senior and junior deputies here. This is the only lodge of the kind in the State.

—A. B. Thorn, of Craig place, is removing the front fence to his property.

—The new winter cars for the street railway are expected to arrive in this city this week.

—Dr J. H. Cooley, of North Plainfield, has purchased the last of Thos. Martin's St. Bernard puppy dogs, for $25.

—Summons have been issued by Justice Newcorn in the contract cases of Kyte against Reutsch and Roberts against Mortimer. Both are returnable Sept. 20th.

—The machinery at the Wilson stone crusher on the mountain was considerably crippled by the breaking of some of the shafting, yesterday morning, but it is thought that everything will be in readiness for work today.

—The safe deposit vaults of the First National Bank are just what is needed here in this city. The boxes rent for $5 and upwards. The system is one of the finest in the country, and many are taking advantage of the vaults to store their valuables in.

—The Jersey Central is doing most admirable work by flagging the property on West Front street near Grant avenue. This has served as an impetus for property owners adjacent to Front street on both sides of the street beyond to grade up to the level and lay flagging. Contracts have been given out for fully fifteen hundred feet of flagging between Grant and Clinton avenues.

—The Cranford sewage system, which has been eighteen months in building and has cost more than $125,000, has been accepted in its entirety by the Township Committee. The Board of Health has directed that every drain now discharging in the Rahway river be connected with the sewers. This will bring great relief to the city of Rahway, whose water supply is derived from the stream at a point two miles below Cranford.

A. C. Stebbins, of the Pond Machine Tool Works, and Mrs. Stebbing left today for a two week's outing at Mt. Pocono, Pa.

Abner Allen and family, of Annandale, Hunterdon county, are guests for a few days of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Shepherd, of New street.

Woman's Work

Is never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to tone, sustain, and renew the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. It is more because of this condition of the blood that women are run down.

Tired, Weak, Nervous,

Than because of the work itself. Every physician says so, and that the only remedy is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer like Hood's Sarsaparilla. For the troubles peculiar to Women at change of season, climate of life, or arising from hard work, nervousness, and impure blood, thousands have found relief and cure in

BLUE COATS TUSSLE WITH FEROCIOUS PRISONERS.

PATROLMAN VANDERWEG ASSAULTED WITH A BRICK—PATROLMAN COONEY LOCKED IN A ROOM WITH A DRUNKEN MAN.

Jim O'Neil Makes a Disturbance and When Arrested by Officer Vanderweg, Broke Away and Threw a Brick at Him.

For the first time since City Judge DeMeza has been in office, an offender was given the full penalty of the law this morning. The prisoner was a colored man by the name of James H. O'Neil.

Saturday evening, nearly at midnight, he was arguing a question with a friend. Both were intoxicated and O'Neil in a quarrelsome mood. O'Neil began to yell and curse in so loud a tone that Patrolman Vanderweg, who was nearly a block away, heard the racket.

He came to the scene of trouble at once, and placed O'Neil under arrest. The colored man seriously objected to such treatment and tried to down the officer. They struggled all over the sidewalk, and it was with great difficulty that Vanderweg could control his prisoner, for O'Neil is a tall powerfully built man and seemed a perfect giant when crazed with drink.

At last the officer started up the street with his prisoner an he had just got under the Park avenue railroad bridge when O'Neil broke away. Now Patrolman Vanderweg can cover the ground quite rapidly when he tries and O'Neil soon found it out. The colored man turned at bay by a pile of bricks and, using one of those as a weapon, he again met the officer. Vanderweg a club took a hand in the game and O'Neil was finally dragged to the lockup by the nearly exhausted officer.

Once inside, O'Neil dared Patrolman Vanderweg and Sergeant Kiely to lock him in a cell, and it took their united efforts to put the wild negro behind the bars. This morning, when arraigned before Judge DeMeza, O'Neil was very quiet. He pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly and resisting an officer. Then the Judge pronounced sentence.

"Sixty days in jail and a $100 fine" said the Judge. The tears came to the eyes of the tall negro and he looked at the Judge with pleading eyes.

"I am satisfied" he said with a sigh and then he was led away.

BROKE HIS HIP.

Young Osman Noel Fell From a Swing and Seriously Injured.

Osman Noel, young son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Noel, of Netherwood, sustained a fracture of the thigh Sunday while attempting to jump from a swing, at the home of relatives, in Bound Brook. Medical assistance was at once procured, and the lad was made as comfortable as possible. Chas. S. Cook, of The Daily Press office, was visiting at Bound Brook at the time and learning of the accident sent word to the injured boys parents. Mr. Noel was informed that the doctor would not allow his son to be brought to this city on the cars and he obtained permission to have the ambulance go to Bound Brook after him. It was nearly 12 o'clock last night when the ambulance returned to this city. The boy was taken to the hospital where he is doing nicely under the care of Dr. Endicott and the nurses.

MRS. JAMES STILL MISSING.

Milburn Authorities Released Her Before the Son Arrived to Take Charge of Her.

Mrs. Harriett James, of Warren township, who wandered away from home last week, and who was found and held by the authorities at Milburn, was released for some reason on Friday last, and when her son arrived at the latter place to take charge of her he was informed that she had departed. Mr. James continued the search but as yet has been unable to find the missing woman. Yesterday he sent word to the police at Newark, Orange and Morristown, to be on the look out for her, and today he will visit the latter places.

Colding of Camden. There will also be several local speakers present, and Prof. Hankinson and his orchestra will furnish the music. Edward Maynard is President of the Colored Republican Club.

Still Speaking.

J. E. Martine, of this city, will speak at two meetings in New Brunswick tomorrow evening. A Bryand an Sewall banner will be raised at each meeting. Mr. Martine will address the "Farmers Alliance," of Somerset county, at Basking Ridge on Thursday evening of this week.

Charles Frey Gets on a Tear and the Policeman Called by his Frightened Wife--Disturber Clubbed into Submission

Locked in a room with a man crazed with drink was the very unenviable position of Patrolman Joseph Cooney last Saturday night. To make the situation still more exciting, Cooney's drunken companion declared his intention of wiping up the floor with the officer.

Patrolman Cooney was on duty in the West End, Saturday night, patrolling Liberty street, when Mrs. Chas. Frey came rushing out of her house in the rear of Endress' butcher shop and begged the officer to come in and arrest her husband who, she declared, had been beating her. Her clothing was torn and she was badly bruised.

Cooney went back to investigate, but found the door locked. He started to enter by a window but Frey was ahead of him and slammed the window in his face. The officer then pounded on the door, and they at last admitted him.

Cooney had no sooner entered than the door was closed and the bolt turned. Then they came forth and started to thrash the representative of the law.

There was no use of trying to deal gently with Frey, it was a case of "do me or I'll do you," and Cooney had his hands full to protect himself. The formidable fight ended in the use of a weapon. He again met the officer. Vanderweg a club took a hand in the game and O'Neil was finally dragged to the lockup by the nearly exhausted officer.

Once inside, O'Neil dared Patrolman Vanderweg and Sergeant Kiely to lock him in a cell, and it took their united efforts to put the wild negro behind the bars. This morning, when arraigned before Judge DeMeza, O'Neil was very quiet. He pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly and resisting an officer. Then the Judge pronounced sentence.

"Sixty days in jail and a $100 fine" said the Judge. The tears came to the eyes of the tall negro and he looked at the Judge with pleading eyes.

"I am satisfied" he said with a sigh and then he was led away.

RUN INTO BY A BREWERY SHARK.

James Hunter and Wife Thrown From Their Carriage and Injured.

James Hunter, of Scotch Plains, harnessed his horse on Saturday evening, contemplating to take his wife on a shopping tour to Plainfield. They were driving along Mountain avenue, in North Plainfield, when a heavy brewery wagon was noticed coming in the opposite direction. Mr. Hunter, fearing a collision, drew his horse to a stand in the ditch on the right side of the road. Just then there was a crash and Mr. Hunter and his wife were thrown from their carriage and both considerably injured. The front wheel on the carriage was completely wrecked.

The driver of the brewery wagon was either drunk or asleep, for he paid no attention to the mishap and the team sped away. The rig came from Garwood, and Justice Clark has been instructed to bring an action against the owners.

RAIN PREVENTED THE OUTING.

But the Y. M. C. A. Workers Enjoyed Isaac W. Rushmore's Hospitality.

Just as the committee men of the Y. M. C. A. were preparing to exhibit their skill as ball players and quoit tossers on Saturday afternoon at their outing held on the lawn of Isaac W. Rushmore, of West Seventh street, the rain sent them scrabbling to the house and they spent the rest of the afternoon in playing checkers and other kindred games and wishing the rain would stop.

The shower kept many away and only about twenty-five gathered for the outing. The rain did not spoil the supper, however, and Mr. Bushmore's hospitality was greatly appreciated.

In the evening, there was an informal chat on the different plans for the future and numerous helpful suggestions were made for the work of the different committees.

Sustained a Scalp Wound.

Samuel Terry, of East Front street, received a very deep and severe scalp wound Saturday afternoon which places him in an exceedingly critical condition. The accident occurred during the heavy storm, while Mr. Terry was attempting to place a window in sash in the cellar. While doing so he slipped and fell backward down the steps, striking his head on a sharp instrument. The cut extends four or five inches across the top of the skull, and at the time the loss of blood was very great. Drs. Carman and Higgins were called and they found it necessary to tie several arteries which had been cut. Proper treatment was given and Mr. Terry is now doing as well as can be expected.

It doesn't matter much whether sick headache, billiousness, indigestion and constipation are caused by neglect or by unavoidable circumstances DeWitt's Little Early Risers will speedily cure them all. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

MOODY TALKS FOR GOLD.

A YOUNG CRANFORD MAN ADDRESSES THE REPUBLICAN ASSOCIATION.

Claims to be a Democrat, but Says He Will Support McKinley and Hobart as the Only Salvation of the Country.

The address on the issues of the campaign by John Moody, of Cranford, before the Republicans of the city in the Republican Association rooms on East Front street, Saturday evening, was most attentively listened to, but the applause that greeted the speaker was slow and infrequent. About one hundred persons were present, when ex-City Judge William R. Codington called the meeting to order. Informally opened, the chairman introduced the speaker for the evening, John Moody, and in part he said:

I am a Jeffersonian Democrat. For the first time in the history of the party the Democracy is changing its policy, and will recompense for the moral, intellectual, commercial and other ills. The true Jeffersonian principles were never before disproven, but the millennium comes post haste. If Jefferson, Monroe, Calhoun, Dix and others were radically wrong, then it was fortunate to shake off the shackles and congratulate.

"Money," continued the speaker, "is a commodity—a piece of property—a medium of exchange and it simply barters, facilitating an exchange for commodities. Gold money have a guarantee for its intrinsic value. Gold and silver have become the mediums of exchange between the great nations of the earth; silver predominates as the money standard in China, Japan and Mexico. In other countries gold is the standard by which all National and provincial debts are cancelled."

Here the speaker went on to compare the relative value of gold and silver as a purchasing medium. "Now to the proposition," he declared, "was a dodge to coin all silver for the silver kings, and make it on a parity with gold. The market value of a silver dollar is 53 cents, and Bryan says there will be no repudiation of the public debt, and wages will be the same or even lower. Whether silver goes up or not, no one will be benefited except the owners of bullion; farmers will not be benefited in the least, in fact their business interests will be jeopardized.

"No graver charge," said the speaker, "could be brought to a civilized Nation than a depression in wages. Eighty per cent. of the men of this country are styled wage-earners, and cut their purchasing power in twain and the workingman is crippled and factories would be obliged to run on half time. Poverty and despair would eventually come to the wage-earners.

The average American workman on account of higher wages has reached a high plane of civilization and it would be a sin and a shame to lower his conditions by cutting down wages. Coining silver dollars is not adding to the wealth of the country. What the farmer wants is capital; Farmer Martine doesn't want his hay wagon filled with 50,000 silver dollars; what he wants is a good, fat, political job. More silver dollars will never create more American industries. If Mr. Bryan understands his A B C's he must be densely ignorant. The annual production of silver during the last twenty years has been four times greater than ever before in the history of the country. Since 1873 430,000,000 silver dollars have been coined. If we open our mills to a free coinage of silver there will be an unlimited demand. Whether you call Mr. Bryan's theory the result of a well educated school boy or a western cow-boy, it all goes up like so much smoke. A silver basis would be the means of flooding the country from over-stocked markets such as China and Japan, and in case Bryan is elected we'll all be on our knees to Lombard street in less than a year to get back a gold standard. Democrats should congratulate themselves because the Jeffersonian principles are being extended to the Republican party.

Every man who refuses to use his ballot for that which is just and right, is not entitled to the name. The Democrat is justified in opposing Bryan, then he is equally justified in voting for McKinley. The third party ticket is contemptible, it is a ghost of a show, and should be spirited away to the realms above. Said he, "I propose to stand out alone and fight for just vote for the Democrats of sound money, William McKinley and Garret A. Hobart.

Sent it to His Mother in Germany

Mr. Jacob Esbensen, who is in the employ of the Chicago Lumber Co., at DesMoines, Iowa, says: "I have just sent some medicine back to my mother in the old country, that I know from personal use to be the best medicine in the world for rheumatism, having used it in my family for several years. It is called Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It always does the work." 50 cent. bottle, for sale by T. S. Armstrong druggist.

From all accounts Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a God-send to the afflicted. There is no advertisement about this; we feel just like saying it. The Druggist, Carrollton, Ky. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Druggist.

WATSON SENT TO JAIL.

JUDGE DEMEZA METES OUT A HEAVY SENTENCE.

Refuses to Permit a Change of Plea From Guilty to Not Guilty—Fine and Imprisonment—Another One Arrested.

Illegal liquor selling in Plainfield has received something of a damper. "Hughey" O'Donnell was caught in the act Sunday, and Michael Watson, an old offender, received a sentence that must have brought tears to the poor man's eyes.

O'Donnell keeps a grocery store on South Second street, just west of Plainfield avenue, and has had the reputation of selling beer on the sly. Yesterday Chief Grant and Sergeant Kiely were informed that his place was running full blast, so they planned a little visit. They walked in unannounced in time, the state, to see the beer and money change hands. There was consternation among the crowd, but "Hughey" was equal to the occasion and promptly invited the officers to take a drink. They refused with thanks and arrested him on the spot. He was brought before City Judge DeMeza this morning and held in $200 to appear for trial on Friday morning at 10 o'clock.

Michael Watson keeps a hotel and store on Plainfield avenue, near South Second street, and has made himself famous by his bitter fight against the city authorities when he was charged with illegal liquor selling. About two months ago another charge was made against him and he was on Sunday and without a license. He pleaded not guilty. After some consideration he changed his plea to guilty. When he considered the case more fully, he realized what he had done and hurried to the Judge's office, wishing to change the plea back to not guilty. The Judge said he would think it over, and today he gave his decision. He declared that Watson's plea of guilty would have to stand. There were two charges against him and the Judge sentenced him to pay a fine of $100 and go to jail for sixty days on each charge.

When Watson heard the sentence, he trembled like a leaf, every bit of color left his face and his head dropped on his breat. He never said a word, however, but was led quietly away. He has no appeal from the sentence except through a writ of habeas corpus.

PUT ON BOLD FACES.

But When Accused They Begged to Change Their Plea.

With bold faces, Wm. Haselton and James Morgan declared themselves not guilty in city court Monday morning when charged with being drunk and disorderly on West Fourth street. There were no witnesses against them at that time, but when two residents of that thoroughfare were brought up as witnesses, the prisoners begged that they be allowed to change their plea. The Judge granted the request and Haselton and Morgan pleaded guilty. They were careful to explain that the witnesses could prove nothing against them, but they forgot to say this when they changed their plea. Dollar bills were as scarce as clean collars with them, so they went to Elizabeth for 30 days instead of paying a $10 fine.

A Suit on Contract.

The case on contract of Mrs. M. E. Stevens against Theodore Nankin was tried before Justice Mosher and a twelve men jury Monday last. The plaintiff sold some property to the defendant, and she claims he never paid anything but interest on the money. In the meantime he has removed buildings from the property, and the plaintiff now claims $100 damages. Up to the hour of going to press the jury is still out. Lawyer Swackhamer represented the plaintiff and Lawyer W. R. Codington the defendant.

Randolph Property Sold.

The sale of the Randolph property on West Front street, conducted by T. J. Carey, auctioneer, on Saturday last resulted as follows: L. E. Hart bought the house for $6,250, the shed was sold to Mr. McCarty of Central avenue for $1450. The brick barn went to D. N. Force for $15. N. B. Smalley bought the Wilson house and the brick stable the Randolph house for $250. The various sheds were sold to A. Gordon for $1,150.

Praise for the Rev. H. M. Lowry.

The comment of the Tribune that Mr. Lowry is a young man of ability and has already taken a high rank in the denomination, is followed by his sermon preached yesterday morning on the subject: "A Living Hope."

MADE GREAT HULLABOO

A FAMILY ROW BRINGS OUT POLICE AND FIREMEN IN THE BOROUGH.

Colored Woman Runs Into the Streets Crying Out all Sorts of Exciting Appeals --Failed to Appear in Court Friday.

The usual quietude of North Plainfield was disturbed Saturday evening between 10 and 11 o'clock, when the cries of murder! police! fire! were heard coming from Race street. Julius Stahl was one of the first to hear the cries and he ran at once to the fire alarm box at the corner of Manning avenue and sent in an alarm. In short order the department was ready to go out. Just then a boy ran to the engine house and told Chief Marshal that there was trouble on Race street and that he was wanted. The officer hastened to the street and found Mrs. Wallace, colored, in an excited condition, so much so that for a few minutes she was unable to talk. Her clothes were torn and she was the picture of trouble. Inquiry on the part of the officer revealed the fact that her husband, Matthew Wallace, who is employed by various plumbers to excavate sewer trenches, had failed to supply food for the house and on Saturday evening he came home with a piece of meat. Instead of giving it to his wife, she says, he gave it to a woman living in the other of the house. This aroused Mrs. Wallace's anger and she had an interview with her husband. He, not desiring to be interfered with, resented her words, and Mrs. Wallace says he attempted to choke her. It was then that she ran into the street and aroused the neighborhood.

The officer told her that she had better go home, but she refused, saying that she was afraid of her husband. Presently, Wallace appeared and Chief Wilson took charge of him. His wife asked to have him arrested and said she would appear against him this morning. Wallace objected to being arrested and stated that his wife's mind was temporarily unbalanced and that he had done nothing. He was arrested, however, and the hearing was set down for this morning.

In the meantime the firemen were notified and the apparatus was not taken out.

This morning Chief Marshal Wilson learned that Mrs. Wallace had left town and Justice Crosley released her husband as no one appeared against him.

Y. M. C. A. Reception.

This evening at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms a reception will be given to the members, at which they have the opportunity of meeting the new Physical Director, Mr. Haywood, af the Sprinfield Training School, and also the new Assistant Secretary, Mr. Bristol, of D. L. Moody's school. The features of the evening will be a gymnastic exhibition by men from New York. Musical selections by an instrumental quartette, and refreshments.

Seemed Respectable, But Got Drunk.

A good-looking young fellow of scarcely twenty years was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza this morning on the charge of being drunk and disorderly. He had been arrested Saturday evening by Patrolman Vanderweg who found him at the North avenue station talking in a very profane manner. He gave his name as Patrick Burke from New York and pleaded guilty to the charge. The Judge gave him his choice between a fine of $3 or ten days in jail.

Suffering from Appendicitis.

The many friends of ex-Councilman E. N. Erickson, of West Eighth street, will be pleased to learn that he is slowly recovering from an operation for appendicitis, which was performed last evening by Dr. Hartley of New York, assisted by Drs. Endicott and Probasco, of this city. Mr. Erickson has been stopping at Avon Springs, N. Y., and was taken with appendicitis on Thursday. He was brought home on Saturday and prepared for the operation.

In a recent letter to the manufacturers Mr. W. F. Benjamin, editor of the Spectator, Rushford, N. Y., says: "It may be a pleasure to you to know the high esteem in which Chamberlain's medicines are held by the people of your own state, where they have been known longest. An aunt of mine, who resides at Dexter, Iowa, was about to visit me a few years since, and before leaving home wrote me, asking if I knew of any good, safe remedy for bowel complaints. These medicines have been in constant use in Iowa for almost a quarter of a century. The people have learned that they are articles of great worth and merit, and unequaled by any other. For sale here by T. S. Armstrong druggist.

Theories of cure may be discussed at length by physicians, but the sufferers want quick relief; and Piso's Minute Cough Cure will give it to them. A safe cure for children. It is the only harmless remedy that produces immediate results. For sale by L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

SEVEN INNINGS AND TIE.

THE P. A. C.'S ASTONISH THEY. M. C. A. BOYS AGAIN SATURDAY.

The Young Fellows Put up a Rattling Good Game Against the Strengthened Y. M. C. A. Team and Play a Tie Score With Them.

Those who witnessed last Saturday's ball game between the Y. M. C. A. and P. A. C.'s, teams will never regret it, for one of the best, if not the best games of the season was played. A week ago the Y. M. C. A. team was defeated by the P. A. C.'s 9 to 7, and the former team was somewhat surprised. On Saturday they were determined to win if possible and to that end they recalled Dennis and Major who had been released. The P. A. C.'s, feeling that there team was good, did not make a change, but presented the same players, and with the exception of a few additional errors they played a game equal to the first one. Burt started to pitch the game for the P. A. C.'s, but by McLoughlin in the third inning. The Y. M. C. A. secured one run in the first inning, and one in the third, while the P. A. C.s scored one in the third and one in the sixth. Each side made four hits, while there was not an earned run made. During the first heavy downfall of rain the game was continued with the exception of about ten minutes when it became so wet that time had to be called. Only seven innings were played on account of the weather, but each inning was one of excitement. For the P. A. C.s, Watson pitched a remarkable game, striking his opponents down in an astonishing manner. W. McLoughlin also pitched a great game, but some considered it not fair to change pitchers and catchers, as was the case.

The youngsters have demonstrated beyond a doubt that they are worthy competitors for the Y. M. C. A. team and the latter have thus far failed to prove that they are better than their opponents who battled with them, and, in fact, the defeat of a week ago showed that they were not as good. The latter think they can do better than one thinks that he speaks disparagingly of the Y. M. C. A. team, for they have given good exhibitions throughout the season, but when they are beaten fairly and are outplayed as they certainly have been, the credit belongs to the P. A. C.s. We hope that another game will be arranged soon between these two teams and that the Plainfield public may have another chance to witness a continuation of such good ball playing. Both sides had their supporters present on Saturday and plenty of excitement was furnished. No doubt it was expected that the Y. M. C. A's would win but those who thought so, miscalculated. The P. A. C.s have shown that they are as strong as any team that has met the Y. M. C. A.s and they do not intend to lose their laurels if they can possibly help it. Below is the score in full:

Disturbed Netherwood's Quietude.

Patrolman Myers found an intoxicated individual at Netherwood station Saturday night who was generally disturbing the neighborhood. Myers arrested him and this morning he was brought before City Judge DeMeza this morning. He gave his name as Kowoika and admitted being drunk. As he could not pay a fine of $4, he was sent to Elizabeth for twenty days.

—A. M. Pierson, manager of the fresh air camp at Westfield, will address the First Baptist church Christian Endeavor meeting on Friday evening, and will relate some of his experience. There will be a special programme of music. All are invited to attend.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation, can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

SOME PLURALS.

We'll begin with a box, and the plural is boxes;
But the plural of ox should be oxen, nor oxes.
Then one fowl is a goose, but two are called geese,
Yet the plural of mouse should never be called meese.
You may find a lone mouse or a whole nest of mice,
But the plural of house is houses, nor hice.
If the plural of man is always called men,
Why shouldn't the plural of pan be called pen?
If one is a tooth, and a whole set are teeth,
Why shouldn't the plural of booth be called beeth?
If the singular's this and the plural is these,
Should the plural of kiss ever be nicknamed keese?
Then one may be that and three would be those,
Yet in the plural would never be hose,
And the plural of cat is cats, not cose.
We speak of a brother, and also of brethren,
But though we say mother, we never say methren.
Then the masculine pronouns are he, his and him,
But imagine the feminine she, shis and shim.
So the English, I think you all will agree,
Is the queerest language you ever did see.

THE PASSION FLOWER.

BY B. B. DE LUNA.

The gardens are tangled, the ruins are old and gray, hardly one stone standing above another. The bells are silent and covered with moss. Even the gravestones which mark the resting-places of the dead are dull and dark; the names being almost illegible. All is quiet, all is sad, all is deserted, save in one place, where, climbing on a broken arch glows in unwonted luxuriance the warm brilliance of the passion flower. A thing of life amidst the universal death, a thing of beauty amidst the desolation. Quivering in the wind, burning in the sunshine, whispering in the moonlight. It springs from a grave apart from all the rest, a grave scarcely recognizable as such, save for the fallen stone, upon which can be faintly traced one word—a word which once drove the city mad, a name which lives in song and story, the name "Chonita."

The people shake their heads over the tale even now, and in the soft moonlights evenings the dark-eyed maids lightly touching their guitars, sing with tender pathos of Chonita. Chonita, the wondrous dancer, the beautiful, the gay.

Never were eyes so dark and tender; never were lips so red, never was siren more bewitching. With her dainty feet she danced into the hearts of all who saw her. The whole city went mad. Men died with her name on their lips. Half mad herself she danced. Cruel? Heartless? Yes. But, ah! the most beautiful thing on earth.

The young maids hated her, for their lovers forgot them after one look into her dark eyes. The matrons feared her, for love of her meant death to their sons. The priests feared her, for, to them, she was the very incarnation of evil; the devil who tempted their disciples to sin. Yet what cared Chonita?

Tears, prayers, curses, alike fell unheeded on her rosy ears. One smile from her lips and she set at naught all priestly teachings. One glance from her eyes and the teachers themselves could not resist her.

Dance on little feet! Over the hearts of men, anywhere, everywhere. In all of Mexico there is but one Chonita, and life is short! Dance on, dance on, the waves are not more light. Soon will all be over. The music, the dance, the pleadings, the cry from a thousand Chonitas! "Bravo! bravo! Chonita! Chonita!" Soon the curtain drops, the lights are out, all is silent. Not for thy beauty, thy wondrous grace, thy revelry, will men remember thee. Not these the burden of the songs the dark-eyed maidens sing—ah, no, Chonita!

One day there came to the city a stranger. "Americano," the people called him, and he was tall and fair and handsome, too, saw Chonita, and after one glance at her radiant beauty, he, too, loved her. That was nothing. Was she not the idol of them all? But the moment that she looked into his eyes, her heart awoke and so she learned what love was.

Night after night she danced, each time more wonderfully than the last. Ah! how they loved her, adored her. Ah! the beard no longer their shouts of praise, the sword rust for the lights, the music. She danced but for his eyes, his lays. Alas, Chonita!

The days passed quickly—ah, so quickly! Then over the sunny land broke the dark storm of war. Awakened from their dreams, forgetting love, their idol, all, save their country, Mexico's sons responded to her call. At the first whisper of the coming strife, the stranger, too, hastened away; his country also demanded aid; and with him, but all unknown to him, went Chonita, for love's sweet sake.

Disguised as his servant, her lovely face darkened with dyes, her beautiful hair cut short, through all the hard times that followed she followed him. Her little feet that had danced so merrily rested in the stirrups night and day. Many a time her life stood between him. Many a time her hand, once covered with jewels, showered upon her by the passionate sons of her native land, turned aside their flashing swords lest they should harm him.

Naught did she care for peril or privation. All would she bear, though reared like a tender flower. Only to be near him, to look upon him, even if all unknown. Only to hear from his lips the careless praise a master gives a servant. She, the adored; she, whose kisses he had once begged for. Ah, well! Soon it would be over, soon she would tell him. Then he would know how she loved him. Then she would be happy. Wait, wait! Alas! alas! Chonita!

Already, though she knew it not, he had forgotten her and the days gone by. Already there had crept into his heart a love more pure, more holy. A maiden of his own land had won him with her gentle ways. A maiden whom, when Texas should be free, he would call his wife. A maiden with eyes as blue as his own, whose feet had always trodden sedately. He had never really loved before; ah, no!

Chonita watched him jealously. In the brief times of peace, when the war fire in his breast lulled its fury, she would hold his horse for hours before the little house covered with vines, patient, though her eyes burned. All for love's sweet sake. Ah, Chonita, love is cruel! Many have died of it for thee!

At last she saw the maid. Saw him linger and kiss her at the door, while the silver moonlight flooded the garden. The days were never the same after that. The noisy camp wearied her. Ah, she longed for the old city! She longed for the lights, the music, the applause, the homage showered at her feet. She longed to dance fiercely, madly; to dance till her brain should reel, and she should fall exhausted, unconscious. Patience, Chonita; soon comes the end.

There came a night of horror. At last the walls were down, and over the fallen stones poured the invaders. Into the thickest of the fight she followed him. Many times she threw herself between him and the flashing death. Many a time her hand was stained with the blood of those who had kissed it. Many a time she forced back the hungry steel that threatened him. Weary and wounded, all, all for him, hoping that shot or shell would still her aching heart. Chonita, Chonita! who would know thee now?

Suddenly she saw in the hands of her countrymen the maid he had kissed. He could not reach her, and they were dragging her away. Chonita's eyes glowed. If she were gone the old love would return. She would kneel at his feet, show him her wounds; ah, surely then he would remember. The devil whispered in her heart, and for a moment she listened willingly. Then she saw the anguish on the face she loved, and with one last despairing look, she sprang forward. Fiercely she fought them back, freeing their captive. She dragged her to a place of shelter, and standing before her defended her with the fury of a lioness until help could reach them.

Was it for this she had left her home? Was it for this she had followed him? Was it for this she had suffered? Her eyes were blinded, she grew dizzy, her strength faltered. Courage; they are coming! A dozen hands are on her; cheery voices sound in her ears; strong arms support her. Too late! too late! Beyond their power or blame she lies wounded unto death by those who would have died for her! Farewell, Chonita!

Little feet, dance no more; thou must be quiet now through all eternity. Lips, that dost not feel the kisses of anguish which he, knowing all too late thy faithfulness, showers upon thee. Eyes, thou canst not raise thy dark, fringed curtains to see the tears he sheds for thee. Ah, Chonita! low lies thy head! Never more will the old city ring with thy name. Never more will thy laughing face lure men to love thee! Yet in the soft moonlight evenings shall he sang the story of thy love, for thou wert faithful. Not for thy beauty, thy wondrous grace, thy cruelty, do they remember thee, but for thy death for love's sweet sake. Sleep well, Chonita!

Radiant, beautiful, as herself, there grows on the grave of Chonita the passion flower. Never drooping, never fading, year by year it climbs higher under the cloudless skies. 'Tis the soul of the maiden, which, though pure enough to enter Heaven, was yet, by virtue of her love and faith, saved from eternal punishment. The sun and the south wind kiss it lovingly, and its beauty is unsurpassed! But some day the blossoms will fall to the ground. Then will the soul of Chonita enter Heaven, and her sins be forgiven her.—Leslie's Illustrated Monthly.

Dueling in Hungary.

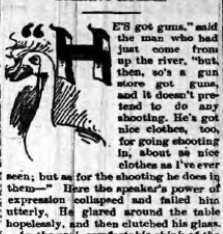
The criminal court at Buda-Pesth had to deal with a case of offense against the dueling laws on the part of two young engineers, Ignaz Reiner and Leo Lichtblau, who were each sentenced to three days' imprisonment, allowance being made for "extenuating circumstances." The couple had come to blows, and, following the fashion of the times, they determined to wipe out the insult in blood. Reiner sent Lichtblau a challenge and the seconds arranged for a duel with pistols on the most stringent terms. The affair did not come off, however, for Lichtblau waited a couple of hours before the appointed time on the police superintendent of eighth division and gave him notice of the impending duel. The superintendent calmly listened to the "brave champion's" detailed report, and then quietly observed that he itched to know all about the matter. "How is that?" "Why, simply because your opponent was here only an hour ago with a similar statement."—Pesti Naplo.

A Pretty Tea Cloth.

A tea-cloth a yard square is made from pale blue linen ornamented by Renaissance lace braid in cream white. These braids are laid on the stamped design and sewed down along the edges. The design itself is a wide band in conventional figures that extend diagonally across the cloth in leaves and flowers. The same design is used in the corners. Each side the band there is appliqued a wide band of Torchon lace in a beautifully open pattern. The same lace is used as a frill round the cloth. The design would be pretty for a bedroom stand-cover if worked on pale green or canary-colored linen.—N. Y. Post.

A GOOSE THAT GOT A FOX.

Epilogue of a Day's Hunting with Sensitive Hounds.



HE'S got guns," said the man who had just come from up the river, "but, then, so's a gun store got guns, and it doesn't pretend to go any shooting. He's got nice clothes, too, for going shooting in, about as nice clothes as I've ever seen; but as for the shooting he does in them—" Here the speaker's power of expression collapsed and failed him utterly. He glared around the table hopelessly, and then clutched his glass.

As the cool, comfortable chink of the cracked ice proclaimed the filling of the level of the liquid in the thin glass, his emotion was soothed. The waiter read the promise of a tip in the glow of contentment which overspread his countenance, and as a ruby view of the world replaced the bitter memories of the shooting trip, he exclaimed, with a sigh of deep satisfaction:

"Oh, but you should have seen that goose of his!"

The waiter was sent scurrying away for more supplies lest the man from up the river should become despondent again, and the story of his friend's goose was begun.

"I can't expect you fellows to appreciate the good qualities of that goose because you haven't seen his dogs," he said. "I didn't myself until after I had been out hunting with his dogs. But from the time I got there he kept bragging about the goose. It didn't seem to have any particular points superior to other geese, and it had a good deal fewer feathers. That was because an eagle tried to carry it off one day. The eagle swooped down and sank its talons into the goose's back and tried to fly away with it. But the goose fought it as with its wings that finally the eagle was glad to get away by itself, and left the goose strutting proudly above the lawn with half the feathers scattered over the grass. Jim thought an awful lot about it from that moment.

"It's the finest fighting goose in the state," he said. "There isn't another that has a record of whipping an eagle.'

"So he started to give the goose an education. He taught it to dance and shoo the cows, and it got the highland fling and fought the servant girls and made a general nuisance of itself. It seemed a peculiar thing to make a pet of; but, then, as I said, I hadn't seen his dogs at work.

"The third day I was up there it was so hot that Jim backed out of pretending to go shooting, and just wanted to be lazy.

"'Let's go fox hunting,' he said. 'I've got the finest hounds in the state for foxes. Once they strike a trail, they'll never let go, even if they have to follow it all day.' We'll just set 'em after a fox, and sit in some cool, shady spot still they drive the fox past us. Then we'll shoot the fox.'

"He had an old hound and a young hound and a bird dog.

"'That bird dog isn't much good for foxes,' he said, 'but if I don't take him along, I'm afraid his feelings would be hurt, for he's very sensitive dog. But he's a fine bird dog. The only fault I ever found with him was that he slept too soundly, and wouldn't come when he was called. Just turn his head the other way, will you, while I put the guns in the wagon. He don't like the sight of a gun, now, he's so sensitive.'

"It seems that the dog used to sleep so soundly that one day some boys, as an experiment, dug a mine under him as he lay sleeping on the lawn, filled it without disturbing him, laid a fuse 20 feet away and blew the dog up. It woke the dog up, but ever since then he had been gun shy.

"We drove along with the dogs trotting behind us until we came to a farmhouse. There some sheep came out into the road. As soon as he saw them the young hound set up a howl, turned about face, with his tail between his legs, scooted for home. My friend looked annoyed.

"'I ought to have thought of it,' he said. 'That dog is so sensitive. I had to punish him for chasing sheep, and now, whenever he sees sheep, he gets ashamed and runs away. But we don't really need him, for that old hound would drop dead on the trail of a fox before he would abandon it.'

"We got to a place where Jim said foxes were plenty, and turned the old hound loose. We didn't pay much attention to the bird dog.

"'You couldn't expect him to do much with foxes,' my friend said, 'for he's only a bird dog; but he won't do any harm if we let him run about, and it will please him.'

"It was a hot day, as I told you, and he had taken me to the hottest place in the whole country, or rather to the next to the hottest place, as I discovered later. We sweltered there while the old hound went dubbing around in the shade.

"'Hadn't we better shake him up a little?' I suggested, when I was in the condition you reach after ten minutes in the steam room.

"'No, no,' Jim exclaimed, hurriedly. 'He's nervous, too, and so easily put out. Let him alone and he'll get along all right.'

"He said we must leave the hound in the shade and stay in the hot sun ourselves, so as not to interfere with him. So I left Jim and the hound together, and strolled over to a swamp where the bird dog had gone nosing about, and where I could hear him yelping. I thought he had discovered a bird, but presently I spied a fox coming loping along with the bird dog at his heels. The dog didn't seem in any hurry to catch up with the fox, and all that the fox seemed to want to do was to keep out of sight of the hound, which was still out of sight at a distance of only a few hundred feet.

"I watched them a little while. Every time the dog came near me he seemed to look up with an appealing expression, as if in fear of hurting his feelings I thought I would shoot the fox. But as soon as I raised my gun, and he caught sight of me, he uttered a loud howl and darted away for home with his tail between his legs. Jim came running over toward me to see what the matter was.

"'Bless me!' he said, when I told him, 'I'm so sorry you frightened him. He won't get over it for a week. I ought to have told you that since he was blown up he can't bear the sight of a gun, he's so sensitive.'

"The heat and the sensitiveness of the dogs were making me tired by this time, and I said something about getting the dogs to a better place and ourselves to a cooler one or else setting about hunting in earnest. Jim saw that I was annoyed, and apologized for his dogs. He was very much brightened when I told him about the fox.

"I FOUND THAT HOUND CURLED UP, ASLEEP."

"'Now,' he said, 'you'll see what a clever hound can do. You'll have some sport now.'

"We chased the old hound about for some time and when we caught him we set him on the fox's trail and away he went. He disappeared over a stone wall in the direction the fox had taken, and finally we ceased to hear his voice.

"'He'll stick to that fox all night if necessary,' Jim said; 'but he'll drive him back here. You see that hollow over there? Well, that's where we'll have to wait.'

"The hollow was the hottest place I was ever in. There I roasted for two mortal hours. D'ye see all the flesh I've lost, and d'ye see the thirst I've got? We'll take the same again, waiter. Well, that's where I got it, and I haven't been able to catch up with it since. Jim kept saying:

"'Just wait five minutes more. I'm sure I hear them coming along.'

"At last, when a rabbit or no fox, got up and walked away. Just over the brow of the hill from where we had been hiding was the finest, coolest, shadiest dell you ever saw, with a little brook running through it. I walked down there to rest; and what do you suppose I found there, curled up on the softest bed of pine needles you ever saw? That hound we had been waiting for!

"The man's indignation was such that his throat blessed as the cooling beverage rolled down it.

"'Of course,' he went on, 'you can't shoot a friend's hound even if you are mad. It was absolutely to be done, you've got to shoot your friend. I didn't want to hurt Jim, for, really, it wasn't his fault, as he didn't know any better, and so I merely kicked the life half out of eighth division and gave him notice of the impending duel. The superintendent calmly listened to the "brave champion's" detailed report, and then quietly observed that he itched to know all about the matter. "How is that?" "Why, simply because your opponent was here only an hour ago with a similar statement."—Pesti Naplo.

FAIREST AND BEST.

When I go to that beautiful country,
Away from this mortal sorrow,
And am asked, what I choose for my portion,
My answer shall be to-morrow.

By the angel who loveth me best;

I shall say, I shall kneel by my angel,
And kissing her hem of her gown,
I shall whisper: "Oh, fair and beloved,
The harp and the glory and crown,

"And all of the splendor awaiting
The pilgrims that journey and roam,
Would oppress and appal me, beloved,
I ask of thee only a home.

"One fair little spot, unmolested
By the rage of the world's wild blast,
Where sheltered and happy the children,
Might grow in a quiet home-nest.

"I have waited so long, blessed angel,
I may not be worthy a crown,
But if all of my travel-stained garments
I might for a moment lay down,

"I would ask for the robe of a mother,
Who sits with her baby to rest;
For this is my dream, blessed angel,
Of all that is fairest and best."

ESTHER AND THE MAN.

ESTHER was very late. The clock in the church tower opposite had spattered 11 strokes in the frosty air, and still Esther did not come. Nor did Martin Howard, who had promised to look in for a smoke on his way home. Esther was staying with me. It is one of my principles that relatives should never stay with me. Therefore. But Esther, becoming more prosperous, was moving into a more commodious flat, and was spending the interregnum of carpenters, whitewashers and paper hangers with me. The whole flat smelled the quarter past before I heard a cab drive up to the door. In a minute or so Esther's step sounded on the stairs—an agitated footstep, as of one who has something to say in a hurry, and Esther herself appeared.

"Oh! I've had such a frightful," she said, breathlessly.

"Really! Dear me!" I said. "What was it?" Esther laid her sketch book on the table, and threw off her cape.

"A man," she said at, and stood looking at me.

"Come, it might have been worse," I said. "It might have been a cow, or an earthquake." Esther unskewered her hat and sat down.

"But he—followed me," she said, impressively.

"He didn't catch you?" I inquired.

"Don't be silly," Esther replied. "I tell you he followed me. I'll never think of walking home so late again—alone."

"Why did you to-night?" I asked.

"Well, you know, I had to do those sketches at the dress rehearsal, and I couldn't get away until 10:30. That I could only get a bus to Oxford circus. And then I waited, and every bus was crowded, and I felt horrid waiting there. So I determined to walk. And as soon as I got out of the crowded part, I found there was a man following me."

"Close?"

"No, not very, but—"

"How did you know? Did you look around?"

"Of course I didn't. But a girl can tell when anyone is following her."

"She can tell a policeman," I suggested. Esther reflected a moment, as she drew off her gloves.

"Yes, of course," she said. "But the poor man wasn't really doing any harm, you know. So there was nothing to tell —really."

"Then why disturb yourself about him?"

"Oh, you can't understand how a girl feels," said Esther, looking a little annoyed.

"But," I said, after a pause, "I thought you came home in a cab."

"From the Marble Arch," said Esther. "I couldn't endure it any longer. I walked as fast as I could, and he walked fast as fate. When I walked slowly to let him pass, he walked slowly, too. Twice I crossed the street. And—would you believe it—he crossed, too." Esther leaned forward in her chair to note the effect. I signified astonishment with my eyebrows in the usual way.

"And," she continued, "when I was nearly at the Marble Arch, I could feel him coming up behind me—quite near. I simply had to take a cab."

"It was a close shave," I said—"very close shave, indeed." Esther looked at me rather doubtfully.

"But—do you think he meant to do anything?" she asked.

"Well," I said, "I can hardly say, without knowing his previous career. Of course, he might have been a highway man; and, on the other hand—Hullo, Martin! Come in."

"I beg your pardon," said Martin, halting in the doorway; "I thought you were alone."

"All right," I said, "I was expecting you. You know my sister. We were just discussing the possibility—"

"George, don't," said Esther under her breath. "—the possibility," I continued, of assault and battery and highway robbery upon an unattended young woman in Oxford street. What do you think about it?"

"That's rather curious," said Martin, sitting down. "Only this evening I have been—in a sense—protecting a female in distress. I was confronted by a problem, and I should like your opinion on it, Miss Matthews."

Martin looked at Esther, who turned slightly in her chair with an obviously assumed air of interest. I can never understand why Esther does not like Martin, though I am quite certain she doesn't.

"I spotted her," said Martin, "hurrying along Oxford street just in front of me. She was a lady, and I could see she was very uncomfortable at being out so late alone. It really distressed me to see her edging into the road to make way for polite and inoffensive people. When she heard a couple of men coming along singing she almost ran, and then almost stood still to let them get in front of her. Now there was a problem for me."

"I don't see that there was any problem at all," said Esther, turning her face a little more toward the fire away from Martin.

"Here was a girl," said Martin, "who was frightened, though there was really nothing to be afraid of—so frightened that she was running backward and forward across the road whenever she met anyone within 30 yards. Doubtless she was a silly little goose. But she was a fellow creature. And as I was going in the same direction, it was my obvious duty to ensure her of safety. The problem was—how to ensure her. I say smoke, mayn't I?" Martin lit a cigar, and continued: "My first idea was to follow her until I saw her safely at home. But then it struck me that she wouldn't know I was behind, and so I should be doing her no good at all and giving myself a lot of trouble."

"You might," I suggested, "have called a cab and offered to give her a lift." Martin shook his head.

"HULLO, MARTIN! COME IN."

"No," said he, "that would never do. Do you think so, Miss Matthews?"

"I really don't know anything about it," said Esther.

"Well," said Martin, "this was my solution. I determined to address her respectfully—tell her I noticed her embarrassment—assure her I was respectable—lived in Kensington—offered injuries and all that—and offer to walk a dozen yards behind her until she reached her front door and then leave her without speaking. What do you think of that?"

"You didn't do it?" I said.

"No," said Martin. "Just as I had nearly overtaken her a lot of rowdy men came along, and she jumped into a cab. So I didn't bother myself any further."

"What did she look like?" asked Esther, with her face still turned toward the fire.

"O, like a girl," said Martin, "just an ordinary girl—with one of those silly caps that girls wear."

"Anything like this?" I asked, picking up Esther's cape.

Martin looked at the cape—at Esther, whose face looked very red in the firelight—at the sketch book on the table, and then at Esther again.

"I will say good-night," said Esther, rising.

"Oh, but—" stammered Martin, "you're not—"

"I was a silly little goose," said Esther, "but I wasn't a fool."

"But, my dear Miss Matthews, I was only anxious to do you a service."

"It is not pleasant," said Esther, "to be followed by a strange man."

"But I'm not a strange man," said Martin, "I've known you ever since you wore—I mean since you were quite young."

"But I didn't know it was you. How could I? You should have come and told me."

"You see, I didn't know it was you."

"You ought to have known," said Esther. "And," she continued, after a moment's pause, "if you didn't know, it was none very wrong of you to follow me—very wrong indeed."

Esther gathered up her hat, cape, gloves and sketch book, and left the room. Martin and I looked at each other.

"I say, old man," he said "you don't imagine for a moment—"

"Plain or white soda?" I inquired.—Black and White.

CYCLING COMMENT.

A man from Westfield backed his wagon into a bicycle which stood on West Front street yesterday afternoon throwing the front wheel out of gear. The owner of the wheel could not be found and the man with the horse and wagon was not inclined to wait until he could be found.

A pleasant bicycle run arranged by the cycling members of Grace M. E. church was given Monday evening in honor of Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Johnston. The run was over some of the borough's fine roads, and those who participated in the run were the Misses Alice and Grace Carroll, Margaret Schuck, Bessie Valiant, Mr. and Mrs. John Valiant, Mrs. Allen Winckler, Mr. and Mrs. Winckler, Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Johnston, Dr. H. E. Carroll, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, John Steiner, L. A. Hummer, Raymond Carroll and Dyckman Winckler.

AROUND THE BASES.

Eddie Daly's injuries are not as serious as first reported, and he will be with the Newark club next season.

Saturday's game was highly interesting, and it is unfortunate that a series of games was not started early in the season.

Frank Bonner, who was loaned to Wilkesbarre by the Brooklyn club has been recalled, and will finish the season with them.

George Leidy, who was one of the most earnest of the old Plainfield players, is on the reserved list of the Lancaster club of the Atlantic league for next season.

The "up-to-date" baseball reporter of The News should witness a few of the big league games and then he would be better qualified to criticise both umpire and players.

The wet balls used in Saturday's game were a great hindrance to the pitchers and particularly to McLaughlin, who has the most deceptive curves of any pitcher that has been on the grounds this season.

The game for blood between the Bound Brooks and Somersets on Saturday resulted in a victory for the Bound Brooks, the score being 9 to 0 at the end of the sixth inning, at which time the game was stopped by rain. Brampton and Newhouse were the battery for the winners and Work and Shaw for the Somersets. The unequal score was owing to Brampton's splendid pitching the visitors being unable to hit him.

VARIOUS SPORTS.

Two carrier pigeons from Cyrus P. Wilcox's loft at Westfield were released at Baltimore, Md., yesterday morning at 10:29. One was back in the loft at 2:20 and the other at 2:30 in the afternoon.

The match race of 100 yards between Albert P. Simmonds and Henry Brown for the amateur championship of Plainfield, will be run at the field games of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association on Oct. 10th.

Glee Club Officers.

The officers of Plainfield's new musical club, the Midmer Glee Club, are as follows: President, Robert M. Clark; business manager, A. H. Cornish; musical director, William E. MacClymont. The club is composed of the following: First tenors, Robert M. Clark and Herbert Schutt; second tenors; Edward O. Clark and Charles H. Angleman; first bases; A. H. Cornish and William E. MacClymont; second basses; B. T. Barnes and Wyatt E. Barnes.

Professional Wheelmen Here.

The following professional wheelmen are stopping at the Revere House: Tom Cooper, A. E. Webb, F. E. Schefski, W. C. Pelot, Arthur Gardner, W. B. Young, Otto Ziegler, R. F. Aylward, Harry C. Clark, W. P. Stanton, A. S. Kimble, W. W. Reedy, Chas. A. Wells, J. B. Bowler, Pat O'Connor, F. H. Allen, Fred Longhead, Wm. Hyland, A. J. Stackpole, E. K. Kiser.

Borough High School Reception.

A reception will be given at the North Plainfield High School, Saturday afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock. Only the parents of the High School scholars will be invited. Prof. Maxwell Bingham, of Boston, will give readings and there will be instrumental music by Mrs. Bennett.

—Charles Dickenson, the renowned colored orator, will address the colored Republican voters at their headquarters on East Front street this evening.

—The carnival committee will meet tomorrow evening at eight o'clock at the Board of Trade rooms to settle up accounts and decide on a time when the prizes shall be awarded.

—Chas. Woolston, of Fairview avenue, collided with an out-of town cyclist Monday afternoon, while returning from practice with the Alls football team. His wheel was wrecked and his hand was badly cut.

NEW BUILDING AND LOAN

ASSURED STOCK A FEATURE OF THE NEW ORGANIZATION.

John M. Hetfield President of the Plainfield Branch—Loss of Stock by Death is Said to be Almost Impossible

The members of the local board of the new Home Building Loan and Savings Association of New Jersey, which perfected an organization in this city on Thursday evening last, met in the office of S. S. Swackhamer, in the Babcock building last evening, with President John M. Hetfield in the chair. The meeting was informal in its nature, and only a few shares were disposed of.

Messrs. Flynn and Senger, direct from the home office in Newark, explained at length the plans and scope of the organization. It was decided that the regular meetings of the association should be held on the third Tuesday evening in each month, and until further notice in Lawyer Swackhamer's office.

One of the special advantages offered by the New Home Building Loan and Savings Association, is the provision which is made to the holders of its "assured stock," by guaranteeing the immediate maturity of the shares, in the event of death before the expiration of the time necessary to maturity.

Under the "local" system, if a borrower should secure from the association, say $2,000, and should have paid several years on his loan and should then die, the burden of paying off the balance would naturally fall upon his wife or children, who might not be in a position to discharge the obligation thus imposed upon them and would of necessity be compelled to seek a settlement of their difficulty through the Association, at a possible forfeiture of their interests.

Under the plan of the New Home Building, Loan a d Savings Association such a loss would be utterly impossible, as the holder of an assured stock certificate would be protected by insurance to the full extent of the maturity value of the shares, from the very minute he receives his certificate or pays his first dollar.

By this system the most perfect and satisfactory results can be realized, and at the same time it is possible to offer to the investing public the advantages of a system which embraces all the merits of a life insurance policy, without sacrificing any of the elements of a high-class investment. An example of the cost is this:

Cost of stock	50 cts. per share per month
Total number of payments	120 months
Maturity value	$100
Total cost	60
Profit on investment	$ 40

The new officers are: President, J. M. Hetfield; Secretary, Nelson Runyon; Treasurer, S. S. Swackhamer; Directors, J. P. Homan, L. L. Manning, N. Runyon, T. J. Carey, J. M. Hetfield, S. S. Swackhamer and Dr. Andrew Manning.

meets, Cooper won four out of the six national championships.

Fred Longhead is acknowledged to be the champion of Canada, holding the same honors as a professional this year as he did as an amateur last season. Then he made the most remarkable record that has been made since the days of Zimmerman, winning no less than seventy-three first prizes in the amateur ranks, and incidentally several world's records and all of the Canadian championships. Longhead has been on the national circuit about two months and has acquitted himself so well that his admirers look upon him as one of the possible champions of the coming season.

One of the most talented road riders in the United States is A. C. Mertens, of Minneapolis, who has it to his credit that he has lost but one road race in his life, in that taking second time and place to Birnie Bird, the king of the Northwest. Mertens began track work at the Illinois state meet, in June, and has ridden with success throughout the national circuit. He is a strong unpaced rider, and has been employed extensively as a single pacemaker in a number of the fast opens that have been run.

Eddie Cannon Bald is so well known that but little need be said in introducing him. For the last three or four years Bald has been one of the most prominent figures on the the racing path, and his performances have always been of such a high order that people have looked upon him as the most likely successor of the great Zimmerman. Bald closed last season the undisputed king of the path, and has done such brilliant work at times this season that his friends have not lost faith in him. Last Saturday, at Manhattan Beach track, he won a half mile handicap from scratch in 1 1-5, world's record time, which goes to show the magnificent form he is in, a form that will make him a prominent factor in the races here.

PROTECTION AND GOLD

ENTHUSIASTIC REPUBLICAN MEETING IN MUSIC HALL.

Addressed by a Laboring Man, Who Says That McKinley is One of the Best Friends the Laboring Man Ever Had

The voters who like wild campaign enthusiasm were all remembered at the Republican mass meeting held at Music Hall Tuesday. Of course, you can't expect to pack the hall with the rain coming down by the bucketful outside, but considering the storm the audience was surprisingly large. The lower floor was comfortably filled, while there was a good showing in the gallery. While some of the seats were vacated before the speeches were over, most of the audience remained as interested listeners until the band struck up a closing selection and the lasting McKinley men of the town filed off the platform.

The Plainfield Cornet Band was to have paraded the streets before the meeting to draw out a crowd, but the torrents of rain that was falling made that impossible, and the band played at the entrance to the hall instead until 8 o'clock, when the musicians adjourned to the hall.

After an opening selection, a medley of patriotic airs, President Charles J. Fisk, of the Plainfield McKinley and Hobart Club, stepped to the front and called the meeting to order, welcoming all to the meeting. He then announced that Donald McInnes was chairman, and that gentleman took the chair. He read a list of the other officers of the meeting which was as follows:

Secretaries—P. N. Kline, W. Harrison Simpson, J. E. Flannery, E. H. Bird, Martin Lance, G. W. F. Randolph, Chas. H. Randolph and William C. Baker.

Vice presidents — Herbert Schilliger, D. C. Allen, Chas. Davis, John Clifton, Wm. Carson, Robert Gow, A. Martell, Walter Pearson, Wm. McArdle, James Stewart, David Morning, Andrew McConnell, Wm. Jukes, John W. Poole, Jos. Chapot, Alex. Gilbert, I. P. Mason, D. W. Mitchell, David Thurworth, E. R. Ackarman, F. W. Runyon, Morris Sorensen, William Messerschmidt, Howard Cooper, Rob't Armstrong, Harold Serrell, W. W. Corisll, F. O. Lounsbury, J. L. Moore, Wm. H. Moore, F. S. Runyon, John McInerney, James Carney, James Muldowney, J. F. MacDonald, Alex. Mallinson, Fred Dunn, Wm. Addis, I. L. McVoy, Samuel P. T. Wilbur, H. W. Force, Randolph Marsh, A. Sargeant, James Clarkson, W. J. Ford, Paul Symons, C. Jones, W. E. Alpaugh, Joseph W. Morrison, Samuel Wilson, Louis Peterson, Aug. Boutren, John S. Foster, D. P. Hicks, J. P. Rogers, John Porter, Wm. Rankin, Fred Sears, Richard Higham, S. A. Ginus, J. B. Dumont, W. R. Cosgrove, Leonard Spangenberg, Fred Hand, Clif. Wharton, Jr., Wm. Scribner, Howard Templin, Michael Doyle, Ed. Schuck, Frank Carter and C. W. Smith.

After the usual remarks of the chairman, he stated that some objected to gold bugs, others to silver bugs, so that they had a common "bug" to say something. Fred Walker, one of the principal representatives of the laboring class in the pottery interest at Trenton, was then introduced, and spoke for over an hour on the leading political questions of the day. Mr. Walker is a potter himself and he showed himself to be thoroughly espoused to the cause of McKinley and the two most important planks in the Republican platform, the gold standard and protection.

After a few preliminary remarks on the fudemency of the weather, he said he brought the greetings of the west to the east, especially from the native State of the Republican candidate, Ohio, which, he said, was going to give a majority of 100,000 to McKinley.

He then turned to the issues in the coming election. For the workingman, according to his statement, on one side stands sound money, low taxes and protection, and on the other, repudiation, tariff reform, or, in other words, free trade and anarchy. The financial question was one no one could ignore. He then began an arraignment of Bryan and how he promises all sorts of things without telling how he expects them to be accomplished. He called history to his aid and declared that Bryan's plan to create a new value for silver was impossible. No act of any country could regulate or create the value of money, that it must depend on the markets of the world.

It was all, he declared, a scheme of the western mine owners and was a fake boom similar to the boom of free trade several years ago. He then went on to explain that the argument of the silver men was that free silver was going to increase the circulation,

HOW TO GET STRONG.

William Blaikie Tells the Ins and Outs of Muscular Development.

The inclement weather, coupled with the several other meetings and attractions, Tuesday night, was undoubtedly the cause of the small attendance at the lecture given in the Y. M. C. A. course by Prof. William Blaikie in the Association Hall.

There were, nevertheless, about 100 persons present, and they were amply repaid for going. President William D. Murray announced the lecturer and his subject: "How to Get Strong."

Prof. Blaikie said in part: We spend $100,000,000 annually to educate the mind. Plato says we should give money to educate both bodily and spiritually. The average city boy couldn't milk a cow if you'd give it to him, but in the gymnasium he's right at home. In the gymnasium it requires brains the same as in school. Hanlon, the barsman, and Sullivan, the prize-fighter, each developed a different set of muscles. The average athlete aspires for money and honor. Go, if you will, from New York up through the Connecticut Valley and you'll find cramed-neck men and pigeon-toed women, all the result of contracted muscles. Low heels, broad soles—so the toes can get near the ground—is essential, and walking, preferable to street cars, is a point in favor of muscular development. It has been said that a woman laughed herself out of dyspepsia and her children inherited the complaint. Now they are laughing children.

Here the lecturer told an amusing incident of a farmer, known as "Uncle Josh," who was visiting city friends and was about to converse with his wife miles away, over the telephone. Just then a flash of lightning run in over the wire and knocked the farmer down. "That's her," said the farmer as he left the phone in disgust.

Dr. Shrady, the specialist, says dyspepsia is not a disease of the stomach, but of the legs. One of God's noblest men, Gladstone, now verging on his ninety-first year, said: "Of money and brains there are plenty, but what is required is a vigorous heart and one of great resistence."

Comparing the health of children, Prof. Blaikie said that in New York the average playground was about the size of a postage stamp. Nothing, he considered, pays better for the general health than a well-kept gymnasium. Muscles or intellect can never be obtained by study alone, but it requires good, sound judgment and practical exercise to develop the muscles and thus become strong in body.

Here the speaker paused while certain questions were asked him. Concerning basket ball, he replied that it was good healthy exercise and bicycle riding, he conjectured, would materially aid in developing the muscles, provided it was not indulged in to excess. The man who runs half an hour each day is far better off, physically, than the average bicycle rider.

FREEMAN O. WILLEY'S CANDIDACY.

Union County Democrats Will Probably Give Him Congressional Nomination.

Former Judge Freeman O. Willey, of Orange, will, from all present indications, be the man who today will receive the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Eighth New Jersey District, says a news dispatch from Elizabeth. Mr. Willey's friends have been quietly, but none the less energetically, working for him in Elizabeth and Union county, which can alone nominate the candidate if its vote is polled solidly for him. This, added to the vote of Orange, which he will undoubtedly have, will secure him the nomination.

Mr. Willey made a favorable impression Monday night at the Caledonian Rink meeting, where he spoke on less than two hours' notice, and he promised, if nominated, to contest every inch of the county with the Republican candidate.

There has been a quiet conference of the leaders among the silver Democrats here during the past few days, and it has been practically decided, since James E. Martine will not permit his name to be used, to support the candidacy of the Orange man.

Westfield Y. M. C. A. Disbands.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Westfield Young Men's Christian Association, held in the association rooms on Elm street, last Thursday night, the president and a handful of the board decided to hand in their resignations. As no effective plan could be suggested to improve the financial affairs, it was voted to discontinue the work and disband the organization.

BRYANITES IN MAJORITY

MORE FREE SILVER MEN THAN GOLD MEN PRESENT.

A Poll Showed Eight Bryan, Three McKinley and Two Palmer Men Were at the Gold Meeting—E. C. Pearson Talked Gold

The wet weather did not keep everybody away from the sound money meeting held in the West End under the auspices of the National Democratic Club of this city, Tuesday night, and there was a fair audience present. The meeting was called to order by President Atterbury, who introduced the speaker of the evening, Edward C. Pearson, who spoke in part as follows:

"For the first time in twenty-six years there has been a great revolt against the Democratic party. The cause of the first revolt twenty-six years ago was during the war, and the present revolt is just as serious and means just as much. The question now is how will free coinage affect us as wage-earners? For I am a wage-earner. I get my money from a corporation, and I am just as anxious to make it go as far as possible. The government alone can coin money, and free coinage means that the government would coin all silver bullion into money for anyone without charge. Our government certificates pass unchallenged everywhere, but it is not so with silver. All money must have a value independent of the government stamp. In 1894 one-sixth of the product of the silver mines was used in the arts. The silver certificates we use is all money, but a promise of the government to pay money.

Mr. Pearson then went on to tell how prices would rise under the free and unlimited coinage of silver, while the wage-earner would not have as much money. He said that their would be a terrible panic under the change of money standard and wages would be the last thing to recover from the depression.

Mr. Atterbury then spoke briefly substantiating Mr. Pearson's remarks. John Neilson, a merchant in the audience, took occasion to criticize Mr. Atterbury several times and expressed his loyalty to Bryan. He thought Mr. Atterbury was all wrong.

A vote was taken at the meeting showing that eight favored Bryan, three McKinley and two Palmer. Mr. Atterbury said he was glad that the Bryan men were in the majority, for the meetings were held expressly for them. It was then announced that E. C. Perkins would speak at the meeting to be held tomorrow evening.

A GREAT CATCH.

Counselor McClure Captured a Three-Pound Trout Up In Maine.

The average fisherman has wonderful stories to tell of his catches, but the result of his prowess is for some reason not at hand. The friends of Counselor William K. McClure have heard great tales of his experiences on the preserves of the Megantic Fish and Game Corporation during the summer, but now he has produced the finny hero of one of his stories and even the incredulous cannot help but believe.

It is a very large brook trout, weighing three pounds and measuring a trifle over twenty inches long. He captured it after a battle of about fifteen minutes and his guide, John Boyle, skinned the victim.

The skin, with head and tail attached, is now on exhibition in the window of The Daily Press office, as is also the cast with which he captured this speckled beauty.

Frightened by an Empty Pistol.

Nicholas Schoonmacher, of Westfield, got into an altercation Saturday afternoon with Thomas Manning and threatened to shoot him with an empty pistol. Manning did not know that the pistol was empty and he was badly scared until Irving Ross disarmed Schoomacher. Manning made complaint against Schoomacher and he will be tried.

An Inspiring Influence.

Prof. John Dalziel is in receipt of the following:

1324 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, September 26th, 1896.

It gives me pleasure and satisfaction to contribute a word for Mr. John Dalziel, who was a teacher of my own some years past, and for ability and character has been respectfully remembered as a conscientious and inspiring influence on my early career in my work. Respectfully bearing my name to this testimony, I am sincerely yours,

Miss Barber Stephens.

A Westfield Divorce.

Mrs. Nellie Claxton Wroe, of Westfield, has just received from the Court of Chancery a decree of absolute divorce from her husband, John E. Wroe. The decree gives Mrs. Wroe the custody of their five year old child. The grounds were neglect and desertion.

CAN'T PAY A DOLLAR FINE

AGED MAN SENT TO JAIL FOR ALLOWING FOWLS TO TRESPASS.

Carl Neustitter, of Scotch Plains, May Remain in the County Jail Indefinitely Owing to His Inability to Settle a Fine.

In default of $1 fine, imposed for permitting his chickens to trespass on a neighbor's property, Carl Neustitter, seventy-five years old, of Scotch Plains, was placed in the Union county jail at Elizabeth Tuesday, to remain until the fine and costs are paid —says the New York Herald. This imprisonment is likely to be indefinite unless sympathetic friends come to his rescue, as the old man has not a dollar in the world.

Neustitter was arrested at his home yesterday on the complaint of Alexander McCauly, a neighbor, who charged that the old man allowed his fowls to trespass upon McCauly's farm. The old man told Justice Clark, of Fanwood, before whom he was arraigned, that he was unaware that his chickens were bothering his neighbors and would endeavor to prevent any further trouble.

This defence did not suit the Justice, who declared Neustitter guilty and imposed a fine of $1, the costs to follow. The aged prisoner declared that he hadn't a dollar in the world; that the small sum he managed to earn as a helper on a stone crusher was barely sufficient to furnish food and clothes for himself and his seventy-year-old wife. Even this plea failed to touch the heart of the Justice, who, in default of payment, committed the old man to the county jail, where he arrived yesterday.

Surprise and indignation are expressed over the summary action of the complainant and Justice in forcing so old a man to jail for so trivial an offence.

Two News Untruths.

Last evening the News devoted nearly a half column in telling its readers how the members of Grace M. E. church were going to build an addition to their church. A Press representative called on a prominent officer of the church to ascertain how much truth was contained in the article He was informed that there was not the first grain of truth in the article and that it was the first he had heard of it. The News is given to publishing such stories. Only a short time ago they told how the members of the Church of the Redeemer had purchased the lot at the corner of Grove street and Prospect place and were going to build a church there. The fact is that no property has as yet been secured and the members have no idea as to where they will erect their church. These are but two of the many instances where people have been misrepresented and placed in a false light before the public.

Democratic Delegates.

Owing to the rain Tuesday night no Democratic primary meetings were held in the Third and Fourth wards. In the First ward the delegates elected were John F. McIntyre and Michael J. DeCourey. In the Second ward Charles Stover was chosen chairman of the meeting, and Frank Stover secretary. James Guttridge and Frank Foseller were elected delegates. The Congressional convention will be held tomorrow at Elizabeth, at which time a candidate for Congress will be named.

Ready for the Winter Season.

The building of the Plainfield Catholic Club has, during the past summer, been undergoing a thorough rejuvenation, and the alleys are now being put in shape for bowling, which will probably begin the latter part of this week. The reception rooms, halls and smoking rooms have been generally overhauled and put in first-class shape.

Remodeling the Glove Factory.

The H. Texier glove factory at Washington ville has been undergoing great repairs. The building is being thoroughly remodeled. A new waterwheel is being put in by C. Mooney, and the stone foundation walls, which have stood intact since 1816, are being torn away and new ones substituted.

Taking in the Sights.

Among the Plainfielders who are attended the Inter-State Fair at Trenton yesterday are John Ross, Henry Clay Randolph, J. D. Runyon, Mr. Randolph, Geo. Mehl, James H. Manning, J. J. Kenney, Geo. Cole, H. Southard, Geo. Feiring, E. Nelson and G. S. Whitlock.

County School Superintendents.

The State Board of Education met in Asbury Park, Tuesday, and elected the following County School Superintendents: Cape May, Aaron W. Hand; Middlesex, A. Brewster Willis; Sussex, Luther Hill; Morris, M. L. Cox; Somerset, J. A. Metz; Ocean, F. A. North.

Walter Carter, of New Providence, was the guest of Plainfield friends yesterday.

ELABORATE DECORATIONS.

Plainfield Will be in Gala Attire for the Knights' Field Day.

All that the Knights Templar need today to make their field day a success is fine weather, and the present prospects are that they will have it. A large crowd is assured and at the rate that the decorating is going on the city is likely to present a gay appearance. Professional artists and amateurs are at work on the various buildings on the principal thoroughfares, giving them their holiday dress that will, most of it, remain for a week. While the Stars and Stripes and tri-colored bunting are principally used by those who desire to decorate especially for the Knights, many will use black and white. The emblems consist of a Passion and Maltese cross and a crown and crown.

The following line of march has been selected: The line will form at 2 o'clock p. m. sharp on Park avenue, right resting on Seventh street, and the centre will be at the Revere House.

The dress parade will start promptly at 2:15 and will proceed as follows: Park avenue to Seventh street, to Liberty street, to Eighth street, to Crescent avenue, to LaGrande avenue, to Franklin place, to Watchung avenue, to Seventh street, to Park avenue, to Somerset street to Craig place, to Grove street, to Mercer avenue, to Sycamore avenue, to Miller street, to Washington avenue, to Prospect place, to Grove street, to Front street, where the Grand Commander and other Grand officers, together with distinguished guests, will review the parade.

The work of decorating the arch across Park avenue at the corner of Front street was begun this morning and it has now assumed a very pretty appearance.

ARRANGING THE DETAILS.

Endeavor Leaders Talk Over Plans for the State Convention.

The '96 Christian Endeavor convention committee met Tuesday night and considered several minor details. F. H. Burke, the musical director, of Chicago, who will assist in the music at the convention, was present. He was also in attendance at the rehearsal of the choir. The hall and decorating committee decided to commence the work of decorating the convention hall today, and people will be asked to decorate their stores and houses. The entertainment committee reported that 1,400 delegates had been assigned outside of the hotels. During the evening the evangelistic committee and F. H. Burke held a short conference in regard to the music. It was stated that Mayor Gilbert had given permission to allow the Junior Christian Endeavorers to parade on Friday afternoon of the convention week, and also to hold public meetings at noon on Thursday and Friday near the Babcock building. The last meeting of the convention committee will be held next Tuesday evening.

For the Endeavorers.

The following notes are taken from the official programme of the Christian Endeavor convention which was issued yesterday:

Evangelistic Headquarters—Room at right of entrance to hall. Please call there.

Historian's Headquarters—Room at right of entrance to hall. He wants to see you.

Missionary Headquarters—M. E. Building. Don't forget to call, or you will be sorry you didn't.

State Officers' Headquarters—Revere House, Parlor A. Please call and become acquainted.

C. A. building. Always glad to see you.

Registration and Assignment Committee—Headquarters—First floor of building. Report there immediately on arrival; register and have your badge and programme. You must register in person.

Convention Information and Bureau of Information—In registry room at First Baptist church. Have mail addressed in care of the convention, and call for it there.

Reception Committee—Will meet you at depot and escort you to Registry Hall, where guides will be provided to show you to your boarding places.

Ladies—Big hats are pretty, we know, but do not wear them in the hall or churches; they don't encourage a devotional spirit in the back of them.

Bring if you can: If you can't, mind anyway. Think of others. Pray for others. Help others. Work for others.

Remember the Object and Spirit of Convention—To be helped that we may help others. They that water shall be watered themselves and consecrated to serve.

Don't talk, sing! Don't read; it helps the speakers and helps the audience.

Be all sunshine in and out. Be helpful to the sons of which you are entertained. You may help to save a soul there.

Soon to Be a Thing of the Past.

The matter of moving the freight-house, over which there has been so much talk, will soon become a reality. It is now thought that on Sunday next at least a portion of the old freight-house will be transferred on flat cars to the new location near Grant avenue. Sunday is the day selected because there is less travel over the road at that time than any other day in the week, and besides, on account of the width of the building, it will be necessary to block up several of the tracks while the transfer is being made. This morning workmen commenced to take off the roof, platforms, etc., preparatory to removing the building.

Miss Lottie Cockley, of Manson place, is learning to be a compositor at the News office.

GOT THE RIG AT LAST.

UNCLE DAN ROBERTS FINDS HIS PROPERTY UP IN CONNECTICUT.

A Persistent Search Was Kept Up and Reward Finally Came in the Location of the Thief Now in Jail in New York.

The old saying that "Murder will out" is equally true of horse thieving, and a verification of the fact has just come to light. Eleven months ago a man named Towers, giving his residence as New York State, walked into "Uncle" Dan Roberts' livery stable and hired a horse and buggy. He said he was only going to be absent a short time, but it proved to be very long, for Mr. Roberts did not see the rig again until yesterday. Every effort was made on the part of the owner and Chief Grant to secure the rig, and many trips were made, but all for naught. Last December the police of Yonkers arrested Towers in that city for horse stealing, but he would give no definite information regarding the rig owned by Mr. Roberts, except to say that it was in Connecticut.

All the time a still hunt has been in progress. A few days ago Mr. Roberts received word that his rig was located at Stamford, Conn., and in reply to a letter sent to Chief of Police Bowman of that place by Chief Grant, sufficient evidence was secured to suspect that the missing rig was at Stamford. Tuesday Mr. Roberts and Chief Grant went to Stamford and at last found the horse and buggy. The horse was found about five miles from the city, in possession of a milkman. The robes, etc., were found in charge of Dr. J. G. Palmer, a veterinary surgeon, Mr. Palmer told the story of how he secured the rig from Towers. He sold the horse to the milkman, who had been using him every since. The buggy had been re-painted but "Uncle" Dan recognized it, and also the robes. He offered to sell the horse to the milkman and the buggy to Mr. Palmer. They will consider the offer and if they do not accept it, they will return the rig in a few days to the original owner.

TAKEN TO AN ASYLUM.

H. M. Clark's Mind Seems to Be Affected—Threatened to Kill His Wife.

H. M. Clark, of Grandview avenue, was arrested Tuesday by Chief Marshal Wilson for threatening to kill his wife and burn the house. Mr. Clark's actions for some time past have denoted that his mind is not perfectly sound. A few months ago he attempted to end his life by taking laudanum, but his efforts were foiled. Frequently he breaks out and his family are in deadly peril of suffering at his hands. Yesterday afternoon, Drs. Tomlinson and Carman made an examination of Clark and decided that he should go to the asylum. Today requisition papers were secured at Somerville and Clark was taken to Trenton, where he will be properly cared for.

Hackmen's Continuous Show.

Hackman Charles Barry is in trouble again and it is likely that the trouble will prove quite serious for him. Wm. Drake, another hackman, made a complaint last Wednesday charging Barry with leaving his horse's head and soliciting customers from the curb this morning. Drake says that he can prove the charge without trouble. Barry has been arrested two or three times already on similar charges and found guilty. Only last Saturday he was brought before Judge DeMeza and the latter cautioned him that any future breaking of the ordinance would bring him a heavy fine.

Ran a Nail in His Foot.

Louis Bennett, one of the efficient clerks in the grocery of J. A. Smith & Bros., on West Front street, met with a painful accident Wednesday. He was hurrying through the store when he stepped on a box cover out of which a wire nail projected with point up. The nail went through his shoe and into his foot for over an inch inflicting a very painful wound. The wound was dressed at Randolph's pharmacy, and he was able to hobble about.

Withdrew the Application.

When the Seguine application for a license was taken up in New Brunswick last Friday, Judge Coddington, of this city, arose and stated that he was there to oppose the granting of the license. Counsel Schenck, for the applicant, then withdrew the application.

Frey Discharged.

Charles Frey was Tuesday night discharged in Justice Newcorn's court on two charges of assault and battery brought against him by his wife and an officer. The alleged assault took place sometime ago, and since then he has been under $100 bonds on each charge.

THE DAM WILL BE BUILT

THE TOWNSHIP COMMITTEE CONVINCED THAT IT WILL BE SAFE.

A. B. Nelson, the Civil Engineer, Has Examined the Plans and Specifications and Finds No Cause for Alarm Whatever

It now looks as though the building of an ice pond and a dam in Washington Valley is a sure thing. Thursday night Andrew Wilson and Harrison Coddington, of the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company, appeared before the township committee, which met at Demler's Hotel, and submitted plans for the construction of the pond and dam. The dam is to be four hundred and forty-four feet wide, with a seventy foot bottom and a ten foot top. The stone work is to be one hundred and twenty feet high. The flood gate is to be five feet wide and eight feet high. The dam is run from the raceway near the Luersen property property to the Sterling road.

The committee think that so long as a proper flood gate is built, they see no reason why permission to construct the pond and dam should not be given, and it is reasonably safe to predict that the permission will be given. The committee received a petition from ten property owners living near the proposed pond, and they asked the committee to refuse the company the privilege. The petition was laid on the table.

Alfred B. Nelson, the civil engineer, has examined the plans and specifications for the new dam and ice pond of the company, and makes the following optomistic observations:

Having noted in your columns of Tuesday and Wednesday articles about the proposed ice pond being built by the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company, which articles have a tendency to create alarm in the minds of some timid residents of Plainfield, I took advantage of an opportunity today to examine the location and work in progress, and, knowing that your aim is to be right, I give you the result of my observations. The company will own upwards of fourteen acres of land but only about ten acres of it will be covered with water. The dam will be of earth and stone. The extreme lenghth on top being 428 feet, 120 feet of which will be a stone core thirty feet high, six feet thick at the buttom and four feet thick at the top, which stone work will be reinforced by an earth embankment thirty-nine feet thick at the bottom. At each end of the stone work, the dam will be built entirely of earth put in in layers and thoroughly puddled. It will reach four feet higher than the overflow, will be ten feet thick at the top, twenty-two feet thick at the water level and sixty-one feet thick at the bottom. The greatest depth of water will be fourteen and a half feet while the average depth will be only five and three quarters feet. These details of construction I got from H. C. Smith, the engineer in charge.

Now, as to the quantity of water stored in this pond and its menace to life and property. There will be stored about 2,500,000 cubic feet or 500,000 barrels of water. This volume of water is less than one-quarter of the quantity which falls during any good summer shower upon the land drained by this brook, or less than one-quarter the quantity you have had fall upon the city of Plainfield during one hour of rainfall in many of the storms which we have all witnessed. And should there come a storm or flood sufficiently severe to destroy this dam, it would not suddenly give way from the pressure, but by the water being carried over the earthen portion and gradually eating it away; and the "Oldest Inhabitant" has never seen that stream, which is about the size of Cedar brook, increase to a volume of 120 feet in width by four feet deep, which would be necessary in order to wash away the embankments. Or could you by some means cause this dam to suddenly disappear and pour the water out on the valley below, there would be no vertical wall of the maddened elements seeking out human victims, for the valley broadens just below the dam, and the water would spread over this land before passing through the "Notch," so that by the time it reached Cedar brook it would hardly overflow the banks.

In fact, this dam is less of a menace to the citizens of Plainfield than the dam at South Plainfield is to the people of New Market and the valley below. And if it is fear for the safety of life or property that called forth the articles which have appeared in answer, let those timid ones go on the ground and examine for themselves, and I am satisfied we will hear on more about it.

SUING FOR A DIVORCE.

A LONG RUMORED SOCIFTY SENSATION BECOMES A REALITY.

Mrs. George W. Endicott Institutes a Suit for Absolute Divorce and Alimony From Her Husband—Names Six Corespondents

What has been rumored and gossiped about in society circles for some time past, has at last become a reality—the institution of divorce proceedings by Mrs. Tillie C. Endicott against her husband, Dr. George W. Endicott, of Park avenue and East Seventh street. The suit is for absolute divorce upon statutory grounds.

Mrs. Endicott, through her attorneys, McCarter, Williams & McCarter, of Newark, has filed a petition for divorce in the Chancery Court at Trenton. She sets forth that she was married to Dr Endicott on November 16th, 1876, and that one child, George W. Endicott, Jr., now six years old, is the result of the marriage. The offences charged against her husband, are numerous, and cover a period of six years.

She names six co-respondents, among whom is a domestic servants and women mingling in the best of society.

The bill says that these persons are all residents of Plainfield, but the offences which Mrs. Endicott claims occurred took place in several parts of New Jersey, chiefly at Asbury Park and Long Branch.

Mrs. Endicott asks the Court to allow her temporary and permanent alimony and award her the custody of her child. The defendant has until October 20 in which to file his answer.

At present Mrs. Endicott is stopping at the boarding house of Mrs. Kirk, diagonally opposite the Endicott residence on the corner of Park avenue and Seventh street. A Press reporter saw Craig H. Marsh, Mr. Endicott's counsel, Saturday last, but he had nothing further to say than what appeared in the New York Herald this morning, which was as follows:

"I do not care to discuss the subject at this time, but I will say that we deny absolutely that there is any truth in Mrs. Endicott's accusations. At the proper time we shall prove that they are false." Mr. Marsh refused to say if Dr. Endicott intended filing a cross bill.

HIS AIM WAS POOR.

Otherwise Joseph Tice Might Now be Charged With Murder.

Joseph Tice and John Traynor, of the village of Scotch Plains, have not been on the best of terms for some time past, and the climax was reached Friday when Tice aimed a shot gun at Traynor and blazed away. It might have been murder but it wasn't, for the aim was poor and the shot missed the objective point. However, Tice was arrested and held by Judge Clark in the sum of $500 to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Nor is this all. Traynor swore out a warrant for the arrest of Tice, charging him with confiscating $25 from Traynor's house within the past three or four weeks. Tice was also held in the same amount for the Grand Jury.

Christian Alliance Convention.

The convention and annual business meeting of the Christian and Missionary Alliance commenced yesterday at Eighth avenue and Forty Fourth street, New York and will continue till October 11th. These two societies pledged over $200,000 per year in spread ing the Gospel in home and foreign lands. They have now 300 missionaries in China, Africa and other unevangelized countries. The convention will be one of unusual public interest and they expect a great number of visitors from all parts of the country.

THE CLUBHOUSE OPENED

COSY QUARTERS FOR THE HILLSIDE CLUB AT THEIR GOLF COURSE.

All the Cream of Plainfield's Society Was Present and Were Entertained in a Royal Manner by the Lady Members.

The formal opening of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club's new home on Plainfield avenue, Saturday afternoon, was a brilliant social event, attended by nearly all of Plainfield's society people who are admirers of both tennis and golf.

The new clubhouse is all that one can wish for and is admirably adapted for the needs of the members. It is a one-story structure, finished in colonial style, with one large reception room, containing an old fashioned fireplace. Around the room are placed comfortable chairs, large, handsome rugs, and all that goes to make up a pleasant place for frequent gatherings. Vases and bric a-brac, the gifts of different members of the club, adorn the mantlepiece and walls.

The room was brightly illuminated toward evening with banquet lamps, and the various colored shades presented a pretty picture, while the room was graced by a number of Plainfield's charming women.

Altogether the clubhouse reflected much credit on its architect, Evarts Tracy, and the ladies who so kindly took charge of procuring the interior furnishings and the arrangement of them.

Tea was served at 3:30 o'clock. The Russian tea table was in charge of Miss Tracy, while the cafe freppe was served by Miss Stewart, and the lemonade by Miss Talmage and Miss Ginna.

Those who received were Mrs. Geo. Chapman, Mrs. A. D. Shepard, Mrs. J. Doul Miller, Mrs. J. T. Baker, Mrs. H. Asbury. They were assisted by Miss Stewart, Miss Walz, Miss Ginna, Miss Talmage, Miss Reinhart and Miss Tracy.

In connection with the arrangement of the new club-house it might be well to state that dressing rooms are provided for men and women and these rooms are very complete in every detail.

The golf tournament for men and women was started about 3 o'clock and the playing throughout was good. Especially striking was the last match. The tournament not yet decided on Saturday and it will be played off next Wednesday, as noted below. The full scores of the tournament are as follows:

May Evans	1	Martha Tracy	0
Harry D. West	1	Evarts Tracy	0
Margaret Tracy	1	Dr. Wm. Tracy	0
Fred W. Walz	1	Dr. F. C. Ard	0
Gertrude Barker	½	Gertrude Baker	½
H. H. Barker	½	Howard W. Beebe	½
Gertrude Andrews	½	Mrs. Warren	0
Mrs. Vanburen	½	Mr. Warren	1
Daisy Sheppard	1	Harry D. West	0
Fred W. Walz	1	May Evans	0

Miss Andrews and L. H. VanBuren finish even with Miss Shepard and Fred W. Walz, and they will play next Wednesday to decide the match.

A Joke on Mr. Murray.

Sometime ago Roger Murray, of Madison evening, exposed to view on the side of his house large portraits of McKinley and Hobart, and he said they would not be removed until both candidates were elected. Tuesday night someone covered McKinley's photo with one of Bryan, and the joke was not discovered till late next day, when Mrs. Murray by chance happened to notice the change. The picture was quickly removed by Mrs. Murray, who knew that it would not do to let her husband see it.

Additional Seats Needed.

IN THE EDIFICE OF GOD.

THE ENDEAVORERS HOLD A SERVICE UNDER THE CANOPY OF HEAVEN.

Large Assemblage of People Attend the Vesper Service in the City Park Yesterday Afternoon—An Inspiring Time.

Probably in all the history of Plainfield, the City Park has never witnessed just such a scene as was enacted there Sunday afternoon, when the Endeavor Societies of the city held an out-door vesper service. As the hour approached half-past four, a stream of people poured into the grove from all sides, and when the service of song began, the scene was a very pretty one. The audience, which must have included four or five hundred people, stood facing the centre of the square, and the light summer gowns of the women, with the darker costumes of the men, made a very attractive picture against the dark green of trees and grass, and the brown of the paths which intersect the square.

Leaflets containing the music which will be used at the coming convention were distributed, a large delegation from the choir which is practicing at the services was massed together in the foreground, and Horace J. Martin, in his usual inspiring manner, conducted a short service of song. "I will sing the wondrous story," rang out on the quiet Sabbath air, followed by "Sunshine in my soul," and "Anywhere with Jesus," then F. H. Andrews stepped forward and offered an earnest, heartfelt prayer. Another song, then Mr. Andrews read a selection from the Sermon on the Mount, calling attention especially to the verses which say, "Ask, and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you." "You are all praying for the Holy Spirit's presence in the convention, I know," he said. "Here is Christ's own promise, "Ask, and ye shall receive."

"According to your faith be it unto you," was the text of the short talk with which Mr. Andrews followed his scripture reading. He spoke of the necessity of the Holy Spirit's power in the convention if it is to be the benefit to the city and the churches which the Endeavorers are praying that it may be.

He urged a true consecration on the part of all the young people; that any sin which might be harbored in their heart should be entirely put away, and that a spirit of unselfishness and love should prevail. There are three benefits, he said, which it is hoped may come from this convention. First, there should be only the best influences thrown around the strangers who are to come into our midst. Many may be weak Christians; let them go back stronger and better from the good they have received in Plainfield's Christian homes. Then, a great blessing is desired for the churches of the city. We need rousing up; an awakening and growth in the service of God. May the convention put new life into us all. Then, we hope for a great blessing for the unconverted of the city. Mr. Moody will be here for a week, and hundreds of consecrated Christian workers are coming among us. Through those days when we meet together in Christ's name, we pray that many may be won to our Lord and Master.

Other prayers of love and praise stole out on the evening air, and one earnest worker after another in the audience offered fervent prayer for the blessing of God upon the convention and the city, while above the bowed heads of the endeavorers the sun's last rays glinted through the tops of the trees, like a golden benediction over the earnest hearts below. "God be with you till we meet again," sang the people, then the crowd dissolved among the trees, and the vesper service was only a pleasant memory, save for the desires for a deeper consecration which it might have kindled in some hearts.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation, can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A GHASTLY DISCOVERY.

DECOMPOSED CORPSE OF A MAN FOUND IN THE WOODS.

The Horrible Discovery Made by an Italian Near Fanwood—No Information Gained That Would Lead to Identification.

Horrible was the discovery made by an Italian named Michel Ricardo Sunday afternoon just as the last rays of the setting sun shone on the roofs of the town of Fanwood. Ricardo was strolling through the woods that lay to the west of Fanwood when he almost stumbled over the prostrate form of a man. His first thought was that someone had fallen asleep there but one look at the face made it very apparent that the man was dead and had been so for sometime. His face was nearly black while the skin hung down in shreds and the flesh was fast decomposing.

Frightened nearly out of his wits, the Italian made no effort to examine the corpse but hurried away. He notified the Fanwood authorities at once and County Physician Westcott went to the scene. The body was found near the end of a blind-road running close to the house of Anthony Farley, about one-half mile from the Fanwood station and not far from Terrell road.

Dr. Westcott found the body in a terrible state of decomposition, as if it had been there for some time. The features were almost unrecognizable. The hair was grey and straight. The man had apparently been about five feet, three inches in height, and between fifty and sixty years of age. He had been slightly corpulent and was apparently well formed.

The corpse was dressed in a dark suit of mixed cloth, a white shirt with a white collar and colored necktie. It as evidently that of a well dressed man and not a tramp. On his feet were Congress gaiters, badly worn. In the pockets of his suit, Dr. Wescott found a black pocket book, containing three postage stamps, two white linen handkerchiefs, one of which had the initial E on the corner, two lead pencils, a pearl handled pocket knife, containing several blades and a corkscrew, and a pair of steel rimmed eye glasses.

Close to the body a black derby, considerably blocked, was found. This was the only sign of violence as the position of the dead man had been one of rest. He was sitting up, with his head and back against a tree, his legs crossed and his hands lying in his lap.

It was impossible to tell then whether there was any sign of violence on the body. There was no evidence of a terrible conflict, but an assault and murder could have easily taken place without leaving any trace. The County Physician and the Fanwood authorities are utterly at a loss to account for the death of the stranger. Up to this morning no information about the dead man had been discovered. The body must have been there several weeks to reach its present state, and it seems strange that it has not been discovered before.

Undertaker Casey, of this city, was notified and took the corpse to his morgue where it will be frozen and an examination made to discover if there are any marks of violence.

WELCOMED HOME BY A SONNET.

Rev. C. E. Herring Given a Reception By the Members of His Church.

"Welcome Home" were the words that greeted Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, when he arrived at the chapel last Thursday to be received by the members of his church. The women of the church had arranged the reception, which was one of the most pleasant in the history of the church from a social standpoint.

A feature of the evening was the reading by Miss Petrie of some poetry recently composed by Theophilus Bond. It relates in an interesting, yet matter of fact way, Mr. Herring's trip abroad, and it will be read with great pleasure by all who know anything regarding Mr. Herring's trip. The composition is one of credit to Mr. Bond, who is not a novice in writing poetry. The lines are as follows:

Once more tonight once more we meet
Our pastor and our friend to greet;
Gladly we take you by the hand,
Safely returned from foreign land.
And so with thankful hearts we come
To bid you welcome home, welcome home.
And pray that He who hitherto
Has led you, may go with you.
We in the spirit day by day
Oft journeyed with you in the way;
Oft listened to your glorious theme
Of blessed hope and punctured fire.
Filled with your zeal to uplift your soul,
Pushing the loaded wheel ahead.
Saw you with firmer tread once more astride
And coasting down the other side.
Watched with you when the stormy night
Shrouded you, nor on their height.
When Creomotarzo you bought
And Cannel Coal you found not.
Sometime we hope to hear you tell
Of all the scenes that pleased you well:
Of Milan and of Florence, fair,
And all the treasures stored there;
Of ancient and of modern Rome,
Of Naples, Pompeii and your home.
And lastly, all your perils o'er,
Of Hoboken and the shore.

Those in charge of the reception were: Mrs. Howard Pope, Mrs. Fred Williams, Mrs. Searing, Mrs. William Sagerson, Mrs. Fred Martin, Mrs. J. M. Drayton, Mrs. Robert Radford and Miss Agnes Blair. Miss Blair very kindly devoted her efforts to decorating the church. During the evening refreshments, consisting of coffee, cake, cream and sandwiches, were served.

COLORED G. O. P. VOTERS

MEN OF THEIR OWN RACE TELL THEM HOW TO VOTE.

One Speaker Says the Colored Man Was Born a Republican and Will Die That Way—Democrats Are Slow.

The colored Republicans of this city held a mass meeting in the Republican Association rooms on East Front street last Wednesday, and the attendance was large. Rev. P. S. Gibson, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church, called the meeting to order, and Rev. C. Jackson offered prayer. L. L. Croom presided and R. J. Terrell was the secretary. The following list of vice presidents and secretaries were named: Vice-presidents—Daniel Brown, L. L. Croom, W. J. Douglass, A. S. Venable, James Babbitt, George Vanblake, Robert Randolph, Wm. Mayhew, Spencer Conway, Wm. A. Kline, Tyler Johnson, Fernando Brown, Abram Brown, Samuel Green and Lewis Peterson. Secretaries—Wm. Fisher, Lewis Peterson, Joseph Saunders, Frank Nelson, Robert Terrell, James Brown, A. E. Butler, Grant Cannon, Fred White, Brother Norwood, Brent Gibson, Charles Barber and Benjamin Sutton.

The first speaker announced was Rev. Chas. H. Dickerson, a member of the Republican County Committee of Essex county. "We have entered upon a campaign of education," he said, "and it is hardly necessary to send a missionary here to create a Republican party among the colored voters. We were born Republicans and as such we will die in the faith. It won't do to persecute the man who goes astray from the Republican ranks, but it is the duty of the honest voter to take him by the hand and lead him back into the straight and narrow way.

"Free silver is a license to evil-doing and the dominant Democratic party believe in this. Bryan is not to be despised on account of his youth, but, on account of his 16 to 1 policy, Bryan came from the Platte River region and the river itself is shallow. The Republican party has so much good material in its ranks that it cannot all be woven into the fabrical government." The speaker said that a Democrat was a bad enemy but a Populist was even worse. The black man is usually honest until he gets with the white man. In closing he admonished his hearers to accept all the money proffered them and then go to the poles and vote the straight Republican ticket.

D. W. Griffin, assistant war den in the Hudson county jail, was the next speaker. The tariff, he said originated in Tariffa, Spain, and it was first introduced in this country during the time of James Madison. He explained the working of the tariff system and admonished the women folks to influence their husbands to vote for a free and unrestricted ballot. The colored race, he said, was the greatest and most intelligent race on the face of the earth. As doctors, lawyers and ministers they can't be beat, and in the matter of self defence they can't be beat.

One other speaker made a few remarks and the meeting came to an end.

AN IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL.

The Final Obsequies Over the Remains of the Late Mrs. Schoettlin.

Exceedingly impressive were the funeral services of the late Mrs. Mark Schoettlin, were held Friday morning at 9 o'clock from the house, 19 Linden avenue, and later from the German Reformed church. Rev. Geo. Hauser officiated and a short service was held at the house. At the church Mr. Hauser conducted the service both in English and German. The attendance of relatives and friends was very large and included a large delegation from the singing section of the Gesang and Turn Verein, who rendered several appropriate selections. There was a profusion of beautiful floral tributes consisting of two large pillows bearing the inscriptions "Wife" and "Mamma," a crescent of white roses, an anchor of white roses with a base of pink roses, a star of white orchids and several bunches of cut flowers.

Mr. Schoettlin's associates in the Prudential Insurance Company's office gave a large broken column of white chrysanthemums, orchids, violets and maiden-hair fern. After the services the remains were taken to Elizabeth where a short service was held at the home of the decedent's mother who, owing to illness, was not able to attend the services in this city. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery, Elizabeth.

THE "COUNT" DISCHARGED.

No Effort Made to Extradite the Alleged Defaulting Banker.

"Count" Alberico Caroselli, the alleged absconding banker, was brought from Elizabeth Thursday last and arraigned before Justice Newcorn. The fact that the New York authorities failed to furnish requisition papers, and that no one appeared against the "Count," gave the Judge no sufficient reason to hold him. He was accordingly discharged.

THE CHEAP DOLLAR GHOST DANCE.

Big Medicine Bryan, chief of the 16-to-1 braves, is leading a wild ghost dance around the sacred Totem of the 51-cent dollar. But nobody need be afraid of these howling warriors, for their clubs are stuffed with wind and their tomahawks are only pasteboard. They are making lots of noise, but they won't go on the warpath, for their medicine man believes in trying to scare his enemies by long range talking. Let 'em howl!

WHY HE TOOK IT OFF.

He Concluded That Bryan Badges Don't Look Well on Farmers With Overdue Mortgages.

The following is the substance of a conversation that took place a few days ago in a rural county of New York:

Neighbor—Hello, George! You wearing a free silver badge?

Farmer—Ept I Don't it look fine?

N.—It looks all right, but if you knew what it means I don't believe you'd be wearing it.

F.—I rather guess I would. You know I have a mortgage on my farm?

N.—Yes, but I don't see how free coinage will give you money to pay it off.

F.—Don't expect it will right away, but it will make it easier for me to get money in that I can pay it some time. It will raise the prices of what I have to sell without adding anything to the mortgage.

N.—But don't you know that it would increase the price of what you have to buy, even more than of what you have to sell? But, say, George, isn't your mortgage overdue?

F.—Yes, it is—more than two years.

N.—Well, now, if that's so, you are certainly making a mistake to vote for Bryan.

F.—How so?

N.—Don't you see that it will compel the holder of that mortgage to foreclose it? Just as soon as Bryan is elected. As soon as it becomes probable that he will be elected, every holder of overdue mortgages will arrange to foreclose them. They won't wait to see what a Bryan dollar will look like, but will take your farm if you don't at once pay off the mortgage in dollars as good as gold?

F.—Do you think they would?

N.—Certainly. I'd do so myself rather than wait and be compelled by law to accept a cheaper dollar. So would you if you had money loaned out. So would anybody. Men don't loan money for fun, and they don't care to lose half of their principal.

F.—May be you're right. If you are, I certainly don't want to vote to have my mortgage foreclosed. I couldn't raise money to pay it now; that's sure.

The next day the farmer had parted company with his Bryan badge, and when last seen was giving his reasons to another farmer in the same boat the other farmer also threw his silver badge away.

Senator Mills For Gold.

In 1879 gold became the standard which measured all values in this country. It is now the standard, the unit-ton standard, of value of the commercial world. * * * I denounce now in this country the attempt to shift and change the standard of values for the purpose of enabling the debtor to cheat and defraud his creditor out of one-half of what he has promised him and in doing so to put the country upon a variable and shifting standard of value, by which the people will be plundered continuously from one end of it to the other. Every contract now in existence in the United States made since 1879 is on the gold standard, and where a dollar is mentioned it means a gold dollar or one as good as gold, and I will never vote for any law that enables a man to cancel an obligation to pay 100 cents by paying 87 cents.—Senator Roger Q. Mills in the Senate, 1894.

Are You In a Building Loan Association?

Nearly 2,000,000 persons have about $750,000,000 in these associations. At the meeting of the League of Local Building Associations by their delegates in convention assembled:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the interests of all shareholders of building and loan associations in the United States demand that the present standard of values, upon which our monetary system has been based since the resumption of specie payments in 1879, shall remain unchallenged and inviolate.

Does your dollar buy too much?

Has the money which the farmer gets for his crops too great a purchasing power? Is there anybody who prefers dollars which will buy few things to those which can be exchanged for many things? If so, you can easily be accommodated with cheap Mexican dollars. Now, don't all speak at once!

OUR SILVER CRAZE.

RESULT OF A CONSPIRACY OF MINE OWNERS TO FORCE UP THE PRICE OF SILVER.

The Two Nevada Senators the Arch Conspirators—Both Were Yellow Goldbugs In 1873—Story of Their Sudden Conversion as Told by David A. Wells—Became Interested In Silver Mines and Began Devising Schemes to Increase Their Fortunes at the People's Expense—Bland and Sherman Act Schemes and Their Results—Free Coinage the Latest and Worst Scheme.

Perhaps the two men most responsible for the "silver question," which has disturbed our finances for many years and is responsible for the industrial depression since 1893, are the two senators from Nevada—William M. Stewart and John P. Jones. Strange to say, both of these most ardent friends of silver were its most deadly enemies when the great "crime of '73" was committed against silver. Read those quotations from their speeches in the senate:

The question will never be settled until you determine the simple question whether the laboring man is entitled to a gold dollar if he has it, or whether you are to be cheated out of him with something else. That is the upshot of the whole thing.—Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada, June 12, 1874.

Do not let us try to deceive the American people. Do not let us make them believe by some hocus pocus of legislation that we can give them something of real value, we can give them a measure of value, that is better than the universal standard of mankind.—Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada, June 11, 1874.

I believe the true policy of this nation is to a purely gold standard the better it will be for the country. Did any country ever accumulate wealth, attain commercial supremacy, which civilization without a standard of value? And what basis of value is there but gold? * * * Gold is so exact a measure of human effort that when it is exclusively used as money it reaches a fixed value.—Senator John P. Jones of Nevada, April 1, 1874.

These two men participated in the "crime of '73" and with their votes helped to "strike silver down." Have they since then been trying to atone for their sins by doing all possible to atone for it? This would be a charitable way of viewing their conversion, but the facts appear to point to a very different explanation. We quote the following from a recent article in the New York Tribune by the Hon. David A. Wells as throwing light on this subject:

The explanation in the case of Mr. Jones and his business associates does not seem to be attended with any difficulty. They had become largely interested in the mineral resources of their state, especially silver mining, and were reported to have accumulated great wealth from their investments. As a natural consequence they were greatly looked out sharply for his business interests. He early saw what others failed so promptly to see, that the production of silver in the world—and especially in the United States—was becoming improved methods of mining, refining and transportation of ores, was rapidly increasing. He doubtless foresaw what the world now knows, that the world's product of silver, as it was in 1873, 60,000 ounces in 1873, would become 165,000,000 ounces in 1895; that its market value of $1.39 per ounce in 1873 (reckoned in gold) would dwindle to 65 cents in 1895.

What it now costs to produce silver no one accurately knows. The celebrated Broken Hill mines of Australia yielded last year—1895—over 10,000,000 ounces of silver at a total reported cost of 40 cents per ounce, and good authorities report that some of the American mines turn out millions of ounces at the present time at an equally low figure. With such an aspect of the future, it did not require any great sagacity on the part of Mr. Jones and his silver mining associates to foresee that this prospective great increase in the production of silver would impair its market or bullion value and diminish the profits of mining, and that something must be done to avert such a contingency. As the world had then, as it has now, a sufficient supply of all the silver it needed in the arts or as an instrumentality for exchange, any attempt to make its use more extensive did not seem feasible.

They accordingly hit upon the following ingenious plan: That the treasury of the United States should be required to buy so much of the surplus produced by the mines of Mr. Jones and his associates as would tend to maintain the price of silver, and consequently their enormous profits, or at least prevent any great reduction in them. They therefore induced congress to require the government to buy at least $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion each and every month, the total production of all the silver mines in the United States falling at that time about $8,000,000 per month. The government consequently at once made a market for about two-thirds of all the product of this industry, and under this act the treasury did buy $378,-000,000.

This device to keep up the price of silver did not, however, work as its originators expected it would at the time it was put into operation and for the reasons that the world's product continued the increase of its enactment—namely, 78,476,000 ounces, with an average value of 1.153 per ounce—had reached 120,218,000 ounces per annum in 1889, while its price had fallen to .83 per ounce. The device was accordingly reconstructed, and in 1890 the United States treasury was required to buy 4,500,000 ounces per month, and under this law, which was repealed in 1893, the government purchased 168,647,828 fine ounces of silver at a cost of $155,030,000. In virtue of these two acts the United States treasury purchased 498,984,889 fine ounces of silver at an expenditure of $606,928,974, and of this large amount $318,000,000 remained in the vaults of the treasury on the 1st of September, 1896.

The above two devices for the benefit of the millionaire mine owners having completely failed, they have now devised a third, more subtle and ingenious, which has captivated and beguiled no small part of the American people—namely, the so-called free coinage of silver, with the legal tender attachment.

It is difficult, therefore, in the face of such undisputable facts, to resist the conclusion that this whole silver agitation, which, as before shown, is not manifesting itself in any like degree in any other country, is the result of a regularly conspiracy of the silver mining magnates of the west and certain politicians whose aspirations are centered in the attainment of office and spoils. The exactions of the former further to increase their great fortunes have already cost the government and the people of the United States thousands of millions of dollars. If no silver mines had ever been discovered in this country, or, if discovered, the government had bought and closed them up, there never would have been any silver agitation in the country.

Have there ever been such selfish and unpatriotic schemes palmed off in modern times on the people of any country? Ought not every sensible American citizen who has given, or is still giving, aid and countenance to such a scheme to blush for the disgrace and loss which it has entailed upon his beloved country and its government?

Stamp Would Add No Value.

What would be the value of paper money if the government offered to put its seal upon all paper brought to it, giving a pound of paper money for a pound of paper? The operation of the free coinage of silver would be perfectly analogous, except that the paper could be defaced by the process of printing, while silver would remain unchanged in value. Under free coinage a pound of dollars and a pound of bullion must be of the same value. A pound of silver dollars is now worth more than a pound of silver bullion only because the government has a monopoly of the manufacture of silver dollars and it limits the supply and will also committed to maintaining the dollar at par in gold. But if it agrees to puts its stamp upon all the silver brought to it its monopoly disappears, the quantity becomes indefinite, and the government is of course released from the obligation to maintain their value above what it really is, and the silver dollar must circulate at its bullion value, just as the gold dollar does. Consequently no class of persons would be so astonished and disappointed by the adoption of free coinage as the mine owners, who imagine that under free coinage their bullion would be transmuted at the mint into dollars worth what silver dollars are now worth.—Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.

What Free Coinage Means.

What does "free coinage," as it is called, mean? It does not mean that the government would buy any of the silver; not an ounce. The government would simply receive the silver from its owner, stamp it and hand it back to him. Does this create any demand for silver?

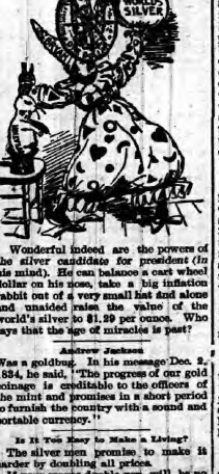
Buckwheat flour is now used to a limited extent for food. The demand for buckwheat flour is entirely due to this fact. Opening a new batch of wheat flour mill create any demand for buckwheat? Certainly not, any more than the reaping and threshing did. These are all simply steps in preparing the supply. The market for silver is not to be found in competition with other kinds of flour.—Hon. J. T. McCleary of Minnesota.

Keep Your Nose On.

Workingmen who are being urged to "vote for free silver to get even with your employer" should think twice before trying to injure the men for whose benefit it is. Cutting off the nose to spite his face is a good joke for a worker, compared with voting for a policy which will close the factories and force the employees into idleness merely for the sake of hurting the factory owners.

There are not many spiteful workingmen in this country, but even if there were they would be very foolish to throw themselves out of employment in order to be revenged on the men who pay their wages.

The Sixteen to One Juggler.



Wonderful indeed are the powers of the silver candidate for president (in his mind). He can balance a cart wheel dollar on his nose, take a big inflation rabbit out of a very small hat and alone and unaided raise the value of the world's silver to $1.29 per ounce. Who says that the age of miracles is past?

Address Jackson

Was a goldbug. In his message Dec. 2, 1834, he said, "The progress of our gold coinage is creditable to the officers of the mint and promises in a short period to furnish the country with a sound and portable currency."

Is It Too Easy to Make a Living?

The silver men promise to make it harder by doubling all prices.

If your wages double you will be no better off and if they do not double you will be much worse off than now.

THE MELICAN CHEAP MONEY MANDARIN.

Li Hung Chang to Silverite Bryan: "Velly good, Billee, gives Melican cheapee money, allee same coolie's cash. Free silver makes wages low, but brass cash better, allee samee Chinceeman."

Information For All.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the penny publication Present Problems. Four numbers have thus far been issued, and each contains an excellent discussion on the money question.

No. 1 is a 48-page pamphlet entitled "The Free Coinage Problem." It is a most excellent treatment of the whole free coinage problem, showing its bearings on farmers, wage earners and the general public.

No. 2 contains, besides other short articles, the now famous "Horrible Crime—The Demonetization of Iron 2,500 Years Ago," by Alex. P. Hall.

No. 3 is entitled "Free Coinage Dissected." It is by ex-Congressman John De Witt Warner, one of our best posted men on the money question. He makes good use of the 32 pages in this pamphlet. Besides laying bare the 16-to-1 question he indicates what must be the final solution of the coinage and currency questions.

No. 4 is entitled "Sixteen to One Versus Wages." It is also by Mr. Warner. It shows from statistics in this and other countries that actual wages have always and everywhere declined when paid in depreciating money, and have risen, when paid in gold. His statistics and arguments are full and conclusive. No one who understands them will attempt to answer them.

This admirable series of timely little pamphlets undoubtedly furnish both the best and the cheapest information on this question for the general reader. They are a convenient size for carrying in the pocket, are illustrated and are printed in attractive form with neat covers.

They are published semi-monthly by the Present Problems Publishing Co., 57 Park place, New York city. The subscription price is 20 cents per year; single copies, 1 cent each. Sample copies will be sent free to writers or speakers on the money question, who are likely to use large quantities if the pamphlets are found to be satisfactory.

Those Are Not Crimes.

Mankind progressed from the use of rowboats to sailing vessels and steamships. It is not "enmity" to sailing vessels that makes us travel by steamships. It is not "criminal act" of a great newspaper against hand presses if it uses steam presses. It is no "crime" against horses if we transport our goods by railroads. Neither is it enmity to silver nor an unfriendly act, nor a crime toward it, if other nations and our own use gold for the transfer of values. We will continue to use rowboats and sailing vessels as well as steamships, just as we will continue to use copper and silver as well as gold. No act of congress could, however, give to our sailing vessels the great and almost uniform swiftness of our ocean steamers. Not even an international agreement would accomplish it.—D. Ochs.

Free Silver and Cheap Wheat.

The evil day of the western grower has now come. The wheat growers of Russia and Argentina are underselling him and driving him from the market. Silver is not doing it, but these competitors are by offering their wheat at a lower price. They were influencing its price long before the silver agitation began, and they will continue to influence it whatever our government may do with silver. This country is not the entire commercial world, and, much as we may wish it, cannot by any juggling with silver advance by 1 cent a bushel the price of wheat in the markets of the world—and for the very obvious reason that foreign buyers are not dependent on our market.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Does Your Salary Go Too Far?

The Detroit Tribune, a free silver paper, says: "It is true that under an era of higher prices fixed salaries will not go so far now, but now they go no too far, and their purchasing power ought to be reduced. These salaries were mostly established before the hard times set in and now represent vastly more than was intended when the salaries were created."

Don't you suppose wages will be affected just like salaries? Do you believe "their purchasing power ought to be reduced?"

Dean Swift on Money.

"When the value of money is arbitrary or unsettled," wrote Dean Swift, "no man can tell how much he is worth in property at all; nor is there any wound so suddenly felt, so hardly cured, or that leaves such deep and lasting scars behind."

Don't Go It Blind.

The man who cannot see just how the free coinage of silver is going to increase the number of dollars in his pocket should not vote for it.

"TERRIFIED" VOTERS.

A Maine Newspaper's Explanation of the Recent Landslide.

The Bangor Commercial, one of the few straight Democratic papers in Maine this year, thinks the main cause of the Republican landslide there on Sept. 14 was the wicked and successful attempt to alarm the voters. "Through their scheme of individual lists," says The Commercial, "the status of every voter was known, and to doubtful ones were sent during the past week numerous documents designed to frighten them into the belief that an awful calamity would befall the country should Bryan and Sewall be elected.

"They were told that their savings banks deposits would be reduced one-half; that holders of mortgages and real estate would take steps toward immediate foreclosure; that life insurance premiums—in fact, all kinds of savings investments—would be dealt a blow from which they could not possibly recover. The plain people, almost terrified at the dark pictures drawn for them, rushed to the polls to support the Republican candidates, with the result already shown."

The explanation is probably correct. The voters were frightened; but not without good reason. A rational man will not knowingly vote to destroy the title to half of his property. Every voter with two lobes to his brain, who has dispassionately studied the free coinage question, knows that it means a reduction of the value of one-half of the value of the Mexican dollar. Wage earners, pensioners, savings banks depositores, etc., know that Mexican dollars are only worth half as much as our present dollars and will only buy half as much. To pay pensioners in such dollars is equivalent to cutting pensions in two. Is it any wonder that the pensioner objects to such proceedings and does so with his vote? The wage earners, depositors in banks, members of building and loan associations and holders of insurance policies of all kinds would be caught in the same way if they had to accept 50-cent dollars instead of whole dollars.

Is it any wonder that the voters of Maine "rushed to the polls" to save their earnings and to guard against future loss? A man's first duty is to himself and his family. His vote is his only protection and welfare of the family is a patriotic vote. If every man would vote for his own best interests, the future of this country would be safe. It is probable that a majority of the voters of this country will "rush to the polls" in November and vote to save their wages, their earnings, their families and themselves.

Are Your Wife and Children Protected By insurance? More than 10,000,000 people have policies. Twenty-five million people are trusting to those policies to care for them when husbands and fathers are dead. In 1895 the companies paid policy holders and their families $165,168,810, equivalent to gold. If they could have paid in silver dollars, they would have paid but little more than half of that.

The difference would not have been made by the companies, but by the men who borrow gold dollars from the companies and would repay silver dollars.

The silver men wish to take half your insurance away from your widow and children and give it to the men who borrowed from the companies.

An Apt Illustration.

As Toledo Mr. Bryan said, "If you have a little home and it only cost you $100 and has but one room, you who own that little home would be as much exercised by the announcement it had caught on fire as would the great man who lives in a marble palace, because it is your home."

You would be a good deal more exercised also if you knew that, Mr. Bryan having been elected president, the insurance which you had paid for out of your labor with 100 cent dollars was to be paid to you in dollars worth 53 cents.

It wouldn't make so much difference to the man who lives in the marble palace.—Exchange.

Are You Getting Wages?

On Aug. 8 the Shelbyville county (Ind.) teachers' institute, knowing that if they were paid in silver it would reduce their incomes, unanimously adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That it shall be stipulated in all contracts made between the trustees and the teachers that the teachers' wages shall be paid in gold or its equivalent.

The question will never be settled until you determine the simple question whether the laboring man is entitled to have a gold dollar if he earns it or whether you are going to cheat him with something else.—Senator Stewart.

WANTS A LAW ENFORCED.

One ardent member of the Town Improvement Association, whose efforts are directed towards the suppression of the practice of burning leaves in the streets, suggests a method of how best to stop it, which she believes would be an effective and at the same time a lucrative crusade for the city. She has been delving into the city ordinances and finds that there is a fine attached to the act of burning leaves in the streets, and now she suggests that since the street appropriation has been exhausted that all violators of the above ordinance be arrested and the fines utilized in continuing the work of the improvement which has been stopped on account of the deficiency. She urges that a number of bonfires daily sending out a sickly and stifling smudge in the public streets at this time of the year in contravention of what the city fathers have said is proper, would soon provide revenue enough to allow the street work to go forward, and at the same time hold out a warning to all future violators that would be salutary in its effect.

A MAN TO BE MISSED.

Eric N. Erickson was one of those fortunate men who seldom had an ill word spoken of him. His work, whether public or private, was done conscientiously and without that gratitude which some are wont to say arises from "a lively sense of favors to come." The motive that prompted him was that of intuitive honesty. His conscience directed his endeavors in the right path, and he was never blocked by that question of personal policy that too frequently moulds the course of men nowadays. Firm and progressive, yet quiet and unobtrusive, he was a man whose death causes universal regret.

EXPENSIVE MODEL TOWNS.

It seems to be the misfortune of model towns to have expensive governments. Next to Plainfield, Orange is considered to be one of the finest residential cities in New Jersey, but with all her beauty and improvements she is struggling under a tax rate of 2.75, though in the last year $800,000 increased valuation was added to the assessor's books. With a tax rate but little below that of Orange, and the committee appropriations being exhausted before the end of the final year, the taxpayers of this city are confronted with a condition almost as bad.

ELECTORS CHOSEN.

The Executive Committee of the National Democratic State Committee of New Jersey selected the following Palmer and Buckner electoral ticket at the headquarters, Jersey City, last Wednesday. Ashbel Green, of Englewood; James J. Bergen, Somerset; Thomas P. Curley, Camden; Gardner H. Cane, Mercer; F. Randolph, Morris; William P. Ellery, Bergen; Eugene Vanderpool, Essex; Nelson J. H. Edge, Hudson; Samuel Williams, Union, and Richard Lindabury, Somerset. The electors must be nominated by petition.

WHAT MR. M'CLURE SAID.

Counselor William K. McClure says that he was wrongly quoted yesterday in reference to the remarks he made at the meeting of the Democratic National Association Monday night. What he said was that if the law compelled him to vote, and he was to choose between Bryan and McKinley, he should vote for Bryan as representing the lesser of the evils, though he believed that neither one deserved the suffrage of an honorable man. Now, however, that Palmer and Buckner were in the field he believed every Democrat could vote for a sound money man and a Democrat.

A CARPING CRITIC.

The constant and apparently willful perversion of the truth by the News in reporting matters concerning the North Plainfield Public School, is causing no little comment among residents of the borough. Since it has been the aim of the new Board of Education and the new superintendent to enlarge the curriculum and raise the standard of the school, the News has taken it upon itself at every opportunity to belittle the reforms instituted and misrepresent the innovations adopted until its position has become one of a carping critic and unfair reporter. Only a day or two ago it devoted a half column of space in exploiting what it considered a burning shame in detaining the kindergarten pupils from 3:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m. As a matter of fact, the kindergarten pupils do not go to school till 9:30 a. m. and are given an intermission for lunch and play, and then dismissed at 1:30 p. m.—a schedule of which no parent can reasonably complain. The attacks of the News are entirely uncalled for.

MR. KIRK STILL IN THE RACE.

The New Jersey Contractor has the following to say in commenting on the Shrevalty race in the Republican camp:

"It is said that Mr. Kirk is out of the race in favor of Mr. Houston, but who can tell? It is certain that Mr. Houston has a strong following in both places. It is equally certain that up to the hour of the calling to order of the convention that no one will know who will be nominated. The strongest candidate may fail in the hour of trial."

Editor Pearson's tip that Plainfield's Billy is out of the race in favor of another man is strangely out of place. If signs amounts to anything, Mr. Kirk is decidedly in it, though as the Contractor remarks, the strongest man at present may lack the final spurt to capture the coveted prize.

A JUST ADMENDMENT.

The decision of the Board of Governors of the Muhlenberg hospital to amend the rules of the institution so as to permit physicians of the homeopath faith to practice there, will end the talk of another hospital. This amendment is one that has long been desired in justice to a large number of the people who contribute to the support of the hospital, but who have been deprived of the privilege of having their family physician, if he was a practitioner of the new school, attend them within the walls of the institution.

PASSING EVENTS OF INTEREST.

Within the next fourteen days Plainfield is to be the scene of three big demonstrations, and in the preparation, enjoyment and aftermath of the events we shall be a busy community, intent upon displaying our hospitality in such away as to leave a lasting impression on the visitors. Beyond the mere passing pleasure to be extracted from the affairs, there is also a substantial reward for the business men in the increased trade which the very elaborate entertainment will afford.

NOT WHAT THEY DESERVED.

The Crescent Wheelmen really deserved far better financial support at their race meet, Saturday afternoon, than it was their fortune to possess. The entries included the most famous professional and amateur racers in the country, the day was fair and fine, the track in a fast condition and the contests close and exciting in the extreme. But with all these favorable conditions, it is understood that the Crescents will have to figure pretty close to make both ends meet.

KEYS FOR CONGRESSMAN.

When the Congressional convention of the Third district is held at Somerville next week, former Senator William J. Keys will loom up as a prominent candidate for the honors of the convention. Though at first quoted as a dissenter from the Chicago platform and candidates, Mr. Keys later on declared his loyalty and is now an ardent supporter of them. It is conced there is a fighting chance for a Democrat in the Third district this year.

TO FLOAT A BANNER.

The Bryan and Sewall Democrats will end the campaign in Plainfield with some display of enthusiasm at the least. A meeting of a number of the silver advocates was held last night and it was decided to raise funds for the purpose of floating a Bryan and Sewall banner at the intersection of Front street and Park avenue.

The Middlesex County Republicans have nominated A. S. Church, of South River, for Sheriff; A. C. Litterst, of Menlo Park, and James Fountain, of Madison, for the Assembly.

THE LAW REQUIRING PARITY.

It is the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as the standard money and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity of value of the coins of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts.—Act of 1892, repealing silver purchase law.—New York World.

SWINGING AROUND THE CIRCLE.

Like all the politicians, Billy Kirk is swinging around the circle in the endeavor to capture the Shrievality nomination. Thursday he invaded Rahway, and here is what the Newark News correspondent has to say of his visit:

William T. Kirk, of Plainfield, who is after the Republican nomination for Sheriff, was in Rahway last night, accompanied by Chas. J. Fisk, of Plainfield. Kirk hopes to capture the Railway delegates to the county convention. His most formidable opponent is ex-Freeholder Houston, of Elizabeth. Mr. Kirk, however, says he will sweep Plainfield, and it is claimed, will secure the delegates from a majority of the townships, and if he gets Rahway this will, it is claimed, give him the nomination.

MAY RUN FOR ASSEMBLYMAN.

From the Elizabeth Journal we learn that J. P. Powers is spoken of as a possible Assembly nominee of the Democrats this year. Mr. Powers formerly lived in this city, but is now numbered among the legal luminaries of the county seat, where he is building up a large legal practice. He is a Democrat loyal and active and if honor comes his way, he may be sure to at least receive the congratulations and best wishes of his erstwhile neighbors in this city.

—The case of Charles Frey, on a charge of alleged non-support, will come up for trial before City Judge DeMeza on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

FIRED AT INTRUDERS.

THIEVES MAKE ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO ENTER EMORYSIDE STATION.

The Proprietor Was There, However, and When an Entrance Was Attempted He Fired at Them, But They Escaped.

It is only a few days ago that The Press told of an attempt that was made to enter and rob the Emoryside station at the Dunellen end of the street car railroad. So, fearing another attempt, Proprietor A. Emory and two of his friends decided to stay in the station Sunday night, in the hope that the intruders might come around again and sample his appetizing stock of edibles. Fully equipped with shooting irons, Mr. Emory and his friends sat quietly in the waiting room from 9 o'clock until midnight, when they heard footsteps approaching and presently four men were noticed about the place. One of them, with a cold-chisel or some other blunt instrument, pried off a weather-board and another one was working away at a side window, when Mr. Emory and his friends rushed out and fired a volley of shots at the fast disappearing fugitives. But whether or not any of the shots took effect is not known. At the first sound from the pistols two of the men started on a run toward Dunellen and the other two ran toward Plainfield to a point opposite the Craig property, where they branched off and ran through the fields to the railroad and escaped.

Mr. Emory is a law-abiding citizen and has built up a well-paying business. Now he intends to sleep in the building every night, and woe be unto the man or men who makes a third attempt to enter the place at night.

Mr. Bryan has started out to teach the people new principles about money, says the True American, but has only succeeded in convincing them that he not only does not understand the rudiments of the subject, but that he is absolutely ignorant of well known facts relative to the history of money which have occurred in recent years. Reversing in his Brooklyn speech to the statement by his opponents that there was a possibility of an enormous increase in the production of silver, Mr. Bryan remarked: "That is guess work. You say it is a possibility, but we do not legislate on possibilities. I look back and I see we have used silver for six-thousand years and never a flood of silver in all that time."

To this the New York "Evening Post" responds as follows:

"Let us see. The mints of France were swamped with silver, and its gold went out of circulation as recently as 1865. What was then called the heavy increase in production made an annual total output of barely $55,000,000, yet this sufficed before very long to force bimetalist France to close her free silver coinage. Against that annual $55,000,000, last year's silver silver production was no less than $226,000,000. The passage of our silver purchase law of 1890, even with the decline in silver's price with accompanied its operation, caused an increase, within three years, of $51,700,000 in the annual world's production, or fully 31 per cent. What, then, may rational minds expect from unlimited silver coinage? Is this a matter of mere "possibility?"

One of the Great Successes of the Day.

During a recent interview with the manufacturers of "Battle Ax" Plug Tobacco they said had been amply repaid for the enormous amount of money which they have spent for newspaper advertising by a wonderful increase of business. They claim that they have had an excellent opportunity to test the advantage of newspaper advertising, because ever since they started, manufacturers of other brands of plug tobaccos who for years made enormous profits by giving to the consumers a small piece of tobacco no better than "Battle Ax," immediately recognized the fact that on account of the superior quality and liberal sized piece of "Battle Ax," their businesses were in great danger of being curtailed. In their endeavor to prevent this they waged bitter war against the manufacturers of "Battle Ax" and resorted to methods of all kinds which seem questionable to business men who possess a higher sense of honor and fair dealing. Notwithstanding all this handicap, the manufacturers of Battle Ax, through the medium of their newspaper advertisements, were able to tell the consumers of the high grade and fine quality of "Battle Ax" and the great economy derived from using it, until today "Battle Ax" is pronounced by all the greatest success on the market and more pounds of it are sold than of any other brand of plug tobacco. So much for advertising.

Scotch Plains Democrats proposed to raise a Democratic flag or banner there on Thursday evening, from Emery's hotel to a point on the opposite side of Front street. There will also be speaking from an improvised platform.

READY FOR THE TACKLE; IN VERY FAST PUSH

FOOTBALL PLAYERS SOON TO LINE UP FOR BATTLE—CRACK CIRCUIT RIDERS HURT IN THE RACE AT TRENTON YESTERDAY.

The Y. M. C. A. Will Put a Strong Eleven on the Gridiron This Season That Will Defend All Kicks and Punts.

The football season opens in Plainfield on Saturday when the Y. M. C. A. eleven, of this city, meets the San Remo Football Club, of New York. The San Remo team has scheduled games with the best clubs in the Metropolitan district and is reported to be a very strong eleven.

The team that will represent Plainfield will be one of the best that has been seen on the gridiron in this city for a long time. For the first time in several years the team has gotten down to solid work early in the season and the promises for a winning team are very bright.

When it was known that Waring had decided to coach the team and that "Ted" Freeman would return and again captain the eleven from behind the line, football took a big boom. The interest shown in the game has been great and the number of candidates for the team is very encouraging to the management.

The team met for practice again last Monday night on the Y. M. C. A. grounds which were illuminated with gasoline lamps. The regular team was lined up against the scrub and an hour of good practice greatly improved the condition of all. There was a marked improvement over the last practice and there was a sharpness and vigor about the playing that promises much for Saturday's game. The field was in good condition and everything points toward a successful season.

Among the new candidates out last evening were Horace Moore and George Snediker, both of whom put up a good game on the scrub.

Captain Freeman expects to give all a chance, and the other candidates that are likely to get a chance before the season is finished are Horace Moore, George Schoonmaker, W. L. McClure, Ernest Swayze, N. E. Titsworth, George Snediker, Van R. Schuyler, and several others.

The team will practice on the field Thursday night, and a short practice of signals will be held Friday night. An invitation is extended to all football players in Plainfield to try for the team Thursday night. All are requested to wear football suits.

NO LINES DRAWN NOW.

HOMEOPATHS AS WELL AS ALLOPATHS TO BE AT THE HOSPITAL.

An Amendment Made to the Rules Which Permits the New School Physicians to Practice at This Institution Hereafter.

The hospital question in Plainfield has been settled for a while at least, and the homeopathic physicians will not need a hospital of their own to accommodate their patients, for last Monday the Board of Governors of the Muhlenberg Hospital passed an amendment to the constitution which opens that institution to all legally qualified practicing physicians.

The amendment is to section 7 which refers to the admission of patients. After stating that any member of the medical staff may send private patients to the hospital and treat them privately, subject to the rules of the Board, the amended section says:

"And any legally qualified physician, not a member of the medical staff, may send patients to the hospital to be there treated by such physician privately, after having obtained from the medical director a written order for the admission of each patient, subject, however, to such rules and regulations as shall from time to time be established by or with the approval of the Board."

The amendment was introduced at the annual meeting of the Board last May, when there was a movement on foot to establish another hospital.

No other business of importance was transacted at the meeting last evening, although there was, of course, the usual general discussion of the hospital and many suggestions were made for its welfare.

A Pioneer in Home Mission Work.

The Women's Association of the Congregational church will meet on Thursday afternoon from 2:30 to 5 o'clock. One hour will be under the charge of the Home Missionary committee and an interesting and varied programme has been provided. The subject will be "The Sunday-school, a Pioneer in Home Mission Work." There will be special music by members of the Sunday-school. Tea will be served.

The Fast Men Return to Plainfield in a Much Battered Condition—Record Breaking Time Made at Trenton.

The crack-a-jacks are not in love with Trenton, for the trip to the meet there, Monday, laid up Otto Zeigler, the Californian crack, for the season and temporarily disabled the Canadian champion, Longhead.

The track at the fair grounds in Trenton is a one-half mile flat oval course, but it was in perfect condition. There were forty-seven professionals in the races, including all the best men.

The one mile open went to Gardiner with Tom Butler second, Cooper third and Kiser fourth. Eddie Bald was close behind Kiser. Prizes were offered for the man finishing first in each quarter and they were won by A. C. Mertens, Harry Clark and Louis Callahan. The time was 2:14 2-5. John S. Johnson rode but did nothing in the races. He rode an exhibition mile, paced by a "quad" and a tricycle in 1:47.

"Jimmy" Michaels broke the world's three, four, and five mile paced records. He had a flying start and was paced by two quads and a tricycle. His time for the different miles were as follows: One mile, 1:53; two miles, 3:50; three miles, 5:51, breaking the record of 5:55 3-5; four miles, 7:52 breaking 7:58 2-5; five miles, 9:51 4-5, breaking 9:58 1-5.

The two mile handicap for "pros" was the fatal race. In one heat "Teddie" Goodman, who was riding in front suddenly slowed up and Meyers, who came next, was thrown; Ziegler tumbled over the two and fell into the fence and broke his arm in the same place he did last year. Hadfield and Carroll Jack also went down but escaped with sundy small cuts and bruises. Ziegler will be unable to ride anymore this season but it is hoped that he will recover in time to take part in the record breaking trials in California, this winter.

In another heat, Ray MacDonald's tire exploded and his wheel buckled, throwing him. Longhead was thrown and was so badly scraped and bruised that he will be confined to his bed all day. He also had a heavy rap on his head.

One of the amateurs tumbled into a projecting post along the track, had his face laid open and remained unconscious for nearly an hour.

The final heat of the two-mile was won by Cooper from scratch, Starbuck second, Bouler third, and Bald, another scratch man, fourth.

The Morgan and Wright team and several of the other cracks returned to this city last night. Owen S. Kimble left for his home at Louisville yesterday morning for a short rest.

Rev. Dr. Tuttle in Town.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Tuttle, formerly pastor of the M. E. church in this city, and now pastor of the M. E. church at Rossville, together with Benjamin F. Edsall and F. Day, two of his parishioners, arrived in town on wheels Monday, and spent a short time with friends here. They had been enjoying a day's bicycle outing to New Brunswick and stopped here on their way home. The doctor reported the roads very dusty between here and Dunellen, but the rest of the way the roads were in a fair condition. The party left here at 4 o'clock for Rossville, expecting to reach home before dark.

Is This Plainfield Frank?

A dispatch from Perth Amboy to one of the New York papers states that Frank Martin, of Plainfield, fell from his wheel there Sunday. One ear was almost entirely cut off and his skull fractured, according to the dispatch. A Daily Press reporter saw a representative of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company this morning. The news of any accident befalling Frank L. C. Martin had been received by them. Mr. Martin left Saturday morning to take a yachting trip with friends from Newark, and it is not known whether he stopped in Perth Amboy or not.

Mountain Park Inn to Close.

After a very prosperous season the Mountain Park Inn will close its doors the latter part of this week. Many of the guests would like to stay longer, but the owners have decided to keep the building closed during the winter and reopen it on June 1st, next.

The people of the quiet and sedate little village of Scotch Plains have now come to the conclusion that their prayers are about to be answered and that the hum of the trolley will no longer be a mere dream but an actual reality. On Saturday last the route leading directly from Plainfield to this place was staked out and according to the survey it runs within 65 feet of Thomas Paff, Sr.'s, house to the southwest. John Tice is said to be anxious for the road, yet he wants the company to make a forty foot curve around his grape arbor, which they will hardly do.

BODY FOUND AT FANWOOD SUPPOSED TO BE A NEW YORK MAN.

He Was a Frenchman and Disappeared From Home Last June—Daughter Saw the Remains—Thinks Them Her Father.

The mystery that hung over the identity of the dead man that was discovered in the woods near Fanwood last Sunday afternoon is apparently clearing up. The identification may not be far off for a sorrowing daughter visited the morgue this afternoon to see if there was any resemblance to her father, who unaccountably disappeared on the 18th of June last, and several circumstances led her to the opinion that she has at last found the object of her search.

A young lady called at The Daily Press office at about 1 o'clock this afternoon and inquired the way to the morgue. She had seen an article in one of the New York papers, she said, about the discovery of a stranger found dead in the woods. Her father had been missing since the 18th day of June when he started for the Hotel Imperial, where he was wine steward, at about 11 o'clock.

She then told something of her story. Her name was Miss Louise Plancon and her father was George Plancon, a Frenchman. He had been engaged in the coal business on Twenty-Seventh street, New York, until last October, when he failed. He felt the failure very much at first but gradually recovered from the effects and accepted the position of wine steward at the Imperial.

He had held a similar position, a number of years ago. There was considerable jealousy on the part of another of the stewards of the hotel when Plancon was given the position and life was not made easy for him. Plancon appeared satisfied, however, for he loved his home and always confided his troubles to his wife. He had showed no sign before his disappearance of any mental derangement.

His daughter was traveling in Norway when he disappeared, and when she returned to this country she assisted her mother in the search for the missing man. They visited morgues, hospitals and insane asylums, and advertised for him, but without avail. They are living at 122 West Twentieth street. Miss Plancon was directed to the morgue, where Mr. Casey received her.

The unknown man corresponded to Mr. Plancon in size, height, and apparel ago. The shoes were the same and the suit somewhat similar. The young woman was almost sure that the dead man was her father, but to make sure she carried a sample of the cloth, of which his clothes were made, home to her mother for identification. She will return tonight.

County Physician Westcott arrived in Plainfield this afternoon with another different clue to the identity of the unknown man. A man named Freshley, a German had started from New Point road and Fourth street, Elizabeth, for Bound Brook in search of work three weeks ago.

It has always been his custom to write a postal card to his wife telling her of his whereabouts when he went in search of work, but this time she has received no word. Among the other articles found in the dead man's clothes was a postal card.

Mrs. Freshley telephoned Dr. Westcott that she would come to Plainfield this afternoon to see if the stranger was her husband.

Along Legal Lines.

The case of Kyte against Reutsch was tried in Justice Newcorn's court Monday and judgment was given the plaintiff. The case of Roberts against Mortimer was adjourned for one week. Summons were issued in the case of Johnson against Smith, and Sherman et als against Warren, which are returnable October 8th.

J. C. Pope Now Treasurer.

By a change in the Dime Savings Bank management, at the meeting held in the bank building last Monday, the name of James C. Pope was substituted for that of the late Elias R. Pope, as treasurer. Money deposited on or before October 5th will draw interest from the 1st.

Republican Campaign Committee Arranges For Two Big Demonstrations This Week—No Meetings to be Held Next Week.

The Republican campaign committee met last Monday and completed all arrangements for the mass meeting to be held in Music Hall on Tuesday, at which time Judge Wilbur A. Mott of Newark and Frank Walker, of Trenton, will make addresses, and also for the meeting to be held on Friday evening at the same place when Hon. Frank Plumley, of Vermont, and Mr. Greed, of Kansas, will be the speakers It was decided not to hold any meetings at headquarters this week nor next week owing to the coming Christian Endeavor Convention. Arrangements were partially made for a mass meeting to be held in Music Hall, Tuesday evening October 20th, Congressman Chas. N. Fowler and Senator Foster M. Voorhees will speak at this meeting. A letter was received from Governor Griggs stating that he could not be present October 15th, but that he would arrange for a future date and notify the committee. Other business of a routine nature was transacted and the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.

GOVERNORS' MEMORIAL

HOSPITAL OFFICIALS RECORD GRIEF OVER E. N. ERICKSON'S DEATH.

Second Time in Fifteen Years That One of The Members of the Board Has Died, But the Sense of Sorrow is Acute.

The Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, assembled in special meeting to take action in regard to the death of Eric N. Erickson, president of the board, directed that the following memorial be placed upon the minutes and that a copy of the same be duly engrossed and forwarded to his family:

The Board feel greatly blessed in that during the fifteen years of their existence they have but twice been called upon to bewail the loss of members by death, but that after so long an interval the blow should have fallen upon their president, seems to have taken from them the power to express in words their sense of loss, both as to official and personal relations.

Mr. Erickson was one of the corporators of the hospital and from its inception gave freely of his intelligence, his substance and his time towards its establishment.

The most modest and unobtrusive of men, his foresight and wisdom were remarkable, and he was faithful and conscientious in execution of his duties as a member of council.

There were many occasions during his period of service to his city when the limit of endurance seemed to have been reached and when he might with reason have asked to be excused from the anxiety and labor to hospital work, but never once did he ask to be released from any duty or seek to shift a burden from his own shoulders.

And the same word may be said of him in the relations of life in whatever position he was found; his conduct was governed by conscience, loyalty, faithfulness and a wisdom that was rare and comprehensive.

But beyond our official estimate of this good man and our feeling of loss in the death of an invaluable member of our board, is a deep sense of personal loss to each individual. It is as if each one of us had lost a brother, and while we must accept the chastisement in humble belief in the love and wisdom of the Divine power which has taken him from the mystery of the taking of such a man in the prime of life and the midst of such activities for good must remain inscrutable and passing understanding.

We convey to his family our tenderest sympathy and to this entire city a sense of our great loss in that it has sustained in the decease of such a citizen.

At a special meeting of the staff of Muhlenberg Hospital the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

Whereas, Death has removed from us Eric N. Erickson, President of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital.

Be it resolved, That the medical staff of Muhlenberg Hospital has for years recognized in him a staunch and loyal friend to the hospital. He has given freely of his time and thought to further the advancement of the Institution he so loved so well. His sound judgment was always valued, and we felt that we had in him a friend in true medical charity.

Resolved, That we extend our sympathy to the wife and family in the hour of their great sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and to the Plainfield papers. E. H. Rodgers, Sec'y pro tem.

THE MYSTERY NOT YET SOLVED.

The Dead Man Was Not Identified by Either of the Searchers.

Instead of identification, the mystery that surrounds the dead man, found in the woods near Fanwood, grows deeper. Yesterday, Miss Louise Plancon was almost sure that it was the body of her father who has been missing since June 18th. But this morning Undertaker Casey, in whose morgue the body lies, received a letter from her stating that she had taken the sample of cloth of his trousers to the tailor who made her father's suit and he declared that the material was not the same. Her mother was quite sure that it was not Mr. Plancon for several reasons.

The other clue also proved false. Mr. Fleshley's son and a friend went to the morgue yesterday and immediately declared that the stranger was not Mr. Fleshley as the latter is six feet high and the dead man not over five feet three inches in height.

A Beautiful Sight.

Miss Anna Miller, of Park avenue, has a night blooming cereus which has certainly made a record. It has bloomed twice. The first time it contained twelve flowers and the second time thirty were produced. They were all perfect and the sight was beautiful. It is rarely that this plant blooms more than once a year, and this one is probably the only one in Plainfield that has given such an exhibition.

—The sale at the Jersey Wheel Works will take place next Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Palmer and Buckner Have Not Yet Been Indorsed, and Probably Will Not Be, Though They Stand on Their Platform.

The meeting of the gold standard Democrats at the Revere House last Monday was attended by not less than thirty-eight members.

President Atterbury, in opening the meeting, called for nominations for a county committee. Louis G. Timpson, of the Second ward, Edwin H. VanBuren, of the Third ward, and Thomas H. Keller, of the First ward, were nominated in the order named. Mr. Keller, generally known as Tee Kay, declined to accept the nomination, and upon motion the election of Messrs. Timpson and VanBuren was assured, and the executive committee was empowered to fill vacancies.

President Atterbury then made a short speech, stating in effect that that there was no doubt of the State going for McKinley, and that as it was the intention of the members of the association to form a permanent organization, it was deemed best to hold a meeting the latter part of the month of October to indorse the nominations of Palmer and Buckner.

Upon his invitation for remarks and opinions, Counselor McClure said that as between Bryan and McKinley he had no choice—that he would "go fishing"—but that now all true Democrats could vote a sound money man. That to preserve the State organization it was really necessary to vote for Palmer and Buckner and that it was the duty of the association so to do.

Gen. Sterling then made a motion to the effect that the club ratify at a public meeting the nomination of Palmer and Buckner upon a sound money platform.

C. P. Bullman then called attention to the fact that many members had joined the association with the understanding that they might vote for McKinley, it in their judgment it was deemed best, and the present action might prevent new members joining it. Mr. Bullman then proposed an amendment to the effect that the entire matter of endorsing Palmer and Buckner be left to the executive committee. The amendment was accepted by Gen. Sterling and was unanimously adopted by the club.

Following this came the question of a hall and funds. Music, Reform and the Y. M. C. A. Halls were in turned canvassed and as there was considerable doubt as regards capacity and cost it was decided to refer the matter to the executive committee.

In regard to the matter of funds, Counselor McClure called attention to the necessity of putting up a banner in the city and saw that nothing could be more appropriate than the American flag, with the names of the candidates below. President Atterbury then appointed Mr. McClure chairman of a committee to raise the funds for a hall and for banners, flags etc. with power to nominate two members in each ward of the city.

Owing to Mr. McClure's push and energy in the matter a considerable amount was raised at the meeting before its adjournment.

Mr. McClure has not yet made up the complete list of his finance committee but the probabilities are that Mr. Walz will accept from the Second ward and Messrs Rowland Cox and James Clark from the Third ward.

Another Convention for Plainfield.

Plainfield is fast getting her share of conventions, bicycle meets, trotting races and entertainments. But still another convention is scheduled. October 7th and 8th are the dates decided upon for the annual Sunday-school convention of the colored A. M. E. churches of the Newark District. During the two days session, services and meetings will be held in Mt. Zion A. M. E. church, and it is expected that upwards of forty ministers and delegates will be in attendance.

A Fall Over the Car Fender.

Miss Millie Vail, who lives just west of Dunellen, had been to Plainfield making some purchases on Saturday evening, and returning home on the Dunellen car reached there about 9 o'clock. She stepped off the wrong side of the car and in passing around to the sidewalk stumbled and fell over the car fender. She was thrown down and quite severely injured, but managed to reach home with assistance.

—The annual election of officers in the Sunday-school of the Congregational church will take place next Sunday.

—The Republican banner has been taken down for repairs. It is now in Dore Vroom's art parlors and is being prepared to float again.

—The name of the Drake Opera house, in Elizabeth, which was sold by the Sheriff two weeks ago, has been changed to the People's Theatre, and will be opened next Monday night by Col. W. M. Morton, formerly manager of Miner's Newark theatre, with a vaudeville company.

TRIBUTE OF AFFECTION AND ESTEEM.

The Funeral Services of the Late Mrs. Dr. Probasco Held Yesterday.

The relatives and a limited number of friends gathered Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the home of the late Mrs. Dr. Probasco to pay their tribute of affection and respect. Flowers everywhere testified to remembrance and regard. The Rev. Dr. Yerkes in a touching discourse spoke of the ministration of sorrow as one of the means by which God revealed himself in His love and sympathy to human hearts. He paid a high tribute to the true womanliness of Mrs. Probasco, referring to the time when in her girlhood she had decided to identify herself with God's people, from which time she had lived a beautiful Christian life, fulfilling the duties of wife, mother and friend with a fidelity as true as the compass to its poles. Dr. Richards offered prayer. Two selections of music were sung by Miss Gussie Bunyon, Miss Bessie Blair and Elmer E. Bunyon.

The interment was in Hillside cemetery at the close of the funeral services.

—At a future date, Prof. Maxwell Bingham, of Boston, who was so well received at the North Plainfield Public School on Saturday, will again appear at the same place for an evening entertainment. He will be assisted by a prominent lady soprano soloist of New York. Mr. Bingham recently received $500 for one evening at a large concert held in Denver, Col.

DEATH OF A NOBLE MAN

ERIC N. ERICKSON LEAVES A BRIGHT RECORD BEHIND HIM.

Worked His Way From Boyhood to an Honorable Career in Business and Public Life—No Man More Respected

Plainfield has lost one of her best citizens, a man whose honesty and integrity was never doubted, a thorough business man, and one who had the courage of his convictions and followed the dictates of his own conscience, no matter where they led to. Such was the character of Eric N. Erickson, who passed quietly away on Friday morning, at 6:30 surrounded by his family at his home, 424 West Eighth street. Death came rather suddenly as his condition was not considered critical until yesterday morning, and all Plainfield was startled with the sad news of his death this morning.

Three months ago he was compelled to relinquish his business duties and go to Avon, N. Y., to secure the benefits of the sulphur baths there. Last Friday he was taken suddenly ill while preparing to return home. He recovered sufficiently to reach Plainfield in safety on Saturday. His illness proved to be inflammation of the bowels which developed into appendicitis. Last Sunday, Dr. Frank Hartley, of New York, assisted by Drs. Probasco and Endicott, of this city, performed an operation, and it was thought that he would recover, but yesterday he grew rapidly worse until this morning when he passed away. He was conscious to the last and bid good bye to his weeping family that gathered by the bedside.

Eric N. Erickson was born in Christiana, Norway, on May 25th, 1842. When very young he and his three brothers were brought to this country by their parents and took up their home at Alabama. He was educated at a school at Tuscaloosa, Ala. Just prior to the Civil War the Erickson family moved north to Brooklyn. When the war broke out his father and one of his brothers enlisted. His father was promoted to the position of captain, while the brother died in the Andersonville prison.

When twenty years old Mr. Erickson entered the employ of W. H. Shattuck & Co., a New York advertising agency, as a clerk. The firm did a great deal of advertising for the Union and Central Pacific railroads which were just being boomed. About five years later the firm went into the banking business and Mr. Erickson started a financial and general advertising agency on his own account. He has continued in that business up to the time of his death. His office was in Temple Court, on Beekman and Nassau streets.

He moved to Plainfield about twenty-five years ago, and was married to Miss Della Davidson, of New York, at the home of J. W. Murray, on Central avenue. Mrs. Murray and Mrs. Erickson are sisters. He leaves three sons, Jules, Roger and Eric, and one daughter, Mrs. James Hallock. His sons, Jules and Roger, have been connected with his office, and the former conducted the business during Mr. Erickson's absence at Avon.

Mr. Erickson was a staunch Republican, but he was too true to his own convictions to believe in the infallibility of any party. He followed his own judgment and was not afraid to stand alone. He was elected to the Common Council from the Third ward for four terms and was the efficient chairman of the fire, water and lamps committee. He was the originator and one of the chief supporters of the well-known building ordinance passed some time ago which so regulates the building of houses in Plainfield that they will be a credit and an honor to the city. As a member of the sewer committee, he accomplished a great deal.

For many years he was treasurer and vestryman at the Grace P. E. church, and only lately resigned. He was one of the organizers of the Muhlenburg Hospital Association and has been a member of the Board of Governors since its organization. He was the president of the Board at the time of his death. He was also a member of the Union County Club.

Mr. Erickson was always known as a great family man and he preferred to spend his evenings at home.

The funeral will take place Sunday afternoon from Grace P. E. church.

An Indictment for Murder.

In Somerset county court Friday morning the license applications of J. H. Graceley and George Sisser, of North Plainfield, were laid over for a week. The license of the former does not expire until October 4th. The Grand Jury has brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree against Elmer Clawson, the eighteen-year-old boy who killed Harry Hodgetts last month. His trial was set down for October 6th.

Chronic constipation is a painful, disagreeable and life-shortening difficulty. It deranges the system, causes sickheadache, bad breath, and poisons the blood. It can be readily overcome by DeWitts' Little Early Risers. These little pills are great regulators. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

A MOONLIGHT ROBBERY.

SCOTT TERRY CAUGHT THE MARAUDER BUT HE FINALLY GOT AWAY.

Mr. Terry Met the Prowler Emerging From His Cellarway—Lost a Gold Watch and Several Other Valuables.

A bold robbery, accompanied with more or less dramatic scenes, was enacted near this city during Wednesday last and the robber got away. The occurrance did not take place within the city limits, however, and the authorities here did not have an opportunity to work on the case.

Scott Terry, who lives on the Railway road, about two miles east of this city, had been out to a lodge meeting, last evening, and was returning home on foot at about 1:15 o'clock this morning. Walking along the board walk leading from the roadway into his dooryard he discovered a strange man emerging from his celler through a back door. Mr. Terry stopped the man and asked his business about the place at such an hour, when the fellow made an effort to escape. Scott grabbed the man by the collar, but the man was too much for him, and twice he shook him off and ran towards Plainfield.

Mr. Terry describes the man as about five feet ten inches in height, thirty-five years old, stocky built and wearing a heavy cropped beard. He wore dark clothes, no overcoat and was barefooted, as foot prints in the soil indicated.

When Mr. Terry entered his home, he found his wife and three children reposing peacefully in their rooms in the upper story, but the cellar and ground floor presented a most dilapidated appearance. The parlor and dining room had been thoroughly ransacked, and in the cellar a quantity of canned goods had been sampled and packed up ready for removal. A $50 gold watch lay on the dining room mantel, and this, together with a gold pin and a pocketbook containing several dollars in money, were taken. Dozens of burned matches were afterwards found strewn about the kitchen and dining room, showing conclusively that the robbers had made a thorough search of the cellar and ground floor. This morning a pair of old No. 8 shoes were found on the back door stoop. The police have been notified.

MRS. TOMLINSON PRESIDENT.

Annual Meeting of the Union County W. C. T. U. Held Yesterday.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Union county was in session all day at the Fulton Street Methodist Episcopal church in Elizabeth, on Thursday. There were 150 delegates in attendance. Mrs. L. H. Tomlinson, of this city, presided. The membership of the Union has increased eighty one in the past year. Most of the session was taken up with reports of committees and officers. A prayer service was conducted at noon by Mrs. Yates, of Plainfield. The annual election resulted in the choice of Mrs. Tomlinson as president; Mrs. D. D. Irving, of Cranford, recording secretary; Mrs. S. R. Krom, of Plainfield, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. L. H. Noe, of Elizabeth, treasurer. The convention closed tonight with an interesting address by Mrs. A. M. Hammer, State president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pennsylvania.

MILITARY STUDENTS.

High School Cadets Instructed in New Manoeuvres Today.

The prospects for the next year for the High School Cadets are very bright, judging from the first drill that was held last Thursday. The cadets will be divided in two companies, the regular uniformed cadets and those who are not uniformed. The division was made this morning and Captain George Edwards, under whose command the boys did so well last year, instructed the ununiformed company in some of the principal manoeuvres. The uniformed cadets were divided into squads and drilled by the company officers. There were many new faces in the ranks but the older cadets were mingled with them and the first drill was very satisfactory to all.

—Preparatory services will be held in the First Baptist church Friday evening.

In a recent letter to the manufacturers Mr. W. F. Benjamin, editor of the Spectator, Rushford, N. Y., says: "It may be a pleasure to you to know the high esteem in which Chamberlain's medicines are held by the people of your own state, where they must be best known. An aunt of mine, who resides at Dexter, Iowa, was about to visit me a few years since, and before leaving home wrote me, asking if they were sold here, stating if they were not she would take a quantity with her, as she did not like to be without them." The medicines referred to are Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of colds and croup; Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, pains in the side and chest, and Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for bowel complaints. These medicines have been in constant use in Iowa for almost a quarter of a century. The people have learned that they are articles of great worth and merit, and unequaled by any other. They are for sale here by T. S. Armstrong druggist.

GOBB'S SIDE OF THE CASE

HIS EMPLOYES AND FRIENDS BELIEVE THAT HE IS UNJUSTLY ACCUSED.

Mr. Cobb Says That Col. Moore's Patterns Were Left at His Factory, But That He Never Appropriated Them.

Popular opinion seems to be with George B. Cobb in his trouble with Col. C. K. Moore, judging from the way the news of his arrest was received.

His former employes are of the opinion that Mr. Cobb is unjustly accused, and a number of them held a meeting and formulated the following paper expressing their sentiments:

To George, B. Cobb, Esq., Plainfield, N. J.—We, the undersigned, your former employes, having heard of your arrest on a charge of grand larceny beg to assure you by this testimonial that our sympathies are entirely with you. From the knowledge we have of your integrity and straightforward business methods, we believe the charge to be utterly unfounded. Gladly tendering you any assistance in our power at any time, we are respectfully yours, T. Doty, S. T. Williams, F. W. Pew, Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., Newton H. White, Frank Smith, A. Allen and F. Sprague.

It will be remembered that Mr. Cobb was arrested last Monday night on the charge of grand larceny, Col. Moore charging him with using patterns of his patent sewer trap and converting the metal to his (Cobb's) use.

It is but just to Mr. Cobb that his side of the question should be told. He says that when he took possession of the Climax Shopper Company's factory, Col. Moore's patterns were stored there in a box. Col. Moore spoke to Mr. Cobb about the manufacture of the traps by the latter and gave Mr. Cobb a paper on the subject. Mr. Cobb said that the patterns might remain if the Colonel wished. The press of business drove all thoughts of Col. Moore's patent from the mind of Mr. Cobb until Mr. Moore came and said some of his patterns had been stolen. Then Mr. Cobb looked into the box and saw what he supposed were wooden patterns. The ones which Col. Moore alleges were stolen were made of brass. Then came the arrest and the hearing.

Mr. Cobb's friends have no doubt but that the Grand Jury will dismiss the case.

DEATH OF MRS. PROBASCO.

Died Very Suddenly at Her Home After a Brief Illness.

The death of Mrs. Probasco, wife of Dr. John B. Probasco, of East Front street, which occurred this Friday at 11:15, was a great shock to the community, who did not know that she was seriously ill. During the past week she has been confined to her bed and her death resulted from heart failure, with which she had been affected since an attack of grip several years ago. She was fifty-five years old and was the daughter of the late Insley and Margaret Boice, of South Plainfield.

She has been a resident of Plainfield many years. She leave a husband and three sons, Frank, Norman and Walter, also two brothers, Calvin and Luther Boice of South Plainfield, and a sister, Mrs. John Stelle, of Madison avenue.

Mrs. Probasco was a member of the First Baptist church and a thoroughly conscientious Christian woman. The even tenor of her life was a marked trait, and won for her many friends.

One of the sad features of her death was that her husband was away from home on professional duties when she died.

LAW INTERFERED WITH CUPID.

"Bundy" Wallace Was Going to Marry a Girl Under the Age of Consent.

It is seldom that a marriage is declared off, but such was the case last week, when "Bundy" Wallace and Miss Josephine Davis, colored, were slated to be joined in wedlock. The young woman, whom it is claimed is under sixteen years, met Wallace at his home on Race street, early in the evening.

The two went to the home of a friend on Sycamore street, where they were to be married by Rev. Mr. Grobes, but Mrs. Davis, mother of the bride to be, was informed of the affair and summoning Roundsman Frederickson and Patrolman Vanderweg, the three went to the scene of the festivities and learned that the groom had gone for the minister. When he returned he was arrested and taken before Justice Newcorn on the charge of attempting to marry a girl under age. After the Justice had given both a good lecture, they were allowed to go. Mrs. Davis took her daughter home.

Wallace is the same man who was arrested in the borough a week ago for the alleged beating of his common law wife.

DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve is an antiseptic, soothing and healing application for burns, scalds, cuts, bruises, etc., and cures piles like magic. It instantly stops pain. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

GOOD FIELDS TO WORK IN CHINA AND JAPAN AFFORDS PLENTY OPPORTUNITY FOR MISSIONARIES.

Ernest M. Ackerman Relates Some of His Experiences While Touring Through Japan—A Progressive Country, he Says.

Missionary meetings as a general thing are considered uninteresting and the simple announcement of such a meeting is often an excuse for people to stay away, but such is not the case at the Crescent Avenue church, for they have adopted a method whereby missionary meetings are made attractive and interesting. Wednesday the regular prayer meeting took the form of a missionary conference, and there was a large number of people present, as usual, who thoroughly entered into the spirit of missions.

Wm. D. Murray presided, and the subject of China and Japan was introduced by him, after which Arthur C. Maclay, of West Eighth street, at one time a missionary in the above countries, gave an intensely interesting talk on the manners and customs of the people. He talked from knowledge gained while in the work, and he presented facts that carried truth with them in such a way that much additional interest was gained thereby. He also spoke of the many religions of the two countries, and in his opinion the false religions were gradually passing away, the result of the recent war. Upon the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Murray called upon Ernest R. Ackerman, who lately traveled through Japan, and asked him to speak concerning the country.

Mr. Ackerman spoke in a general way and hurriedly told of some things of interest. He told how he and his party were invited to partake of a genuine Japanese meal and after sitting for three hours on the floor eating, they were informed that the meal was about half over and that it had taken four days to prepare it. He also exhibited a pair of native shoes, which he said could be bought for 35 cents in silver and 17 cents in gold in Japan. Mr. Ackerman gave a short sketch of the language and illustrated the same on a blackboard, showing a few of the characters and explaining the same. He said that during his stay in Japan he did not see a drunken person, nor he did not hear any swearing.

In conclusion, Mr. Murray gave a digest of the recent reports of the Presbyterian Board concerning the work in Japan. In the report it was stated that natives were being taught to go out and labor among their own people. This plan was thought to be more advisable than sending additional missionaries in the field. The Missionary Board thinks that the prospects in China and Japan are exceedingly bright for the advancement of Christianity and united effort is urged upon all. After the singing of a hymn, the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Richards and the meeting came to a close.

The great feature regarding the success of these meetings is that speakers are secured who are known and who know what they are talking about.

Inducted at the Wrong Time.

Exhortation is all right in the proper place, but when the peace of a community is disturbed, the law generally takes a hand. Such was the case Thursday when James Emmons and William Calloway engaged in not only an argument but a fight, and they were both arrested by Chief Marshal Wilson and Marshal Hansen. The affair took place on Lincoln place yesterday afternoon. This morning Justice Crosley find Calloway $10, which amount was paid, and Emmons was sent to Somerville for 35 days.

Died in Her Ninetieth.

Mrs. Vermeule, of New Market, widow of the late Henry Vermeule, died last Wednesday afternoon in her ninetieth year after an illness lasting three weeks. She was well known throughout this locality, and many will learn of her death with great surprise. She was a good woman and a faithful Christian. The funeral will probably be held tomorrow afternoon from the house. Several relatives in this city survive Mrs. Vermeule, who up to her death was remarkably hale and hearty for one of her age.

The P. & R. Sold.

The auction sale of properties of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, under the foreclosure of the general mortgage and he directed by the United States Circuit Court, took place Wednesday at Philadelphia. The assets were offered in three separate "parcels." The only bidder was C. H. Coster, representing J. P. Morgan & Co., the head of the Reading Reorganization Committee, and he was the purchaser of the three lots for $4,500,000.

A hacking cough is not only annoying to others, but is dangerous to the one who has it. One Minute Cough Cure will quickly put an end to it. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

LAWYER AND MINISTER PREACH THE GOLD GOSPEL

REV. J. S. CLEAVER BELIEVES THAT THE DANGER OF FREE SILVER TOPS THOSE OF INTEMPERANCE—MC CREADY SYKES TO WAGE EARNER.

The young Lawyer Takes up a Line of Argument to Convince the Wage-Earner That His Interests Are Not With Silver.

The average political speaker spends most of his time in declaring his party to be the first and only one in the eyes of the workingman, and the rest in denouncing the faults and frailties of his opponents. And in those ways did MacCready Sykes, who addressed the meeting of the Gold Democrats at their club rooms at the corner of Muhlenberg place and South Second street, last Thursday, differ from the usual platform speaker. He took a decidedly practical topic and discussed it in a plain and straightforward way. His topic if such it might be called, was as to what would be the practical effect on the wage earner of Bryan's election and an immediate passage of a free silver bill.

The passage of such a bill would, he said, necessitate one of two things, the bullion value of silver would rise to meet that of gold or remain stationary. He asked his hearers to imagine the situation in the beginning of 1897, if allowing for the sake of argument that Bryan was elected and the free silver bill passed. Admitting everything that the silver men claimed, what would be the result? The circulation would be increased, and therefore prices would rise. What prices? The prices of the crude articles, thereby increasing the price of the products made from them. That is all right, but then Mr. Sykes brought forth his chief argument. What would become of the companies that had contracts for the future made in the time of the gold standard and of the railroads and corporations whose income was fixed by rates and prices made permanent by charters and state laws? Prices would be increased and yet these companies would have no increase in their income. They would have to reduce expenses. Repairs and materials had increased in price and the companies would have to retrench in some direction. Where should it be? There was only one way left, and his hearers understood what he meant, a reduction of wages.

He said a remedy that might be suggested was that organized labor should demand a rise in wages in comparison to the rise in prices. That might serve against one company or railroad, but against all of them it would never do. The capitalists had better allow their plants to lie idle than run them at a loss. Is there any way of meeting this situation? Mr. Sykes asked and read Bryan's speech to the working men of Brooklyn to get an answer. The speech he declared was mere idle talk as Bryan could not and did not tell what they are going to do about it.

The meeting was well attended, most of the seats being occupied, and many took part in the informal discussion that followed in which Mr. Sykes and Mr. Atterbury answered a number of questions. The audience was a very enthusiastic one and and seemed to thoroughly appreciate Mr. Sykes' remarks.

FIRST OF THE RECEPTIONS.

A Pleasant Event in School Life Over the Brook.

The first of the monthly receptions to be given at the North Plainfield High Public School, was given Saturday afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock. The assembly hall was well filled with the parents of the High School scholars, who listened with great pleasure to the readings given by Prof. Maxwell Bingham, a graduate of the Boston School of Oratory. Among the best things given by Mr. Bingham was a scene from "Richelieu," "Jimmie Brown and the Pig" and several Irish selections, which were received with tremen dous applause.

Miss Himes, the teacher of the kindergarten department, gave several exceedingly fine instrumental selections, showing that she is a finished musician as well as a teacher. At the close Mr. Loomis invited all the parents to meet Superintendent Warde. Among the guests were State Superintendent of Schools C. W. Baxter and delegations from New York and Westfield.

HURLED BETWEEN HIS LEGS.

A Bolt From a Blue Liner Just Misses a Messenger.

Matthew Sweeney, one of the Western Union Telegraph messenger boys, had a narrow escape Thursday afternoon about 4:15 o'clock. A westbound Blue Line flyer was passing the North Avenue station at the rate of a mile a minute, when a large metal nut, about four inches in diameter, flew from the train and went straight at young Sweeney who was standing near the door of the telegraph office. Sweeney's feet were spread somewhat apart and the heavy piece of metal flew directly between his legs, making a deep dent in the bootblacking stand behind him and then left its mark on the wall. The little incident was too exciting to suit Sweeney. He prefers more room for such missiles.

The Minister Talks in a Racy Vein of Republicans Who Applaud His Sentiments, Which Are Gold and Free.

Rev. James B. Cleaver, formerly pastor of the First Church of Christ in this city, and lately of Board of Trade was the speaker at the regular evening meeting of the Republican Association held in the East Front street church last Thursday. The spacious building was densely filled and many persons were obliged to stand throughout the proceedings.

Ex-Judge William R. Codington introduced the speaker as one not only sound on religion, but also on the money question. The Prohibition party, he contended, is pernicious to any other political organization inasmuch as it reaches many who would. Another moral issue is the issue of government. In the matter of government, the contest between barbarism and civilization is the issue, and there is the leading Anarchist of the day. With marble hearts give him a welcome hand; he's modest and retiring, but every time he opens his mouth he loses a state. His allegiance to the Democratic party is paramount to everything else. As a soldier and a preacher Rev. Mr. Cleaver is a success should vote for McKinley and Silver—the champions of tariff for legitimate revenue. He said that the 16 to 1 issue is not considered politics; it's a moral case. In Illinois years ago they put a government stamp on mulberry leaves for money, and the wind distributed them promiscuously. The lamented General Ulysses S. Grant said veto to the scheme, and if it was not for his veto there would be pieces of irredeemable paper in the country today. Gold is preponderant and will conquerable and if Bryan is elected the law of supply and demand will sink into oblivion. "I for one," said the speaker, "am decidedly against the silver scheme from beginning to end. The purchasing power was perhaps never so great as now. You can't make men honest by law; it has been tried and found wanting in many respects. Of the 307 universities and colleges in the United States, one alone, Cornell, would lose at least $250,000 by the adoption of free silver." In conclusion, the speaker said professional demagogues will of course vote against McKinley, but he predicted 150,000 majority for him in New York City and 300,000 above the Harlem, New Jersey 75,000, and Delaware and Maryland will give large majorities.

LATTER-DAY CREMATION.

Complete Description of the Process of Incineration.

The Method Much More Popular Than It Was Five Years Ago—Number of Crematories Now in Active Operation.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

With the rise of Christianity and the belief in the doctrine of resurrection, the ancient custom of burning the dead fell into disuse. Inhumation took the place of incineration. The modern world has, however, discarded their crude conception of the meaning of resurrection and also knows full well that in less than 50 years the body secreted beneath the sod will decompose into its elements as surely as the corpse exposed on the funeral pyre. But the custom of 1,500 years is not easily overcome and the medieval prejudice against cremation still remains.

It was not until the latter half of the present century that the agitaion in favor of consigning the corpse to the flames began. Jacob Moleschott, the Dutch-Italian scientist, was the apostle of the movement. Progressive men in Italy took up his cause and in 1876 the first crematory of modern times, i.e., in Christain countries, was put into operation at Milan. Later in the same year a crematory was built at Washington, Pa., and a third at Gotha, Germany, in 1878.

Since then the movement has grown rapidly. The United States is the foremost champion, with Italy a close second. Cremation societies have been founded in every country of the globe. In the United States there are over 20 such societies, and a class paper published in Chicago, Park and Cemetery, devotes a portion of each issue to the subject.

A cremation is no such hideous spectacle as one might imagine; in fact, its associations are not near as gloomy as those of the earth burial. When the funeral procession arrives at the crematory, the coffin is first taken from the chapel and placed upon a bier. If so desired, a final ceremony to correspond to that at the grave is performed, and then the bier bearing the coffin is lowered by a hydraulic system to the floor below.

Sometimes the corpse is taken out of the coffin and wrapped in asbestos, but usually coffin and all are burned together. Only the chief mourners are allowed to witness the burning of the coffin with its contents is placed upon a sliding frame and shoved up to the doors of the retort, which are then opened. No fire is visible. But the air is so intensely heated, from 2,000 to 2,500 degrees Fahrenheit, that a beautiful rosy light bathes the interior of the furnace. The retort has average dimensions of ten by five by five feet. It is lined with fire clay and has an outer wall of fire brick.

It takes about two hours to complete the cremation. The process may be witnessed through a window of mica. In many furnaces no fire touches the body; the superheated air alone does the work. There are two flues, one below and one behind and above the corpse. Coal oil is the usual fuel. The rear fire is fed by air obtained through loopholes in the rear of the furnace. It shoots its flames to the front and carries the gases from the body with it. These are driven down into the opening in front, which leads through the under fire back to the chimney in the rear of the retort. So perfect and so powerful is the ventilation that not a particle of gas can escape without passing through both fires and being entirely neutralized by oxidation.

When all the combustible material has been driven off, the furnace is cooled off and the ashes are gathered. The ashes of the corpse are white, those of the clothes and coffin black. The white ashes weight form five to eight pounds. They are picked out with metal tongues and returned to the relatives in metal receptacles.

The remains are variously disposed of. They may be buried in a grave with another member of the family or in a space set apart for this purpose in cemetery companies. The ancient custom of preserving the ashes in urns has, however, the greatest favor. The price of urns ranges from one dollar to fabulous sums. They are to the crematory what marble racontuents are to the cemetery, and as many people cannot be content without a sacrifice of wealth for the deceased [illegible] expensive. Some are made of the most exquisite serpentine stone, covered with elaborate decorations in precious metals. China and bronze are common material, and silver is frequently used.

In New York a columbarium has been built—the cremation cemetery. The columbarium is a large stone building whose inner walls are indented with 600 niches in which the urns may be kept. Thus the sentiment which demands some token of remembrance of the deceased is satisfied by the return in an ancient and poetic custom.

With a few notable exceptions, the church has shown itself apathetic toward the growing practice of cremation. But there are prominent ministers of all denominations who have spoken in favor of it. The pope has declared against cremation, but as it is a question of practice rather than of doctrine, the Catholic church may at any time change its attitude. Strange to say, one of the most enlightened governments of the world, that of Prussia, will permit no cremations in its territories. There is a columbarium in Berlin, but the incinerations take place at Hamburg, Gotha or Heidelburg.

The better educated people of all countries are to a large extent in favor of the reform, but its more rapid spread is hindered by the fact that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred in which the deceased preferred cremation without directly ordering it, the execution of his wish is prevented by the opposition of some more or less distant relative.

In this country the practice of cremation has grown more rapidly than anywhere else with the exception, perhaps, of Italy. It began in 1884 there was but one crematory in the United States, then a second was built at Lancaster, Pa., and a third at New York. The twenty-second has just been completed at Milwaukee. Nine hundred and fifty-four voluntary cremations took place in 1895, as against 28 in the nine years from 1878 to 1885. Forty-six hundred and forty-seven cremations, of which 1,625 fell to New York, is the total to January 1 of this year. The twenty-two American crematories are located at Washington, Pa., Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Pa., Lancaster, Pa., New York city (at Fresh Pond, L. I.), Buffalo, N. Y., Troy, N. Y., Swiburne Island, N. Y., Waverville, N. Y., Los Angeles and Pasadena, Cal., and one at San Francisco, St. Louis, Boston, Cincinnati, Chicago, Detroit, Baltimore, Davenport, Ia., Fort Wayne, Ind., Milwaukee. Thereare three crematories in Germany, and about 28 in Italy, with a total number of cremations almost equal to those of the United States. Other crematories are located at London, Glasgow, Paris, Copenhagen and Stockholm.

In reality it is the old country that most needs the reform. The filthiness and infectious character of cemeteries increases with the thickness of population.

About 5,000 cubic feet of gas are given off by a decaying human body and must find an outlet somewhere. Some of it rises out of the ground and pollutes the air above and about the burial ground, while a portion laterally until it finds an opening generally through a spring or well through which it escapes. The danger from such drinking water is extreme. Very frequently the peculiar sulphurous taste of polluted well water is mistaken for health-giving mineral. So well known is this danger that all over crowded Europe we find regulations prohibiting cemeteries within 300, 500 or even 5,000 feet of private dwellings. The hundred and fifty years after the great plague of London, the cemetery was dug up and every workman employed on the job died of the disease. The miasmatic atmosphere that hovers above a cemetery is wafted along by the wind, and infectious diseases are almost certain to reappear where victims are buried.

The problem of economy in land is intimately connected with that of hygiene. In old and densely populated districts of Europe it has led to the most outrageous abuses. It is but a few years ago that the English government found a large district in a London cemetery filled with 14 layers of coffins, piled side by side, one generation directly on top of the other, with just enough soil to intervene so that the relatives of the last arrival could not detect the fraud.

It has been estimated that 47,000,000 people die annually, and that it takes 21 square miles to bury them. Twenty-one square miles a year are thus taken from the living, and the country within a radius of half a mile is made practically uninhabitable.

E. T. GUNDLACH.

New Theory of Sunstroke.

An English physician has discovered that sunburn is produced by penetrating light rays and not by heat as all. The face of a victim of sunburn is not only swollen, but pitted, and at the bottom of these hollows deposits discloses a freckle. The physician who has made this interesting discovery claims that sunstroke can be averted by wearing a hat and clothes of an orange hue. No remedy is found to be so satisfactory as the use of pigments. A lady who wore a blouse with red and white stripes had red stripes imprinted on her shoulders by the sun underneath the white, while the skin under the red stripes remained normal in color.

TAKING CARE OF THE WIDOW.

She and Her Six Children Get a Husband and Father.

Charles Custer, the popular storekeeper at Renton, came to the Post-Intelligencer office, where I was employed, and related a very sad story. He said that a German woman with six children had arrived in Renton from the old country a few days before on her way to Newcastle to join her husband; that on her arrival in Renton she had learned that her husband had been killed in the mines six weeks before She could not speak a word of English and was without money or friends. Custer said the people of Renton had supplied her immediate wants, and that he had come to Seattle to arrange for the county to take care of her until she was in a position to care for herself and family. When he had finished his story he turned to me and asked what I would advise.

Jarvis and his ranch, with plenty of room for the children to romp in and plenty of milk for them to drink and the four dining-room chairs popped into my mind like a flash, and I replied: "Custer, do you think your widow would consider matrimony as a way out of troubles?"

"Why, the idea almost staggers me," replied Custer. "Who on earth wants to marry a woman with six children, who has only learned of the death of her husband within the last four days? Besides that, she cannot speak a word of English. She speaks German altogether."

"She has not much the better of my man," I replied. "He is a Frenchman, and can neither speak English nor German; but I guess if they get married they soon will be able to understand each other."

Custer went further into the particulars of my scheme. I told him who the man was and my reasons for thinking that he would be willing to marry the German widow. Custer said all. That afternoon Custer went on horse-back over to Jarris' ranch, laid the matter before him, and to his surprise and gratification Peter jumped at the chance. "You go back to town and train the Dutchmenette," said Jarvis. "And I'll hitch up and drive over this evening and have the job done at once."

"All right," said Custer, "but don't forget to put a couple of extra seats in the wagon for the young ones."

"How many did you say there were?" asked Jarvis.

"Only six. Now, don't spend too much time sprucing up, because I'll have everything ready before you can reach town if you go for the horses at once."

As Custer left the farm the old man shouted: "Good-by. You will have to ride lively if you beat me to town. My horses are built for speed. I use them very often, and they can stand it to get over the ground at a rapid pace for once in their lives."

Sure enough, Custer had hardly time to break the news to the widow through the interpreter, before the dashing Frenchman came tearing through the streets like mad, and reined his panting horses up in front of Custer's store. On observing Seattle that day Custer had taken the precaution to secure the necessary license, with the understanding that it could be returned if not used. A preacher was called in, the bride and groom were introduced, the man and wife, in almost the same breath, and half an hour later Mr. and Mrs. Jarvis and the six little ones were comfortably seated in the big lumber wagon, bound for the Jarvis ranch on Cedar river, as happy as clams at high tide.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

A Raspberry Ice Cream.

The most delicious ice creams are those flavored with fruit juices or fruit pulps. They do not usually contain eggs; therefore, they are more like a sherbet than a regular ice cream, except that the cream is a part of both as substituted for the water used in a sherbet. Raspberry cream is one of the most delightful of these light creams. Boil two quarts of raspberries with a pint of sugar for ten minutes. Strain off the juice and squeeze the pulp out of the raspberry. Add it slowly to a pint of boiling milk. Freeze this mixture. When it is cooled, and just before it is ready to pack away, add a pint of cream that has been whipped. Pack the cream away for three hours and it will be ready to serve. A delicate white cake, flavored with bitter almonds, is an excellent accompaniment to this cream. A cream made of an equal quantity of chopped pineapple, cooked in a pint of sugar and strained, or of peaches, may be used. Strain the pineapple or the peaches through a puree sieve that will allow all the fruit pulp to pass through.—N. Y. Tribune.

Summer Salads.

Japanese fish salad is inexpensive and particularly good. To make it, mix two cupfuls of cold cooked fish, shredded, with one cupful of cucumber pickles cut into slices. Add well made French dressing and serve on crisp lettuce leaves.

Jardiniere Salad.—Take equal quantities of cold cooked potatoes, turnips, string beans, beets, celery and tomatoes. Put in a salad bowl and add chopped pickle, olives, capers, hard-boiled eggs and shredded lettuce leaves and serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Salad of Water Cress and Apples.—Use only the tender water cresses. Let them stand half an hour in cold water to become crisp. Then dry them thoroughly. Now mix with this slices of sour apples and a chopped hard-boiled egg. Add a French dressing and serve.—N. Y. Journal.

A Rare Find.

"I cannot play on a single instrument and don't know one tune from another," said the prettiest girl at the hotel. "Are you open to an engagement?" asked a voice in her ear. "I am an agent for a certain kind of freak, and we haven't anything in our show to compare with you."—Detroit Free Press.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—Rev. Dr. Henry Gallagher has resigned the pastorate of the Trinity Baptist church, Brooklyn.

—The High Street Congregational church, Portland, Me., celebrated the 20th anniversary of Rev. Dr. William H. Fenn's pastorate on July 5 with elaborate services.

—Rev. Dr. George L. Robinson, pastor of the Roxbury (Mass.) Presbyterian church, has resigned in order to accept the professorship of Old Testament literature and exegesis in Knox college, Toronto, Canada.

—Archbishop O'Reilly, of Adelaide, has set type like a professional compositor. When he established the Catholic Record in West Australia he was obliged to set his own type, and to teach the art to other priests, besides editing the paper.

—Jules Simon was converted to Catholicism, according to the Paris Le Verite, shortly before his death by his little granddaughter, who had been attending the catechism class at the Madeleine. She brought him a confessor and he received the sacraments while in full possession of all his faculties.

—Mr. Rowlands, Q. C., recorder of Swansea, who has just embraced Catholicism, graduated from Oxford. He became a clergyman of the Church of England, then head master of a grammar school, and in 1871 turned lawyer, was made a queen's counsel, entered Parliament, and later was appointed to the bench.

—How great the growth of ritualistic practices has been in the Church of England during the last 14 years is shown by some figures compiled by the Church Times Guild. In 1882 only communion was administered in 123 churches in Great Britain, in 1896 in 474 churches. Incense, used in nine churches 14 years ago, is now used in 207. The figures for churches using lights are 1,091 and 2,581; and for those where vestments are employed, 336 and 1,632, and for those where the worshipers face the east, 1,662 and 5,964. The change indicates in many cases some change in doctrine.

TO GET INTO THE NAVY.

How a Boy May Become a United States Blue Jacket.

When a boy wishes to become a sailor in the navy he applies for one of the three "receiving" ships. They are the Vermont at the New York navy yard, the Wabash at the Boston navy yard and the Richmond at the League Island navy yard in Philadelphia. The boys must be between the ages of 16 years of age, sound in health and be able to read and write to some extent. No distinction is made in race, and it is a singular fact that the colored boys who apply are almost invariably able to read and write better than the white boys. The board the Vermont the only reading test applied is contained on a card, which is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States, in congress assembled, that fraudulent enlistment and the receipt of any pay or allowance thereunder is hereby declared an offense against naval discipline, and made punishable by general court-martial."

"What I have just read to you is a law of the United States, and it means that if you do not tell the truth about your age, parents or guardians, or if you do not do your duty as men of military service, you may be tried by court-martial, put in prison, or punished in some way."

The last paragraph of this is what boys are usually required to read. The officers are not very strict about the hard words, and so almost any boy can pass the test. After being admitted Uncle Sam gives each boy an outfit. His parents or guardian must sign a paper giving up his claim to services until he is 21 years of age. He becomes known at once as a third-rate apprentice, and in a few days he is sent to a training school at Newport, where he is taught rudimentary things about a sailor's life. After remaining at Newport for six months he is transferred to one of two training ships. These are the Essex and the Alliance. He remains on one of these for six months and is then rerated.

On the voyage he learns how to handle the sails, how to sew and splice and how to handle guns. Innumerable other things about a sailor's life he also picks up, and when he returns he is transferred to a modern man-of-war, where he becomes an apprentice of the second-class. Here he takes his place with the regular crew, and has his allotted share of the daily routine to perform. He is examined every three months, and usually he becomes an apprentice of the first-class in six months, when he has the rank that corresponds to the rank of seaman with sailors.—Harper's Round Table.

Japanese Coal in California.

Japanese coal is to be placed upon the California market in competition with the standard grades that have been used there for years. Three large steamers are loading coal at Kobe for San Francisco, and two more steamers are under charter to carry similar cargoes. They will probably be in within the next 30 days. The bulk of the coal now consumed in California now comes from Puget Sound and British Columbia mines, while a big share is supplied by Australia.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Breathing Through Its Tail.

The periophthalmus, a species of fish which is found on the coasts of the Indian ocean and Western Africa, breathes through its tail, and it is the only fish known to possess that power. The fish may often be seen clinging by their fins to the rocks and mangrove roots, while keeping their tails immersed in the water, and their respiration is affected through the skin of the tail. It has been proved that when the tail is coated with oil or varnish the fish dies of suffocation.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

HIGH KITE FLYING IN BOSTON.

Success of Experiments on Blue Hill—Possibilities of the Future.

The details of the high flight of kites at Blue Hill observatory show the experiment to have been a success in other respects than the altitude to which it was possible to send the kites. This, it has been stated, was upward of a mile and a quarter, the instrument reaching a height of 7,200 feet above the level of the country surrounding the hill. As the meteorograph is suspended quite a distance below the upper kites, they, of course, reached an altitude of 8,000 or 200 feet greater. The kites were three in number, all of them on this occasion of the Eddy pattern, two of them being at he end of the line and the third some hundreds of feet below. The latter were of large size, two of them being six feet in their largest dimension, and the third one a monster of nine feet, presenting some 65 square feet of surface to the wind. This varied from 18 to 31 miles per hour at the surface, and the pull of the wire which held the kites mounted at times to upwards of 125 pounds, quite as much as Mr. Clayton and his assistants, Fergusson and Blair, could, at times, handle.

The instrument which was sent up was a meteorograph of three elements, giving continuous readings of air pressure, temperature and humidity, and it was maintained at its greatest height for upward of half an hour. The readings of the thermometer show a fall in temperature of about 18 degrees between the surface and the upper air. A short distance above the earth a cloud was encountered through which the kites rose, coming out into clear weather above. In the midst of the cloud, as might be expected, the humidity rose to 100 per cent., this being the reading of the hygrometer. Above the cloud the air was quite dry, more so than at the surface. The record of the instrument, in its variations of humidity, affords a tolerably accurate measure of the thickness of the cloud, which from the calculations made seems to have been about 2,500 feet. The flight fairly taxed again the resources of the observatory, for to secure this great height it was necessary to put out 2½ miles of wire. Moderate kite-flying is a portion of the regular duties of the men at Blue Hill, for Mr. Rotch has recognized the value of this means of securing information about the weather conditions of the upper air, but these very high flights are a little out of the regular order. An attempt to eclipse the record will, however, be made later in the week, when Prof. Harrington and Mr. Archibald can be present, and again later in the season, when it is expected that Mr. Eddy will be once more with the kite-flyers on Blue Hill.—Boston Transcript.

NO POLES FOR TROLLEYS.

Chemitz Hooses Sustain the Guy Wires of the Line.

Chemnitz, Saxony, two years ago banished horses from her street cars and substituted the trolley. In a report to the state department Consul J. C. Monaghan says one of the principal novelties of the adopted system is that no poles are used, the method of swinging wires is by means of ornamental rosettes fastened into the woodwork or walls of houses, having projecting hooks to which the wires are attached. These rosettes are fashioned and are tested with seven times the weight they will be called upon to bear. Owners of houses, without exception, preferred to allow the use of their houses free rather than have poles out in the streets. The streets through which the cars wind their way are wider than Washington street, Boston, or Westminster street, Providence. The railway tracks, in conformity to the law, are level with the pavement, and reduce to vehicles of any kind are rare. The gauge is narrower than in America, but the cars keep the track and run as rapidly and as smoothly as in the United States. In the business city they run 120 yards per minute, and in the suburbs 330 yards per minute.

The increase of traffic since the introduction of electricity in Chemnitz has been 50 per cent. No cars have no conductors. The motorman is the only person on board who represents the company. By doing away with conductors the company saves 44,000 marks annually. The fare is only 10 pfennigs, or a trifle over 2½ cents, on all except trains including transfers. Should 150,000 persons evade payment in 12 months the loss would be only 18,000 marks. It would take 450,000 evasions to fare to offset the company's saving by dispensing with conductors' salaries. Among a people who pay for food and drink in restaurants, saloons and gardens on their honor alone it is unlikely the company loses much. Culprits in this respect, when detected, are punished by having their names advertised in the newspapers as a warning to others. Fare boxes are attached to both ends of the car, so there is no such excuse as "difficulty in getting forward."—Scientific American.

Flower Girls in London.

So seriously has the city of London taken the custom of the buttonhole bouquets worn by stockbrokers that it has actually given the women who sell flowers receipts. The flower girls, of course, of all ages, are only permitted by the regulations to set down their baskets and sell the flowers around the iron railings opposite the Royal Exchange. They are among the most respected stall holders in the city. They are uniformly polite, as they may well be, since they may be said to be on speaking terms with all the youth and gallantry of Threadneedle street and Throgmorton avenue, and they are very skilful in the making of boutonnieres. —Chicago Chronicle.

Preferable.

"Go to," said the city man to the hard-fisted agriculturist, "you have hayseed in your hair!"

"I think that hayseed in my hair is preferable to what is in my head, such as I perceive you harbor," was the rural-ite's reply.—Vogue.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

The Treaty of Peace Negotiated at Shimonoseki.

Ex-Secretary Foster, Who Was the Confidential Adviser of the Emperor of China, Tells of the Work Done by Li Hung Chang.

Gen. Foster, who accompanied Li Hung Chang on his mission to negotiate peace with Japan, in the capacity of confidential adviser to the emperor of China, contributes a characteristic sketch of the Chinese viceroy. Concerning the treaty of Shimonoseki, Mr. Foster says:

"While he thus bore the most important trust ever committed to him by the emperor, it was by no means a task to his liking. He was by nature high-spirited, and his military and political success had made him haughty and imperious. He was proud of his country, of its history and of its institutions. He partook of the national feeling of contempt for the Japanese, and he felt keenly the humiliation which the war had inflicted upon his people. Besides, the mission to which he had been assigned would make him unpopular and expose him to fresh indignities from his partisan enemies. He felt that he was taking his life in his hand when he should place himself in Japanese power. But he also exposed himself to the incredulous foreign diplomats at Peking; but he dared not shrink from the duty which his sovereign had imposed upon him.

"Seldom has a public man, under such trying circumstances, borne himself with such true heroism and patriotic devotion. A high-spirited and proud man, he went to the land of the enemy of his country, prepared to sue for peace; and yet he never failed to maintain his accustomed demeanor or his country's dignity. And it is due to the Japanese plenipotentiaries who were designated to receive and treat with him in Shimonoseki to state that they exhibited toward him the highest marks of respect, and during the entire negotiations allowed no word to escape from their lips, and nothing to occur, which might be considered personally offensive to their distinguished guest. He had the good fortune to conduct negotiations with two compeers, men of marked ability, and worthy representatives of their sovereign and race. Marquis Ito, the prime minister, is a typical member of the progressive party, educated in Europe, and trained in modern political science and methods of government, but an ardent and patriotic Japanese. He had a valuable colleague in Count Mutsu, minister of foreign affairs, who had been long in his country's service at home and abroad. Marquis Ito, ten years before, had been sent by his government to China to *arrange with the Viceroy Li a settle*ment of Coresn affairs; and the same subject brought the viceroy to Japan, but under changed conditions for the negotiations.

"The defeated party always negotiates at a disadvantage, and the viceroy did not fail to appreciate the situation; but the judgment of the imperial observer is that he came out of it with as much credit as could be expected, and it is quite certain that he obtained better terms for his country than any other Chinese official could have secured. This was due in part to the personal consideration in which he is held by Japanese negotiators, but mainly to his own diplomatic experience and his thorough knowledge of his own government.

"If Japan was robbed of a large measure of her triumph by the interposition of the European powers, and it has been stated that the viceroy consented in the treaty to the cession of the Liaotung peninsula only because of his knowledge that European power would compel its return to China. But this is not a fair statement of the facts. Neither the viceroy nor his government had received any information from Russia that any other power, before the treaty was signed, was in its action on the subject; but he had been a close student of European politics for many years, and his action was based upon convictions born of that study. He believed that Russia was not forcing language, but he has secretaries charged with the duty of keeping him informed of current events, and he had much intercourse with diplomats and other intelligent foreigners, and he is well knew that Russia, if no other nation, would not allow the domination of Cores by Japan, or its permanent lodgment on the continent so near to Peking and Russia's own possessions, and he was willing to make the Liaotung cession in order to escape other harsh terms.

"But the viceroy's statesmanship and strength of character were most conspicuous in his conduct after the treaty was signed and he had returned to China. He sent urgent telegraphic representations to the emperor and to the foreign office, calling for prompt ratification and exchange of the treaty in spite of the influence of his enemies at national clamor. His personal enemies were actively exerting themselves against the treaty, led by Viceroy Chang Chi-tung, who had written the highly offensive address on the occasion of his birthday celebration, and who to that end was fomenting the rebellion in Formosa, and supplying the rebels with arms from the imperial arsenal at Shanghai. It greatly redounds to the credit of the young emperor that in such a grave crisis he followed the advise of his venerable counselor, and ratified the treaty."—Century.

THE STORM'S HAVOC.

Immense Damage Done All Along the Atlantic Coast.

[Special to The Daily Press.]

New York, Sept. 30.—All the telegraph wires as far south as New Orleans, having been rendered useless by the hurricane which passed over this city early this morning, the local weather official, R. B. Dunn, was in consequence unable this morning to tell the extent of the damage by the storm.

Its centre today, he said, was over Michigan, and as it was now moving in a northeasterly direction, later on the hurricane would return and deluge this section again. The storm covers all the lake regions, and the winds along the coast and inland as far as the Mississippi valley during the night were blowing from thirty to fifty-six miles an hour.

The storm last night created great havoc along the Southern Atlantic coast. The greatest damage occurred at Savannah. A number of lives were lost there and property worth over $1,000,000 was destroyed. Telegraph wires south of Baltimore were in such bad condition this morning that communication was practically broken off.

PROTECTION AND GOLD.

and how, in reality, it would have the opposite effect. In case of Bryan's election, the gold would all be hoarded and hidden away and it would take the mints nearly fifteen years to coin enough silver to take the place of the precious metal. He gave statistics and figures to prove his statement.

"Do you think they will carry the House and Senate? Never, while there are as many patriotic Democrats as there are today!" was the way he started a fresh burst of eloquence, in which he made an appeal to his hearers to support McKinley and Hobart and defeat the man who, he stated, is exciting the masses and trying to array class against class. The capitalist, he declared, was not an enemy of labor but a necessity, as without capital there would be no employment for the workingman.

Another result that he predicted would follow Bryan's election was the reducing by one-half of the value of the deposits in the savings banks, and thereby the workingmen, women, boys and girls would have to suffer as most of their savings were kept there. The building loan associations, which also contain money of many a poor workman, would be affected the same, so he said, and their savings reduced by one-half. Pensions were referred to. Mortgage-holders would be affected similarly, he predicted, and a clause would be added making them payable in gold instead of either gold or silver as at present.

For the information of his hearers he stated that it was not necessary to elect a Democratic House and Senate to have free silver, but that the President can compell the mints to open their doors for the unlimited coinage of silver.

The Mexican dollar and its present value was again rejuvenated as an example, while Japan and China were given as examples of free silver countries.

The speaker then left the financial question and reverted to the tariff and laid the present financial depression to the Wilson bill. In contrast he suggested the good times between '65 and '92 when the Republicans were in power. The present tariff, he said, did not yield sufficient revenue to support the government.

He then told something of his own experience as a labor representative before the committee of ways and means of the house when the Wilson bill was considered.

He compared the characters of the two candidates for president according to his estimation. McKinley was the best champion labor has every had, so he said. He closed his remarks with another appeal to the voters.

Chairman McInness followed a selection by the band with the announcement that Judge Wilbur A. Mott was indisposed and that William B. Sutherland, of Newark, would speak. Mr. Sutherland did not prelude his speech with the usual eloquent nothings but got down to business at once. He said he was not going to indulge in statistics and theories but stick to plain facts. He was of the opinion that the tariff question was one of personal interest and convenience but the financial question affects all alike. To begin at the begining, he said that money is a measure of value and therefore there must be a standard. Although we thought that for some time we were maintaining two standards, he said, one was really rated by the other. Silver was not really demonitized but retained its same relation to gold ,the real standard.

The silver movement he characterized as a catch-penny affair, intended to catch the popular fancy as free trade did four years ago, and its chief exponent, Bryan, he went on to say, was trying to arouse labor against capital without real reason. He then discussed what free silver meant. Under the present conditions it would mean that the government would have to give one dollar for fifty-three cents of bullion, and that that would necessitate the taxing of the people to supply the forty-seven cents for every dollar coined. This taxation would be forced by the silver mine owners, he went on, and thus there would be taxation without representation.

Judge Mott was present and concluded the meeting with a few remarks, stating his sorrow at the present inability to speak, and his willingness to take part in some future meeting if so desired.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Dresden now has a concert hall on the model of the new Gewandhaus at Leipzig that will seat 1,400 persons.

Mascagni is composing an opera on a Japanese libretto by Sig. Illeo for the fall season at La Scala, Milan.

Wagner's violin teacher, Robert Sipp, who is now 90 years of age, was present at this summer's performances at Bayreuth.

Reginald de Koven, who has set to music a number of Eugene Fields' poems, is writing new music for some of the poet's later lullabies.

Lasalle, the baritone, who, it was supposed, had left the stage, will appear in "The Flying Dutchman," at the Paris Opera Comique next winter.

Vienna will celebrate the hundredth anniversary of Franz Schubert next year by an exhibition of objects connected with the composer and a series of performances of his works.

Paul Dresser, the song writer and author of "Just Tell Them That You Saw Me," has written a new piece called "Don't Tell Her That You Love Her," which is to appear in an early edition of Ev'ry Month.

Paderewski has written a new minuet for the piano. He has dedicated it to his American admirers and calls it "Menuet Moderne," in contradistinction to his famous "Menuet a l'Antique," which was written in 1883.

Queen Elizabeth of Roumania, Carmen Sylva, has written an opera libretto in French on a Turkish plot for Mr. Massanet. The queen is probably the only living author who has written verse in four languages, French, German, Swedish and Roumanian.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

The wife of Li Hung Chang is said to possess 2,000 frocks and has half that number of waiting women in attendance upon her.

The late Jules Simon's library contained about 25,000 books, to which he could go, he insisted, with his eyes closed and find the exact volume which he wanted.

A suit of armor has been discovered in the old Chateau di la Tour de Pinon, which is thought to be the one ordered for Joan of Arc by Charles VII., during the siege of Orleans, and presented to her at Bourges. It is said to correspond exactly in the description handed down and was made for a woman five feet three inches in height.

The girl who sat as model for Sir John Millais' "Cinderella," "Callia' Herrin'" and "Sweetest Eyes Were Ever Seen" is now a married woman, residing in a pretty home in Richmond, where a pair of dearest eyes looks in a signed proof of "Cinderella" on the wall. She also possesses a beautiful gold locket given her by the artist as a remembrance of the famous picture.

England is taking quite good-naturedly the fact that a bold snap-shot artist caught the prince of Wales and Princess Charles of Denmark recently and is now exhibiting them through the medium of the cinematographs, in which the prince gravely lifts his hat from his head and strokes his hair much as any man does, while the charming princess calmly adjusts the ruffles about her throat in exact imitation of all her sisters who wish to know that they are "all right."

STAMPS AND COLLECTORS.

Belgium has issued a railway packet stamp of 60 cents, lilac and black.

Cape of Good Hope, 2½ pence is now blue, and the two shillings yellow.

In Italy a new postal card to be issued, on the occasion of the inauguration of the monument to Victor Emanuel. It will be of the value of ten centimes, and bear the effigy of that monarch.

Stamp dealers give valuable aid to government officials in capturing stamp thieves, but, of course, solely on their own account. If they can make the thief disgorge, or pay for their plunder, they drop the matter right there, whereas the government never forgets or forgives.

The ancient feudal castle of Abin, near Huy, in the province of Liege, Belgium, which was sold some years ago by Count of Looz-Cowarem, has been purchased by the heirs of the count. One of the curiosities of the castle is a room papered entirely with old Spanish stamps of nineteen quartos, which are now very rare.

Philadelphia has a Philatelic society, with nearly a hundred active members. It meets twice a month throughout the year, and at the meetings the issues of new stamps are discussed, also the fluctuations in values. Very rare stamps are occasionally exhibited, as many of the members are advanced collectors, and some have priceless albums.

DOINGS THE WORLD OVER.

New Zealand's legislative council has just voted to exclude the Chinese and all other Asiatics from the colony.

In commemoration of the thirteen hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the see of Canterbury, it is proposed to erect a statue of Theodore of Tarsius, the only Greek archbishop of Canterbury.

By a fire in the Rumanzieff museum at Moscow the Panin hall, containing the public library of the city, was destroyed. The collections in the adjacent Rumanzieff and Dolgorouki galleries are damaged by water.

Robinson Crusoe's island, Juan Fernandez, is said to have disappeared in the earthquake which shook up Chili last March. The Chilian government has sent a vessel to verify the story.

In the banks of London are deposits to the amount of £6,543,017, which have remained unclaimed for 30 years. During that time the depositors have not added to their accounts nor drawn upon them; consequently they are supposed to be dead.

THEATRICAL.

"Sue" and Annie Russell are still enjoying their double triumph at Hoyt's Theatre. The time is close at hand, however, when their run at Hoyt's must end; October 12 is as long as they can stay there, and Manager Chas. Frohman is looking for another theatre to which he can transfer the piece. Great interest centres in Annie Russell's interpretation of this Bret Harte heroine which has revived recollections of her great leap into histrionic prominence on this same stage in "Esmeralda" and later in "Elaine." In it she is doing the finest work of her career. Nobody who sees the sweet and gentle creature that Miss Russell transfigures from Bret Harte's pages can help falling in love with her or applauding the actress who so charmingly embodies the character.

—Philip VanWyck, Jr., of New York, has rented Oscar S. Teale's residence on Mercer avenue, through Joseph T. Vall's agency.

—Prof. Samuel D. Frasee and his orchestra will furnish the music for a dance and house-warming at Three Bridges on the 14th of October.

FOR CHRIST AND CHURCH

ALL IN READINESS FOR THE CONVENTION OPENING.

Delegates From all Over the State Have Come and the Reception and Assignment Committee Have Had a Busy Time in Arranging for Their Entertainment—Story of the Day.

This evening Plainfield's population will be increased by several thousand, for the delegates to the tenth annual State Convention of the Christian Endeavor Society have begun to arrive and every train brings another delegation from some Jersey town.

Young women, young men, elderly people whose hair has already begun to be tinged with gray—they all come members of that grand movement that has spread so rapidly over this continent and even across the water. The sun was the first to receive them, for after being missed for several days he came out yesterday in all his glory as if to welcome the many Endeavorers who will gather in this city for the next three days for prayer, praise and conference.

At the North Avenue station, the the members of the reception committee, wearing the white cap which is to be donned so extensively at the convention by the committees, choir and ushers, appeared early to receive and welcome the delegates as they arrived. Even the early trains this morning brought a group of the visiting Endeavorers, and soon they were on their way to the registration office at the First Baptist church, under the guidance of one of the white capped Endeavorers of the reception committee. The city itself was beginning to awake to the importance of the occasion as party after party of delegates passed by and the decorations began to appear. Some of the merchants had already arranged their windows so as to conform with the convention colors, green and white, and the State colors, orange and black. The monogram of the society was also displayed in many store windows.

The arch over Park avenue, at the corner of Front street, has also assumed an appropriate dress, orange and black bunting was draped on the back ground of white, while the light green bunting was worked in with the rest in a tasteful manner.

At the registration office in the basement of the First Baptist church all was bustle and excitement, but the work of registering the delegates and assigning them boarding places went forward without interruption. One of alcoves of the main room had been partitioned off for the assignment department. At the other end was the information bureau and the good literature table. As the delegates came in they were shown a long table where they had a chance to fill out their application blanks and credentials.

Jos. M. Hawkins was in charge of the information bureau with Thad Doane, Jr., as his right hand man. Here the delegates presented their credentials and were registered and received badges and programmes. The postoffice, to which the delegates send their mail, is also here.

The good literature table on which were displayed the supplies of the United Society of Christian Endeavor was looked after by Edward Hazen.

The assignment bureau was complete in all its arrangements. The delegates who wished entertainment applied here and were assigned to their various quarters. A score of bright-faced lads, members of the Junior Society—pages, their badges called them,—were ready to direct the delegates to their boarding place and they were kept busy.

The assignment bureau was under the charge of John G. MacLaughlin and he certainly had his hands full. His assistants were W. O. Chapman, G. F. Brown, R. W. Barnes, Fred Smith, Wm. P. Spangenberg, Chas. H. Smith, Wm. A. Crawford, Frank J. Hubbard, Misses Mabel Bonnell, Ernestine Smith, Grace Yerkes, Bessie Blair, Lizzie Dunn, Sue Woodland and Bertha Needham.

The members of the reception committee on duty during the morning were, besides the chairman, Horace J. Martin, the following: Mrs. W. S. Lewry, Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux and the Misses Adelaide Runyon, Helen Cuming, Annie Wyckoff, Emma V. Fish, Eda Beekman, Minnie G. Morse, Julia Belknap, Mary Chase, Florence Hawkins and Captola Conover.

The committee at the registration office have looked well after the appearance of the room, and bunting of the State and covention colors has been used to good advantage. The partition that separates the assignment bureau is colored with white, with a touch of green here and there makes the effect very pretty.

The convention hall is all ready for the meeting tonight. The chairs have been arranged, the final touches added to the decorations and all that is now needed is that grand gathering of happy bright faces that will fill every crook and cranny at the opening service tonight. A wheelroom has been arranged for the convenience of the delegates while in one of the stores next door a Christian Endeavor lunch room has been established.

The service opens at 7:30 o'clock, but long before that the stream of delegates will head in that direction.

"Sing while waiting" says a big sign, and so the Christian Endeavorers will probably lift up their voices in some of those familiar tunes that add so much to the effectiveness of the meetings.

As the convention is especially for the delegates from the different societies, they will be given first chance at the seats in Convention Hall. Half an hour after the meeting begins, the door will be opened to all. For the benefit of the local people Mr. Moody will hold a meeting at the First Baptist church, beginning at 7:45 o'clock.

Some people think that it is an easy thing to take charge of a convention, but don't you believe it. Poor Mr. Anthony! He is chairman of the '96 convention and most of the responsibility falls on his shoulders. They are broad, but they need to be to carry the load. He is dragged here and there, asked questions innumerable until the brain of any ordinary man would be all in a whirl. He needs a thousand hands, and entire bodies for that matter, but as he can't have them he uses other people's instead.

The office of the '96 committee is in the Y. M. C. A. building and a lively place it is. The State officers, most of them, were there this morning which only makes things all the more exciting. Joseph M. Hawkins, the Secretary, is a treasure. Without him there is no doubt but that Mr. Anthony would have to give up in dispair. He has been superintending the registration office this morning and keeping a watchful eye on everything.

Several hundred delegates arrived this morning, coming from all parts of the State, and they are now arriving in crowds, each train bringing a fresh installment. They will continue to arrive all this afternoon, to-morrow and Friday, some coming for the entire convention and others for only a short time.

Politicians, local entertainers and the local churches have all given up their regular meeting this week and you needn't expect to see, hear or talk anything but Christian Endeavor and the convention for the next three days.

The Daily Press will contain a complete and detailed account of the convention. A special staff of capable reporters will cover all the meeting, and delegates will find a true history of the convention by procuring copies of The Press. The complete set of papers can be obtained by leaving orders at the information bureau, at Convention Hall, or at The Daily Press office, and the set will be sent to any addr*ess on* payment of 10 cents.

A brief session or conference of the Evangelistic Workers was held in the chapel of the First Presbyterian church at 11 o'clock today. Rev. F. B. Everett, Superintendent of the Evangelistic Department of the State presided. Rev. Mr. Parmeley, of Oceanic, spoke of the work in the Hollywood Union, and Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes and Rev. Dr. Barnes gave brief talks.

HANDLING THE CROWD.

List of the Ushers Officiating at the Christian Endeavor Convention.

Although many do not realize it, the task of an usher at the Moody evan*gelistic meetings* and at the convention is no easy one. It was necessary to secure an army of them so as to be able to handle the crowd at all the meetings. That has been done and the organization successfully accomplished. It is no easy job to direct them all, either. All this has been done, however, and very successfully, too. The general committee in charge consists of Harold Serrell, chairman, Harry C. VanEmburgh and George R. Cornwall. They bear the title of chief ushers and their assistants are

DINED THE PEN PUSHERS

DR. HUNTER ENTERTAINED NEWSPAPERMEN AT THE SANITARIUM.

A Delectable Menu Provided for the Inner Man and Brief and Pithy Toasts Responded to by Each of the Guests.

The new sanitarium at Netherwood recently purchased by Drs. Hunter, of New York, formally opened Tuesday evening when the proprietors gave a complimentary dinner to the press of New York, Philadelphia and Plainfield. There were present representatives of the New York Herald, Times, World, Sun, Post, Journal, Mail and Express, Brooklyn Eagle and Standard, Philadelphia Inquirer and Plainfield Daily Press. The guests sat down to dinner at 8 o'clock, and amid wit, humor, pathos and fact, with a side dish of politics, an unexcelled menu was presented in a most tempting manner. After all had partaken of the good things provided, ex-Councilman Spangenberg, one of the guests, proposed a toast for the hosts. This was given with hearty good cheer and brought forth speeches from Drs. Hunter, who explained very concisely the objects and aims of the institution.

It was said that consumption can be and has been cured by the method employed at the sanitarium. During a practice of fifty years Drs. Hunter have treated 60,000 people with great success, and people who had been given up to die had been cured by their method. Every representative present was then called upon, and each one responded most happily. It is seldom that a number of newspaper men assembled at such an occasion, and there was an exchange of thoughts and ideas that was truly delightful to all. Besides the newspaper men present, there were several physicians and lawyers who gave additional honor to the event. All present finally joined in a discussion of the method of treatment given at the sanitarium and many valuable points were brought out. An adjournment was made to the parlors where the guests enjoyed good cigars and more speeches. Each one present joined in saying that Drs. Hunter were right royal hosts and that they had made no mistake in establishing his enterprise at Netherwood, amid the most pleasant surroundings.

Dr. Bliss's Good Work.

The Morning Advertiser has a good word for the Rev. Dr. Bliss, formerly pastor of the Crescent Avenue church in Plainfield. "Washington Heights Presbyterian church, Amsterdam avenue and 155th street, is fast gaining members under the pastorate of Rev. John C. Bliss, D. D. The young people's meetings, held every Wednesday evening, are attractive and instructive, and the lads and lassies of the Sunday school attend regularly.

The Physicians Dine.

The Plainfield Medical Association partook of their annual dinner at the Hotel Tuileries Tuesday. Covers were spread for twelve, and the physicians all declared that the menu was par excellence. Dr. Murray introduced the subject for consideration and a pleasant informal discussion followed. Those present were Drs. Ard, Clawson, Murray, Tomlinson, Gastou, Carman, Long, Davis, Manning, Simpson and Turner. The latter, who is associated with Dr. Simpson, was elected a member of the association.

—Welcome, Christian Endeavorers.

MUST BE BORN AGAIN.

THE SUBJECT OF MR. MOODY'S TALK LAST EVENING.

There is Something Besides Vows and Resolutions; You Must Have the True Spirit of Christ to Get to Heaven.

The Christian Endeavorers have won for themselves a reputation for enthusiasm and energy that was well borne out at the fourth of the series of evangelistic meetings which Dwight L. Moody is now conducting in Plainfield, held at the Jersey Cycle Academy, now called Convention Hall, Tuesday night. It was the last evening meeting before the convention, and the spirit of the approaching gathering seemed to pervade the vast dowry. The chorus choir, most of them in their white caps, that are to distinguish them during the convention, opened the meeting with a rousing song service led by F. H. Burke. Howard Case acted as accompanist, and Whitney Frazee as cornetist.

The hall began to fill as soon as the doors were opened, and when Mr. Moody rose to regularly open the meeting there was hardly a vacant seat to be found in that vast assemblage. Everybody rose to unite in the opening hymn, "Hide Me." Rev. C. L. Goodrich then led in prayer, after which followed a short period of silent prayer. The solo "She touched the hem of his garment," was sung with great power and feeling by Mr. Burke.

President Anthony said that some people had been circulating reports that the hall was unsafe. This was utterly false, he declared, as it had been thoroughly inspected by Plainfield's building inspector and pronounced perfectly safe. He then gave out the notices of the coming meetings. Then the ushers passed the collection baskets, while the choir gave another selection. Everybody joined in that rousing song, "Onward Christian Soldiers" and a heart-felt prayer by Rev. Dr. Richards followed. Mr. Burke then sang in his usual impressive manner, "When the Mists Have Rolled Away," assisted by the choir.

Then Mr. Moody came forward for his talk. He first requested that all who believed that Jesus Christ taught the truth should raise their hand. The response was unanimous. If He did teach the truth, continued Mr. Moody, then I am going to bring before you a question, perhaps the most important one you have ever been asked. Have you been born again? Jesus teaches that a man must be born again to reach the Kingdom of God. You cannot force or buy your way in, you cannot steal in, you must be born again. It were better, said Mr. Moody, that we had never come into this earth than live here and not be born again.

God has been very good to me, he continued, He has showered blessings on me, but the greatest was the blessing of the new birth when I became a joint heir of Heaven with Jesus Christ. We cannot afford to be deceived in this question.

This is the A B C of God's alphabet. Men, that find so many doctrines that trouble them in the Bible, will see them all vanish when they are born again. The new birth answers ten thousand questions, it answers them all at once.

I have asked a great many people, remarked Mr. Moody, why they think they are Christians. One man said

MIND AND MAN LOOSE

AN INMATE OF THE MORRIS PLAINS ASYLUM ESCAPES TO PLAINFIELD.

Stopped at Stirling on His Way and Wanted to Kiss and Embrace His Former Employer—He Was Taken Back.

Perhaps you remember that German coachman, Wilhelm Kumpf, who became insane in this city last spring and was then taken to the Morris Plains State Hospital for the Insane. Yesterday he escaped from that institution and came to this city only to be captured and carried back again. Keeper L. R. Herrick had eight prisoners under his charge Tuesday morning at the Hospital and, as usual, took them out for an airing. They were down at the "Oaks" picking up apples when Kumpf, who was one of the number, dodged behind the bushes and started on a run. Keeper Herrick pursued him for a short distance and then returned to look after his other charges. He traced the escaped lunatic through Morristown and in this direction. Knowing that he had friends in this city the keeper rode over on his wheel, reaching here at 8 o'clock.

Meanwhile Kumpf had gone on to Stirling. Before his mind had become unbalanced he had been employed by H. A. Streuli, as coachman. Mr. Streuli and Evarts Tracy have partners at Stirling yesterday looking at the ruins of Mr. Streuli's silk factory when the demented man came up to them. He was profuse in his delight at meeting them, tried to kiss their hands and wanted to embrace them. Dr. Parkhurst, he declared, would come to see them soon, for in that direction did his insanity run. He wanted them to take him home with them, but they refused and tried to get the Stirling authorities to hold him as they knew he must have escaped. When they reached Plainfield, however, they were treated to a call *from the demented coachman, who in*sisted that Dr. Parkhurst would be with them soon.

Then Kumpf went to the home of Rev. Edward Klonks, with whom he had been staying when sent to the Hospital. Now it happened that Keeper Herrick knew of his friendship for Rev. Mr. Klonks and had arrived there just two minutes before him. When Kumpf came his keeper took in the situation at a glance. He had the people in the house keep the escaped lunatic there while he disappeared through the back door, found Sergeant Riely and soon the man was placed in the city lockup. There he spent the night and this morning was escorted back to the hospital by Keeper Herrick and Special Officer Jeremiah Cash.

This was Kumpf's first attempt to escape.

To Be Moved Next Sunday.

If all signs are favorable the commuters who go to New York every morning will notice next Monday morning that the freight house will be conspicuous by its absence. The plan now is to move the structure on cars next Sunday morning to the vacant lot on West Third street, near Plainfield avenue. The above time is selected from the fact that a less number of trains are run on Sunday and the removal will necessarily block the traffic on several hours. Men are now busy arranging the building for removal, so that no time will be lost on Sunday.

Had Lots of Fun.

The scholars of the Sunday-school of Holy Cross church were given a pleasant picnic in the grove at Chimney Rock, Saturday afternoon. Three of Captain Hand's stages conveyed them from the borough to the grove and there they spent the day in the swings, pavilion and in enjoying the other attractions that the pleasure spot affords. One of the enjoyable features of the day was a chestnut hunt. Besides getting the nuts, they had a whole lot of fun.

Money for New Books.

A regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Public Library was held last Tuesday, at which time a number of bills were audited, and the librarian's report read and placed on file. The sum of $190 was appropriated and placed subject to the order of the librarian for the purchase of such books as she may deem important or especially desirable for the good of the order.

Auxiliary Officers.

The Women's Auxiliary Society of the Church of the Redeemer held its first meeting of the season Tuesday at the church building and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Charles Matthews; first vice-president, Mrs. H. R. Phillips; second vice president, Mrs. John O. Stevens; secretary, Mrs. Emma S. Brown; treasurer, Mrs. George P. Dupee.

ON TRIAL FOR HIS LIFE.

THE PLEA FOR ELMER CLAWSON'S DEFENCE WILL BE INSANITY.

The Youthful Prisoner Does Not Seem to Be Greatly Concerned About His Fate—Mrs. Hodgetts Tells Her Story in Court.

The trial of Elmer Clawson for the murder of Harry Hodgetts, a farmer living near Piuckamin, began in the Somerset court, before Judge Magie, Tuesday. Clawson is a boy, not more than eighteen, who was formerly employed by Hodgetts, but had not been a member of the family for four years previous to the shooting.

While Hodgetts and his family were at the breakfast table early on the morning of August 29th Clawson called at the door and asked to see Mr. Hodgetts. He inquired of the latter whether he would like to employ a boy, and was answered in the negative. Then he made some inquiries about the work on the farm, and, without any angry words or any provocation, according to the evidence of Mrs. Hodgetts, Clawson drew a pistol and fired three shots at Hodgetts as he stood in his doorway. Then the boy ran to the roadside and jumped upon his wheel, which he had left lying there, and started for Pluckamin. The neighbors were aroused, and men in wagons and on wheels gave chase.

The murderer was caught near the station in a clump of bushes and taken to the county jail at Somerville. Hodgetts died a few moments after he was shot.

In the court room yesterday Clawson seemed as unconcerned as though he was a spectator. Mrs. Hodgetts, in her dress of mourning and a three-months-old baby in her arms, made a sad sight in court. When called to the stand she told the story of the shooting. She testified that not an angry word passed between her husband and Clawson. The latter was fourteen years old when he first lived with them, and was a hard boy to get along with.

From the testimony of William Paulison, of Barnt Mills, it was learned that Clawson came to his place on the morning of the day previous to the murder to see his half-brother, who lives with Paulison. He left there the following morning on his wheel. Several carpenters going to their work from Rahway saw the wheel standing in front of Hodgetts' and one of them heard the shooting. He stopped and saw Clawson run out of Hodgetts' yard and jump on his wheel. The carpenters were on their wheels, and when they learned that a murder had been committed, they gave chase. When he gave himself up and came out of the bushes, Enoch Berdell asked him what he shot Hodgetts for. His reply was, "He ought to have been shot long ago." The case is being continued today. It is expected that the defence will be a plea of insanity.

New and Liberal Methods.

J. Linn Edsall, of the Commercial Palace, will from today inaugurate the most liberal methods in merchandising ever attempted in this section. The price of every article in the big store will be changed to lower figures in order to make good this promise, and to prove to the people that there is no place where their needs can be supplied to as good advantages as his store. His idea is to sell at one-half the usual profit and thereby double up the volume of trade, which would afford him the same income, and his patrons supplied at much lower prices. His two-column advertisement in The Press today gives full particulars and announces the biggest bargains this house has ever offered.

To Fresh for His Own Good.

Two gay young lotharios with high collars and little brains perched on the sidewalk on Front street, opposite Somerset street, last evening, and cast obnoxious and insulting remarks at passersby. Two ladies chanced to pass at 8:30 o'clock and one of the youths said: "Ah there." Quick as a flash one of the women wheeled around and struck the fellow broadside on the face, leaving him to nurse a smarting jaw. The two men are well known and they make a practice of slinking around the street corners at night and throwing off hand remarks at unprotected women.

Adjutant Taylor Here.

Tonight at 8, Adjutant and Mrs. Taylor, known as the Golden Minstrel, will conduct a mercy box meeting in the Salvation Army hall, West Second street. He will commission Webster Grant as the local agent of the mercy box league. He will also speak of the operations of the army. The Adjutant has a number of special songs for the occasion.

RAIDED THE APPLEJACK.

REVENUE OFFICERS CLOSE UP THE DISTILLERY OF JOHN LAMBERT.

Uncle Sam's Officials Pounce Upon the Places Where Jersey Lightning is Distilled—Refuse to Disclose the Charges.

'Twas a strange scene there in the damp, dark storeroom under John Lambert's distillery last Friday afternoon. The over-hanging clouds made the day seem dark and dreary, and the weather-stained splintered board walls of that old distillery looked gloomier than ever down in the hollow. The rough board door of the storeroom was open and four men could be seen moving about among the casks that nearly covered the floor. The dim light revealed but little of the bare interior with the still assuming grotesque figures in the background. Three of the men were in their shirt sleeves and were busy sampling and testing the contents of the casks. The fourth was recording the results of the tests. Over in one corner by the only window, a small and high one at that, sat an old gray-haired man whose face was half-hidden under an old slouch hat. It was the owner of the still and he watched the operations of the visitors very keenly.

The visitors were the United States revenue officers and they had raided his place.

John Lambert is well known in Plainfield as the proprietor of a distillery and cider mill located near Willow Grove, about three miles south of Plainfield, on Feehoider or Simeon Lambert, his father, ran the distillery before him, for the place is an old one dating back nearly a century. Every year thousands of gallons of apple whiskey or "Jersey Lightning," as it is some times called, are turned out from there, and John Lambert has been a prosperous man since he came into possession.

Hearing of a rumor that a raid was contemplated yesterday afternoon, a Daily Press reporter visited the old distillery at that time, and came upon the scene above described. Deputy United States Revenue Collector James J. Brennan, of Elizabeth, headed the party of raiders, and he was accompanied by Revenue Inspector John Sinsel, of New York, Revenue Gauger John V. Diefenthaler, of Newark, and Special Officer James J. Carey, of Elizabeth. Every cask was carefully tested and the officers laughed and joked as they stumbled about the mouldy floor in the faint light while examining the casks of liquor.

They received The Daily Press reporter politely, but refused to divulge the object of their visit further than to say that they had seized the entire stock of liquors and closed the distillery for a time.

Mr. Lambert is stone deaf, and although worth many thousands of dollars, he likes farm hand than a well-to-do business man. To interview him it was necessary to write the questions, which the reporter did after the party had left the distillery.

"Why are they here, can you tell me?" wrote the reporter on his note book. The gaunt grey bearded distiller shook his head and exclaimed, "They've seized all my liquor. They think I'm a perfect devil!"

"Why?" asked the interviewer.

"I know nothing about it," declared Mr. Lambert.

"What do they claim is the matter with the liquor? continued the reporter. "I don't know, I have no idea, reiterated the old man, and despite other questions on the same line, he denied all knowledge, of anything irregular, or even knowing why the raid was made. In his conversation with the raiders, however, he seemed to know something about it, and when they showed him the result of their tests, he declared that their instruments were incorrect, and that they were defrauding him.

The officers had driven over from the Fanwood station, about two miles away, and as the shadows lengthened they packed up their instruments, closed the distillery and fastened it securely, leaving special Officer Carey to stand guard until their return. Arrangements were made at the Lambert farmhouse whereby he was to be given board and lodging.

Rumor has it that the cause of the raid is that Lambert has been selling untaxed liquor and making false reports to the government officers.

Another more modern one, also belonging to Mr. Lambert, is located on the other side of the road. Both of these distilleries are less than one-fourth of a mile from the Willow Grove chapel

BROTHERS AT LEGAL WAR

JAMES BRENNAN ACCUSED HIS TWO BROTHERS OF MISBEHAVIOR.

But He Imbibed Too Freely Before the Trial and Went to Jail Himself While the Defendants Were Released.

Brother was arrayed against brother in the city court last Saturday, that is, they were in name, for one failed to put in an appearance at court for obvious reasons. On Monday, September 21st, James Brennan made a complaint against his two brothers, Thos. and John, for being disorderly and using profane language, and the trial was set down last Saturday and adjourned then until today. The Brennan's, or at least James, lives on Randolph road, while his two brothers are in his employ. James claims, in a truly brotherly spirit, that they shirk work, disobey his orders, swear and misbehave themselves generally, while Thomas and John declare that brother James is a hard master and that he has an unpleasant habit of cheating them out of their fair earnings.

By different paths the brothers came to town this morning. Now James evidently fell into bad company for sometime before court opened, he was considerably intoxicated. He grew worse rapidly until he reached a state of paralysis caused by too much liquor, Patrolman McCue found Brennan's horse and carriage on South Second street and took to Robert's stable for safe keeping and soon landed Brennan himself in the lockup to recover from the effects of his spree.

When City Judge DeMeza heard why the complainant did not appear he dismissed the charge against Thomas and John.

CHICKS, PIGEONS AND CATS.

Annual Exhibition of the Garden State Poultry and Pigeon Association.

The second annual show of the Garden State Poultry and Pigeon Association will be held in the Jersey Cycle Academy, in this city, on December 2d to 5th inclusive, and will afford the citizens of Plainfield and surrounding country an opportunity to see one of the finest displays of poultry, pigeons, cats and pet stock ever shown in this part of the country, as some of the best breeders have entered. There will also be incubators in operation daily, hatching the downy little fellows, and this will be a very attractive feature of the show.

The Association has a number of valuable silver cups, the most prominent of which is the Skelton trophy, offered in the Plymouth Rock class, and should draw an entry well worth seeing. They also offer a silver cup each for the best display of poultry, pigeons and cats.

The judges of poultry are: George O. Brown, of Baltimore; F. B. Zimmer, of Gloversville, N. Y. and T. F. McGrew, of New York.

The pigeon judges are: W. J. Stanton, of Jersey City, John Glasgow, of Rahway, N. J.

The cat and pet stock departments will be under the supervision of T. Farrer Rackhaur, of East Orange, which is an assurance that entire satisfaction will be given. The entry fees in all departments and class will be $1 and the premiums, $3 and $1. The premium list will be ready November 1st, and can be had by addressing the secretary, C. W. Johnson, Cranford. W. J. Andrus, of Hackensack, will superintend the show.

All Johns Were Cousins.

The following item of interest appeared in the Poughkeepsie Courier, under date of Sept. 27th:

"At the Dutchess County fair on Wednesday, there met John E. Townsend, son of the late James Townsend, of LaGrange; John E. Townsend, of Plainfield, N. J., son of the late Carpenter D. Townsend, of LaGrange; and John M. Townsend, of this city, son of the late Vincent M. Townsend, of Pleasant Valley. Each of these Johns is a cousin to the other two."

—There will be no political meetings held in the city this week on account of the evangelistic and Christian Endeavor meetings.

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

A PROTEST FILED AGAINST THE BUILDING OF THE DAM.

Referred to a Committee to Investigate and Report—New Street to be Opened—Many Small Matters Were Looked After.

When the regular October meeting of the Borough Council was called to order last Friday by Mayor Hegeman, Councilmen Valiant, Woolston and MacLaughlin answered to the roll call. Mr. Peck came in a few minutes later. After the reading of the minutes Clerk Arnold presented his monthly financial statement as follows:

	Balance.	Deficit
Borough	$ 906.54
Fire Department		$93.41
Lights	256.93
Roads	178.71
Poor		309.39
	$3,342.77	$402.80
	$402.80
Total balance	$2,119.97

The clerk reported that $115 had been collected from fines, licenses, etc.

J. F. Wilson in a petition asked the Council to lay a crosswalk at Duer street and Greenbrook road, and the matter was referred to the street committee, as was also a petition from J. P. Humble, S. B. Joseph and others, complaining about certain property owners on Manning avenue building over the set line along that avenue. Samuel Titus and others petitioned for a crosswalk at the corner of Somerset street and Manning avenue, and the matter was placed in the hands of the street committee for consideration. A petition signed by Corra Ryno and other residents of Coddington avenue asked that electric lights be placed on the above avenue. The fire, water and lamps committee will consider the matter and report. N. B. Smalley and John Herman in a communication stated that a new street, from Somerset street to the Herman property, and from Regent street to Mountain avenue, had been opened and graded according to law, and they dedicated the same to the borough. The new street had been termed Whitewood avenue, and they asked the Council to accept the same. The request was referred to the street committee.

A lengthy protest against the construction of an ice pond and dam at Washingtonville was received from A. N. Weber, jr., and other residents of the borough, who claim that it would be a dangerous thing for the borough. The laws and ordinance committee will look after the matter and report, though it is not very clear where their jurisdiction in the matter comes in.

J. B. Mills and others asked for a crosswalk on Allen place at its intersection with Fairview avenue. It was referred to the street committee and later the request was granted.

Mr. Peck brought up the petition received at the last meeting, which asked that electric lights be placed on Mountain avenue from Farragut to Leland avenues and to the bridge. He then stated that the committee had not yet ascertained how many lamps were required, though they were decided that lights were needed. In consequence they asked that the petition be referred with power, which was done.

Mr. Woolston reported that the expenses for street work last month was $123.38 and that crosswalks had been laid on Grove street, Craig place, Grand street and Rockview avenue.

Mr. MacLaughlin then reported concerning an assessors' map which has been under consideration for some time. He said that F. A. Dunham would furnish complete maps of the borough, comprising five sections, for the sum of $30 a section, and the street committee recommended that same be purchased. Later Mr. MacLaughlin offered a resolution that the Mayor and Council enter into an agreement with F. A. Dunham for the purchase of such maps, the same to cost not over $30 a section. By mutual consent the resolution was laid on the table for one week, when more members would be present.

Mr. Peck then offered two resolutions, which were adopted. One was that the Council secure a loan of $1,000 and the same be charged to the fire department account. The other one was the action of Warren Engine Company in electing Alonzo Brokaw, and Jacob Sheppard to membership be confirmed. The Council then adjourned for one week.

To Take Definite Action.

On Tuesday, October 13th, the Somerset County Board of Freeholders will meet and take definite action regarding the proposed ice pond and dam to be built at Washingtonville. Director Logan, L. E. Barkalow and Andrew Lutkins, of the board, composing the committee of investigation, will report at the above date.

—By order of the Executive Committee, the opening meeting of the Parliamentary Club for 1896 will be postponed from October 8 to October 22. The debate as to extension of the presidential term and the election of officers will take place.

A hacking cough is not only annoying to others, but is dangerous to the person who has it. One Minute Cough Cure will quickly put an end to it. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

HIS FAREWELL SERMON.

DR. LEWIS REVIEWS HIS CHURCH WORK IN THIS CITY.

He Has Aimed to Preach Practical Rather Than Theoretical Religion—His Success Has Been By Co-operation of Parishioners

A representative of the Press has gathered a few facts from Dr. Lewis' sermon of Saturday last. The doctor has been pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church in this city sixteen years and a half. In addition to his work as pastor he has done a large amount of literary work as author, editor, newspaper and magazine writer. He has also lectured on Christ's history and Homiletics, by correspondence at Alfred University, Alfred, N. Y., for several years.

He has written five books since coming here, three of which are published by the American Sabbath Tract Society of this city, one by D. Appleton & Co., and one by G. P. Putnam's Sons, of New York. His editorial and book work since 1882 is equal to thirty 12mo books of 300 pages each.

He has preached about a thousand sermons, aside from miscellaneous addresses; has baptized sixty-four in to the church, and buried fifty-six from it. In closing his sermon the doctor said that he had desired to teach practical rather than speculative truths. That he had aimed to lead people to embody Christianity into life and character. In closing he said he preached with the future in view as well as the present. Much interest was manifested in the sermon.

The attachment between the Doctor and his church is very strong. His church has done much to second his literary work by way of furloughs and otherwise.

ENDEAVOR OFFICERS.

Young Christians of City Churches Select New Leaders for the Year.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Congregational church held a business meeting last Friday and elected the officers for the next half year besides hearing the reports of the different committees regarding the work of the last quarter. Progress was shown in the various branches of work but the summer season had, of course, been comparatively dull. The treasurer reported a good balance in the treasury and a substantial amount was appropriated for the expenses of the coming Christian Endeavor convention. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Harold W. Tomlinson; vice-president, Miss Adeline B. Parsons; secretary, Charles Bellenap; treasurer, Miss Winckler. The chairman of committees were selected as follows: Prayer meeting committee, Miss Eda Beekman; lookout committee, Miss J. Louise Jenkins; missionary committee Miss Anna E. Manistelow; social committee, Miss Julia Bellenap; music committee, Mrs. A. C. LaBoyteaux; Flower committee, Miss Mary V. Chadwick; good-literature, Miss Clara Shepherd.

The nominating committee of the Christian Endeavor society of Trinity Reformed church presented their choice for officers of the society, at a special business meeting last evening, and their report was received with thanks and the names suggested by them for officers for the ensuing year, were unanimously chosen, viz: President, Alfred K. Wilmot; first vice-president, Fred E. Smith; second vice-president, Miss Mabel Wilson; corresponding secretary, Miss Mabel A. Woodruff; recording secretary, Miss Grace Berg; treasurer, Fred Ross. Six new members joined the society at the meeting last evening.

Dunellen's Fire Election.

The annual election of officers for the Dunellen Fire Department, was held in the W. C. T. U. rooms on Thursday evening, with 33 members in attendance. Previous to the election a short business session was held, with President George Day in the chair. The following officers were elected: President, George Day; Secretary, Walter Apgar; Treasurer, William Wyckoff. A. S. Giles was elected assistant chief to succeed Paul Reusch; John Merchrodt was elected to the position of foreman of ladder and to assistant is C. Ryno. For the chemical engine Joseph Myers was chosen as foreman and Arthur Giddis, assistant; foreman of the pumping engine, Charles Wybosky; assistant, Walter G. Runyon; investigating committee, John Logan, John Peters and Arthur Giddis. The matter of having a "house warming" when the new house is completed, was discussed in private and most of the members it is said sanctioned the project.

WON THEIR FIRST GAME.

Y. M. C. A. ELEVEN DEFEATS THE SAN REMO'S BY A SCORE OF 4 TO 2.

The Game Was Close and Exciting All the Way Through, But by Good Work the Home Team Won Out—Five Men Hurt.

Close and exciting was the opening game of the season for the Y. M. C. A. team on Saturday afternoon, when a crack New York team, the San Remo Football Club, was defeated after a long and lively battle by the score of 4 to 2. The showing that the Plainfield boys made was very gratifying to those in charge and they promise to put up a very strong game after a little more practice.

The game was played on the Y. M. C. A. grounds and at a few minutes to 4 o'clock the two teams lined up as follows:

PLAINFIELD Y. M. C. A.		SAN REMO.
Cuming	centre	J. Stone
Brown	right guard	W. Carr
Darling	right tackle	Goeman
Herrig	right end	T. Stone
Waring	quarter back	DeCassanos
Smith	left half back	Boles
Freeman (Capt)	right half back	Lauden
Darling	full back	Mitchell

Referee, A. J. B. Tait, of New York. Umpire, Volney F. Green, of Plainfield. Linesmen, A. Willis West and C. Galvez, Jr.

The San Remo team were a gentlemanly lot of fellows, averaging about the same as the home team, although looking a little heavier. They played well, as did the home team, but the interference was not as good as it will be later in the season. There was a tendency to fumble the ball on the part of the local players that their opponents took advantage of, but more practice will cure that.

But now, something of the game. On the toss, Plainfield took the western goal and their opponents the kick-off. The ball was sent far down the field to Peck, who was downed on the 25-yard line. After several plays the New York boys took the ball on a fumble, and gradually neared Plainfield's goal, Wenck making several good runs. Mitchell twice attempted to kick a goal from the field, but he failed and the ball was taken out to the 25-yard line. The fight continued in the Y. M. C. A. boys' territory, although Lovell tried to punt it out of danger. Three times Smith prettily downed the visiting runner for a loss, while Miles showed up finely at guard, blocking several centres. At last Plainfield got the ball on four downs and it was passed back for a kick. Darling misunderstood the signal and the ball bounded across the goal line, where Darling dropped on it, scoring a safety for the visitors. Score: San Remo, 2; Y. M. C. A., 0.

Still the fight centered around Plainfield's goal, until the first half of fifteen minutes ended. Plainfield had the kick-off in the second half of twenty minutes, and Lovell drove the ball to San Remo's 15-yard line. Slowly the ball was pushed away and a double pass would have taken it out of danger but for Waring's quickness. The Plainfield line stood firm at last and they sent the ball back to the downs. It changed hands soon and Mitchell started to kick. The kick was blocked, however, and Lovell fell on the ball, four yards from San Remo's goal. Then with a mighty effort Darling was driven right through the centre of the visitor's line and fell across the goal line, making a touchdown. The ball was punted out but the kick was a hard one and Lovell just missed the goal post. Score: Y. M. C. A., 4; San Remo, 2.

Mitchell kicked off for the visitors, but the ball was rapidly carried toward San Remo's goal. The Plainfield team showed a marked improvement and Freeman rounded the left end for 12 yards, and then Peck shot around the right for 10 more. In a scrimmage Waring and Darling came together and both were cut over the eye. Darling was unable to continue and Dupee was put in his place, while Titsworth played tackle. The fight still continued in San Remo's territory when time was called. O'Donnell and L. Carr played guards for the San Remo team in the second half.

A QUIET BUT CHARMING AFFAIR WAS THE STEVENS-BLISH NUPTIALS.

The Ceremony Performed at the Home of the Bride by Rev. C. E. Herring—Many Handsome Gifts Received on the Couple Charming, indeed, but very quiet, was the wedding of Miss Hendricks Moore Blish, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Blish, of the West Seventh street, and George Stevens, one of Plainfield's leading coal merchants, which took place Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the home of the bride.

The house was decorated throughout with vines, while the dining room, where the ceremony took place, was a bower of green and white, the floral decorations consisting of palms, asparagus ferns and white carnations. An aisle was formed of white cord, one end of which was held by Miss Blish, sister of the bride, gowned in green rainbow silk. The other end was held by Miss Stevens, sister of the groom, gowned in light blue green cadine. Through the aisle thus formed the bride and groom came forward to where the Episcopal marriage service was read by Rev. Chas. E. Herring and they were pronounced husband and wife.

The bride wore a becoming gown of white brocaded silk with chiffon waist and a tulle veil, crowned with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white bride roses. She was attended by her maid of honor, Miss Alletta Bedford, of New York, who looked charming in a gown of white organdie over green silk trimmed with ribbon and Valenciennes lace. Her bouquet was white carnations.

The groom was accompanied by his two ushers, William N. Runyon, of Plainfield, and Ollie Armstrong, of New York. Mrs. Stevens, mother of the groom, was present, in black satin and Duchess lace, while Mrs. Blish, the bride's mother, wore a gown of black lace and jet.

The bride's gift to the maid-of-honor was a pearl sunburst while the groom presented the ushers with scarf pins. The wedding gifts were numerous and valuable and told plainly of the popularity of the young couple. Among them was a complete silver service set for dinner and tea from Mr. Blish's associates in the Standard Oil Company. Silverware, furniture and many other rich gifts were included.

William E. MacClymont and P. Ludwig Conde furnished the music for the occasion. The wedding supper that followed the ceremony was a delightful affair. The table decorations were pink. Max Wierts was caterer.

Mr. and Mrs. Stevens drove over to the South Plainfield station on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, after being plentifully showered with rice on leaving the house early Saturday evening, and took the train for Niagara Falls. A number of their friends accompanied them to South Plainfield and enlivened the parting with the usual humorous incidents.

The wedding was a quiet affair, only the relatives and intimate friends of the bride and groom being present. They came from New York, Brooklyn, Summit, Mt. Vernon, Dunellen and Plainfield.

DON'T KNOW HOW HE WAS HURT.

Gilbert T. Sutphen Found in an Unconscious Condition on the Tracks.

Gilbert T. Sutphen, a machinist, living on W. 2d Second street, was found on the Watchung avenue railroad bridge late Saturday night in an injured condition. One ear was nearly torn off, while blood was flowing freely from both ears, nose and mouth. It was thought that he was struck by a train, but Sutphen does not think that he was. He was found unconscious and remained so till 4 o'clock yesterday morning. As soon as he was discovered the ambulance was sent for and he was taken to the hospital, where he is now improving nicely. His injuries do not seem to be of a serious nature.

Central Railroad Detective Ritterbush made an effort yesterday to ascertain the facts in the case, and with a city officer made a tour along the track and through Cottage row, but they were unable to find any one from whom they could glean any information regarding the accident.

On the War-path for McKinley.

Two of George Schuck's cows, which had been pasturing in one of Hon. James E. Martine's lots on Park avenue, evidently knew of "Jim's" dislike for McKinley and Hobart, so they scaled a four-railed fence on Saturday night and came to town to chew up the Republican banner. They wandered about town until quite late taking in the sights and other things until two lads named Emmons and Jones drove them into a barn on Westervelt avenue, near the brook. George recovered the cows yesterday, and the boys were rewarded for their kindness toward the cows.

—Mrs. H. M. Blish, of West Seventh street, had a very handsome night blooming cereus with seven blossoms on it Thursday evening.

FIREMEN'S BIG TIME.

THE PARADE WAS THE FINEST SEEN HERE IN MANY A DAY.

The Veterans, of New York, and the Exempts and Actives of City and Borough Make a Great Showing—A Jolly Time.

The reception given by the Exempt Firemen's Association, of this city, to the Veteran Firemen's Association, of New York, on Saturday last, will be recorded as one one of the complete affairs of the kind ever held in Plainfield.

Every resident of the city took an interest as well as many visitors from neighboring towns and cities who came here. The streets were thronged with people who were so delighted with the parade that seeing it once was not sufficient.

Promptly at 2 o'clock the procession formed on North avenue under command of Marshal William Hand. The line of march was then followed. First came Sergeant Tuely and Patrolmen Vanderweg, Cooney, Flynn, Myers, Langer and Saunders lined up in true military style. Assisting Marshal Hand were William C. Smith and Charles M. Raybert, as aides, mounted on handsome steeds. The reception committee were second in line. Following them came Krink's Brass Band and the Veteran Firemen's Fife and Drum Corps, of New York. Then came the veteran firemen themselves and the double-decker hand engine. Cheer after cheer greeted these as they marched along with steady step. All are fine-appearing men. Their engine is a beauty.

The Goodwill Brass Band, of New Brunswick, was next in order and preceded the Crane's engine, which was in charge of Driver James Bailey. The Chief, though not a young man, felt perfectly able to walk over the entire line of march and he did so. On either side of him was First Assistant James Martin and Second Assistant John W. Murray, Jr. Behind them was Gazelle hose carriage, No. 1, and the members of the company. The boys looked fine in every particular. The next apparatus was the Chemical, with Driver George Feiring on the seat.

No. 2 hose wagon driver, by William Rose, followed, accompanied by the members of the company, who appeared for the first time in their new overcoats. The members of this company have a reputation for good showing and they sustained it well on Saturday. The old reliable No. 2 engine came next and driver Henry Wierenga held the reins over a team of handsome horses, who were animated by the music discovered by Crescent band, of Dunellen, which was next in order. Plainfield's handsome and substantial Zephyr hook and ladder, accompanied by the members made a handsome appearance. Driver Fred Breem was in the seat and Harry Bush had charge of the wheel. The next in order was Alert hose carriage with driver William Townley and his wonderful dog. The Independent hook and ladder driven by Harry Roberts, with George Mehl at the wheel, preceded the Independent Fife and Drum Corps. At this point North Plainfield's representatives, Warren Engine Company, commanded by Chief Fairchild and assistants, Conover and Anderson with their engine and hose wagon, appeared. Thomas McGann occupied the seat of the former while his son was in charge of the latter. The borough boys showed up in fine style and were heartily applauded. Last but not least came the Exempt Firemen's Association with the silver hose carriage. The members all wore white caps bearing the word "Exempt." It stirred the hearts of some of the old residents to see the sturdy exempts once more in line and it reminded them of past days when they were so quick to respond to the call of duty. Louis DeCamp, L. E. Barkalow and Edward J. Flannery held the position of honor in front while E. H. Bird and B. Frank Cortell, were in charge of the tiller. Benj. Mumford, J. TenEyck and G. Thorn followed in a carriage.

At the Casino Mayor Gilbert, the city officials, Mayor Hegeman and the borough officials reviewed the parade. A review was held on Watchung avenue near the Crescent Avenue church, at the close of the march, where the companies dispersed and the apparatus was taken back to headquarters.

The Exempt Firemen and their guests then adjourned to the Cycle Academy where a banquet was served, during which the bands gave their best selections to enliven the occasion. Unfortunately, no speeches were made as it was impossible to hear any one speak. Mayor Gilbert made several attempts but failed and the speeches were omitted.

After dinner the firemen went to the corner of Watchung avenue and Sixth street where box 25 was pulled by ex-Chief Bates, of New York. It happened that as he pulled the hook it was exactly time for the 5 o'clock alarm to sound and there was no response. A few seconds later Chief Doane pulled the box and in precisely one minute and eight seconds Driver Feiring appeared with the chemical. He was first, while Zephyr Hook and Ladder was second. Alerts' pulled in very soon afterward while No. 3's carriage and Gazelles' came in the order mentioned. The Veterans were highly pleased with the exhibition.

The Veterans were then escorted to the station where they placed their engine on the flat car, and at 7 o'clock they left by special train for New York where they were met by a delegation of firemen and escorted to their headquarters.

The Plainfield Fire Department can feel justly proud of their showing which will equal any in the country in proportion to the size of the city. The Exempt Association excelled all expectation in their arrangement for the affair and the citizens have cause to be proud of them. A word about decorations will not be amiss. All over the city and along the line of march every house and building was gaily decorated with the national colors. The arch on Park avenue was left in position and suspended in the centre was a bell to which was fastened a string. J. J. Kenney held the string which he pulled frequently. Perhaps one of the best decorations was at the home of Andrew Carney on Lincoln place where a facsimile of an old hand engine was shown. It was made of wood and was beautifully trimmed. On the porch of the house were stationed a number of girls all dressed in white. At the store of Alex. Titsworth, on North avenue, there was an arrangement of an old fireman's hat, belt and trumpet which Mr. Titsworth used when he was foreman of Gazelle hand engine, and a lantern and red leather belt bearing the words in white letters "Plainfield Board." This belt is the only one in town. There were a number of other very pretty decorations too numerous to mention. The firemen had a gay day and everybody is more than pleased with the affair, thanks for which is due the committees who worked earnestly and faithfully throughout.

While the members of Warren Engine Company were on their way to the borough after Saturday's festivities, they were met at the corner of Front and Somerset street by Mayor Hegeman, who walked with the boys to headquarters where he made an address, complimenting them on their fine appearance.

OBJECTS TO BURYING IN CITY PLOT.

No One Now Wants to Assume the Reponsibility of Burying the Man.

It was just one week ago Sunday that the body of a well-dressed man was found in the woods near Fanwood and brought to Undertaker Casey's morgue in this city, where it yet lies in ice in the hope that it may eventually be recognized and the mystery surrounding the strange death cleared up. Just how much longer the body is to be held has not yet been decided, and the undertaker is now only awaiting orders from the County Physician before burying the remains. By the publicity given the case through the public press of this and other cities, solely in the hope that identification might be established, has probably been the cause of holding the body so long. Undertaker Casey went to Scotch Plains yesterday and conferred with County Physician Westcott regarding the disposal of the body. It is understood that Overseer of the Poor Mann has refused to sign an order for interment in the city plot, claiming that the body was found in Fanwood Township and that the authorities there are responsible for its burial.

The Darlington, Wis., Journal says editorially of a popular patent medicine: "We know from experience that Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is all that is claimed for it, as on two occasions it stopped excruciating pains and possibly saved us from an untimely grave. We would not rest easy over night without it in the house." This remedy undoubtably saves more pain and suffering than any other medicine in the world. Every family should keep it in the house, for it is sure to be needed sooner or later. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, druggist.

Congressional Delegates.

The North Plainfield Republican primary was held Saturday evening, in the school house to elect delegates to attend the Congressional convention. Ex-Mayor Place presided, and Hugh B. Reed acted as secretary. Chas. A. Reed and Wm. C.Smith were chosen to represent the borough and Geo. Bullman was selected from the township. No other business was transacted.

Early Closing.

Nearly all the merchants of the city have agreed to close their stores Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings of this week at 6:30 o'clock so their employes may attend the Christian Endeavor convention or other meetings to be held on those evenings. It is to be hoped that all the stores will follow their example.

The Flag Accepted.

The handsome and costly silk flag, hand painted and beaded, which was ordered by the members of the Gesang and Turn Verein Society and returned to the maker a few days ago as unsatisfactory, has eventually been accepted by the society. The flag cost $200.

SEES SPECTRAL DOG.

Clergyman Has Some Queer Experiences with a Canine Ghost.

This is the story of a spectral dog. A clergyman of the Church of England, educated at Oxford and a man of remarkably acute and powerful understanding, one evening recently was returning from church and was surprised several times to hear short, quick breathing beside him as of an animal spent with running. As no living thing was visible he stood quietly looking about for an explanation, when he saw the dim outline of a shadowy dog at his side, gazing into his face with lack-luster eyes.

Waving his stick, he struck at his unwelcome attendant, but the blow met with no resistance in the anatomy of the canine goblin, passing airily through the body. The clergyman proceeded hastily on his way, keeping a watchful eye on the phantom, which trotted contentedly along with him as he walked. He remarked that in size and shape it was like a Newfoundland dog, but of a dull blue color. Perfectly assured that it was an optical delusion, he nevertheless hailed the sight of an approaching vehicle with inexpressible relief and begged a ride home. On looking back he saw the specter leaping along in the wake of the wagon.

Arrived home a fit of shivering bore out his excuse of sickness and he did not mention the circumstance that evening, thinking it merely a hallucination. But when he retired he was terrified with a sensation as of a large dog jumping on the bed and stretching itself across his feet. Bathed in cold sweat and with his heart thumping to suffocation, he fled from the room, conscious that the blue, indistinct form was squatting composedly on his haunches, watching him the while, and roused a servant, whom he dispatched for a physician. The strangest part of this uncanny experience is that no physical derangement could be found to account for the specter, which appeared to him on two subsequent occasions in the same shape.

SONGS FOR GOPHERS.

How Florida Land Turtles Are Lured Out of Their Homes.

W. H. Gilbert, locksmith, astronomer, fisherman, scientist, hunter and capitalist, of Jacksonville, Fla., has a great fancies of gopher meat, and has thought of many ways of catching the game.

Some time ago he learned that there was a family living in the northwestern part of the country which boasted of young men who could "sing" gophers out of their holes. He traveled many miles to ascertain if the report was really true.

[The young men were reluctant at first to give an exhibition that might reveal their secret, but Mr. Gilbert had a number of pursuasives along, and finally they consented.

The young men equipped themselves with a gunnysack and a pointd stick about five feet long. A half mile from the house, in the wiregrass of the rolling pine land, they found the hole of a gopher. They covered the entrance of his tunnel with a sack, and placed the stick over the tunnel. Then all the men lay down about 20 feet away, and one of them sang.

In a half hour the sack was seen to move slightly, whereupon one of the young men jumped up quickly and ran to the stick, which he pressed deeply into the ground, cutting off the gopher's retreat. The other reached his hand into the hole and brought out a big gopher, which was made into a delicious stew for their dinner. Mr. Gilbert, discoursing on the incident, says:

"I have since learned that the Mexicans, who are very fond of gophers, pursue this method, except that they do not sing. The singing is entirely superfluous. Curiosity is what kills the gopher, as it has killed the historic cat. The animal evidently is curious to learn what it is that has darkened the threshold of his abode, and comes forth to see. The stick does the rest. I have tried the same plan myself, and very successfully."

At St. Joseph, Mich., Capt. Langley has a Shetland pony colt which weighs just 23 pounds. Hardly as much as a good fat black and tan dog.

CHASED BY A GRIZZLY.

Hair-Breadth Escape of a Prospector from Death.

Badly-Needed Refuge Offered by a Crevasse Which Had an Opening Too Small to Admit Brute's Gigantic Body.

Harry L. Romaine, who has just returned to his home in Elk City, Idaho, after spending several weeks prospecting in the Bitter Root mountains, relates a most exciting adventure which befell him near Murray, the county seat of Shoshone county.

"My partner, Ben Williams, and I had been working our way along the range from a point near Big Bald mountain to the loop where the Bitter Root range and the Coeur d'Alenes from a big, natural amphitheater, where big game, especially elk, are plentiful. We decided to stay here until we had time to follow up the lead, as old miners say. We pitched our camp under the shadow of a rock-ribbed sentinel, passing our first night in the little tent which had served us splendidly during several hard rains. That makes me think—if you want a tent to shed water immerse it in linseed oil in which rosin is melted. On the following morning Ben found the track of a bear down by the spring where we got our water. The print of that foot was as big as a dinner plate, and the fact that some empty salmon cans and other refuse which had been thrown just outside the tent were missing set us to thinking, and it wasn't long until we had connection between the missing articles and the owner of the big foot.

"There was no more tenting for yours truly after that, so we built us a sort of stone fortress in a rocky nook, where nature had already done the mason work on three sides. After laying up the wall on the vacant side we placed heavy poles across the top, on which we placed flat stones.

"We did all our prospecting together for a week or ten days, Ben carrying his big 50-90 Sharp's special and acting as body-guard, while I handled the pick. All that time we saw no bears, but plenty of elk and antelope and got a few mountain sheep. Our grizzly bear scare finally cooled. One morning I decided to explore a side canyon. Ben was to climb over the big spur that loomed up over our camp, swing round and meet me at noon near a sharp cone of rock which we called Cornwall Needle. I found mighty likely pay rock up that ravine, and the farther I went the better the showing. The place is undoubtedly the site of an old volcano. Great masses of rock from overhanging crags have fallen and rent the floors, with some of the fissures very wide and apparently bottomless. Knocking off a piece of friable sand rock I found it to be auriferous, or gold-bearing rock. I don't know whether the fall I gave split any more cracks in the rock round there or not, but one thing I do know. I nearly split my throat in the effort, and then I mounted the big chunk and swung my hammer like a madman.

"Soon I heard the noise close by, and supposing it to be Ben, I yelled out: 'Hurrah Ben, I've struck it rich!' Just then I looked up and the sight I saw froze my blood. Not 50 feet distant was an immense grizzly and cub.

"Acting upon impulse, I hurled my quarts hammer at the monster, and, as he dropped on all-fours, I leaped from the rock, hoping to evade him by dodging around it. That may or may not have been a foolish move, but I had no time to think. After jumping from the rock, I was obliged to halt a moment, in order to satisfy myself which way to run coming. I improved the moment by drawing my 44 Colt's from its sheath.

"When the bear reached the point where he expected to nab me and found that I was not there, he gave vent to a tremendous snort. It was by a kind of guttural roar, and again I heard him coming at a double quick. I ran as I never ran before.

"I glanced hurriedly around and saw the gigantic beast coming like a demon and then I stepped into one of the fissures I told you about, and down I went like a flash. The grizzly was so close on me when I fell that he went entirely over me, carried by the force of his momentum. He was back again in a moment, though, his immense head hanging over the rim of my narrow prison, which I quickly and most gratefully saw was too narrow to admit his bulky body.

"I was on my knees not six feet below the grizzly, and I felt that I could do deadly work with my revolver at that range. I pointed the gun straight at the yawning red mouth. My pistol roared in my ears. Five shots more were fired, as fast as I could send them, and then my gun was empty, but, thanks to my lucky stars, one of my bullets pierced an eye and the job was done.

"I was as weak as a baby when I climbed out of the fissure. I'd got all over it, though, when Ben came, and I told him I just knocked that grizzly on the head with my quarts hammer."

Count Elizabeth of Roumania, Carmen Sylva, has written an opera libretto in French on a Turkish plot for M. Massanet. The queen is probably the only living author who has written verse in four languages, French, German, Swedish and Roumanian.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

The wife of Li Hung Chang is said to possess 2,000 frocks and has half that number of waiting women in attendance upon her.

The late Jules Simon's library contained about 25,000 books, to which he could go, he insisted, with his eyes closed and find the exact volume which he wanted.

A suit of armor has been discovered in the old Chateau di la Tour de Pinon, which is thought to be the one ordered for Joan of Arc by Charles VII., during the siege of Orleans, and presented to her at Bourges. It is said to correspond exactly in the description handed down and was made for a woman five feet three inches in height.

The girl who sat as model for Sir John Millais' "Cinderella," "Callin' Herrin'" and "Sweetest Eyes Were Ever Seen" is now a married woman, residing in a pretty home in Richmond, where one of her dearest prizes is a signed proof of "Cinderella" on the wall. She also possesses a beautiful gold locket given her by the artist as a remembrance of the famous picture.

England is taking quite good-naturedly the fact that a bold snap-shot artist caught the prince of Wales and Princess Charles of Denmark resting and is now exhibiting them through the medium of the cinematographe, in which the prince gravely lifts his hat from his head and strokes his hair much as any man does when the charming princess calmly adjusts the ruffles about her throat in exact imitation of all her sisters who wish to know that they are "all right."

In Italy a new postal card is to be issued, on the occasion of the inauguration of the monument to Victor Emanuel. It will be of the value of ten centimes, and bear the effigy of that monarch.

Stamp dealers give valuable aid to government officials in capturing stamp thieves, but they rarely benefit by their own account. If they can make the chief disgorge, or pay for their plunder, they drop the matter right there, whereas the government never forgets or forgives.

The ancient feudal castle of Ablin, near Huy, in the province of Liege, Belgium, which was sold some years ago by Count of Looz-Cowarem, has been purchased by the heirs of the count. One of the curiosities of the castle is a room papered entirely with old Spanish stamps of nineteen cuartos, which are now very rare.

Philadelphia has a Philatelic society, with nearly a hundred active members. It meets twice a month throughout the year, and at the meetings the issues of new stamps are discussed, also the fluctuations in values. HISTORY OF A TURTLE.

The Creature Has a Strong Attachment for Its Home.

It Has Lived in the Same Place for More Than Fifty-Two Years—Its Death Described, with Many Curious Inscriptions.

In 1840 Miss Davie Peele lived with her parents in Paoli, Ind., the seat of Orange county. She was then ten years of age. One day during that year she, with some young companions, went into the deep woods about two miles from her father's house to pick blackberries. After awhile she became tired and stopped to rest on a green and shady bank beside a tiny pond. She observed a small object moving in the grass as her feet. Upon investigating she discovered the object to be a distant relative of the great and ancient family of tortoise, or land turtle, known in the vernacular as the "land terrapin."

This little creature had most interesting and peculiar habits. It is usually found in ponds, or in low, damp woods where jungles of foliage provide the moisture and coolness without which it does not seem to be content. It is wary, cunning, inoffensive and remarkably beautiful. It is termed capable with a fine shell, in color a scarlet-bled red of the prevalent Persian mode. It exhibits the strongest attachment for the place it has selected for a home, and if removed will return again and again, even in spite of great difficulty.

Miss Peele took the little creature into her hand, admired its mottled armor, laughed at its ludicrous haste in ensconcing itself within its tough shell, slipped it into her pocket, and took it home. She placed it in a box, but, as the little prisoner refused food, she concluded to release it. It was suggested that she carve her name on the little fellow's shell, and, as this would cause the terrapin no pain, she did so, together with the date.

The occurrence passed out of Miss Peele's mind, and ten years rolled by. In 1850 she married Mr. Wible, who subsequently was clerk of Orange county several times. In the course of the summer after her marriage she found herself at exactly the same spot she had visited ten years before. As she stood musing upon the occurrence of that day, her attention was attracted to a small moving object in the grass. Her surprise and delight may be imagined when she found the object was the terrapin she had found there before. There was her name in living letters upon the creature's shield, and she thought no knight errant of old had ever more faithfully protected his sweetheart's insignia than had this armored knight protected hers.

She took the terrapin home to show her friends. She lightly traced her new name under her former one, also the date 1850, and once her knight forth upon his errantry. After many years Mrs. Wible became a widow, and removed to Hutchinson, Kan., where she married a physician, Dr. McKinney, and yet lives.

During the summer of 1878 she visited her old home at Paoli. While she was there her terrapin was found at the identical spot where it had twice before been captured. The tortoise had changed name beneath her two former ones, smiling as she did so at the sunlight's constancy and the maid's fickleness. She returned to her western home, and in time ceased to think about her experiences with the terrapin.

In the summer of 1895 Mrs. McKinney received a letter from a friend at Paoli, together with a copy of a local paper which contained a statement of the above facts with the information that the terrapin had lately been captured in its old home, and brought into town. After which the date was carved upon its shell, and the creature released.

The terrapin was not perceptibly larger when last found than it had been when first found 45 years before. Each time it had been released near the water of little Lowe, and at least two miles from its habitat.

Probably no more remarkable manifestation of an animal's attachment for its home is known than this furnishes.

Coyotes and Their Fugs.

An amusing incident occurred the other day on the Lemon farm, near Garfield, Wash. Burt Lemon and an employe of the farm were plowing, when they came across three young coyote pups which had not yet opened their eyes. While they were examining them the old ones appeared and approached to within 50 yards. Mr. Lemon went to the house for a gun and a sack and placed the young ones in the sack, which was tied up and left in the field until time to go in from work. The old ones kept a respectful distance from the rig, but hovered around. Several turns of the field were made with the plow, and finally, when the men came in sight of where they had left the sack containing the young coyotes, they saw one of the old ones with the sack, puppies and all, streaking it over the hill, and that was the last seen of them

ABOUT MR. WILLEY.

Freeman Otis Willey, the Democratic Congressional candidate in the Eighth district, was born in Pittsfield, N. H., August 28th, 1839. He was the son of a farmer, received a common school education and learned the shoemaker's trade, at which he worked for several years. Mr. Willey was a hard student, however, and spent much time in study after leaving school. After attaining his majority he traveled west and he finally started a shoe store in Evanston, Ill., which he conducted successfully for a number of years and then took up his residence in Minnesota, where he began the study of law and was admitted to the bar, after which he took up literary work and was a lecturing tour throughout the country. Three years ago Mr. Willey removed to Orange, where he now resides in Hawthorne street. Since taking up his residence in Orange Mr. Willey has devoted his time to literary work and is at present writing a book on economics. Mr. Willey is also the author of a book which has for its title, "Whither Are We Drifting as a Nation?" Mr. Willey was a member of the Republican party for some time, but he went off with Horace Greeley and since that time he has been a staunch Democrat.

THE NEW JOURNALISM.

In the arrest for allowing his chickens to trespass in the cornfields of a neighbor and the incarceration in the county jail for his inability to pay a judgment of $1 for damages, the New York Journal found a fine morsel of gossip and sensation in the case of Carl Bierstetter, the Scotch Plains German, whose trials and tribulations were told of in The Daily Press last night. As soon as this circumstance received the attention of the Journal, a reporter was immediately dispatched to Elizabeth, with the immense wealth of Mr. Hearst behind him, to release the old man from his imprisonment and to usher him back to his moaning and sorrowing wife. Incidentally, the cruel process of New Jersey's justice was observed and dilated upon in harsh terms by the reporter. Suffice to say, however, The Journal paid the old man's fine, returned him to his fireside, and last, but not least, profited to the extent of a two-column story and a column of illustrations with which to entertain its 470,000 readers. It made a good story, anyway, and was dirt cheap at $4.97, the amount of the fine and costs, which The Journal paid.

THE BUTTON CRAZE.

No craze has swept over this country in recent years more novel or more indulged in than the button craze. There is no need nowadays for the game of "Button, button, who'se got the button," because almost everybody has got a button, or a dozen for that matter. In Hoboken, however, the commission of the Public Instruction has issued an edict that the button craze must be stifled. They attention was called to a button craze existing among the school children by teachers who objected to the buttons partly because of the suggestiveness of some of the inscriptions and partly because the boys and girls neglected their lessons in comparing qualities, quantities and styles of badges. They examined some of the mottoes, and concluded that such inscriptions as "Set 'Em Up Again," "You Make Me Tired," "I'm Somewhat of a Liar Myself," "If You Love Me Grin," and "I'm Out for a Good time," were not the best things in the world for school children to think about. Consequently they ordered the principals to direct their pupils to abstain from wearing all such buttons in or about the schools.

CREDITORS WOULD BE BUNCOED.

Referring to the fluctuation of the silver currency of Mexico, a correspondent of the New York Sun relates, by way of illustration, an incident in his own experience. He resides on the Texas side of the Rio Grande. In 1892 he borrowed 2,500 Mexican dollars, payable in one year. He sold them at 54 cents and received $1,400 in gold, currency and American silver. At maturity of the loan he bought 2,500 Mexican dollars at 54 cents, costing a total of $1,350. The lender lost $250 of his principal, and although the borrower paid ten per cent. interest, still he made $90 by the transaction. He concludes: "That is free silver, sure enough, and if that is what Mr. Bryan will bring about, all borrowers are his'n." But will there be any lenders? Will not the well known conditions, that with the silver of the world offered free coinage at the expense of the taxpayers of the country still more fluctuations in the value of silver than we have seen yet would be caused, and will not the volume of silver currency thus thrown into circulation have a tendency to depreciate the value of silver until it runs down far below the present prices? This conclusion is irresistible. Contracts for the repayment of money, Mr. Bryan says, in value the same as loaned are to be made unlawful, and therefore owners of money will not be lenders, and the condition of borrowers will be worse than during the times of 1873-85, when the bonus man flourished.—True American.

NO BROWBEATING HERE.

There is not so much browbeating of innocent witnesses in court as formerly, but there is enough to make welcome the recent action of Justice Hotaling, of Chicago. One of those blustering lawyers who imagine that admission to the bar carries with it the privilege to insult a witness, tried that plan of breaking down a witness before Justice Hotaling. The Justice did his duty in protecting the witness and ordered the attorney to change his manner of examination. As might be expected, the bully made an impudent retort, which resulted in his summary ejectment, the doughty Justice taking an active part in the proceedings. The story is not complete, in not telling of the disbarment of the lawyer.

INTELLIGENT ARGUMENT.

The semi-weekly meetings which the Democratic National Sound Money Club are holding in their clubrooms in the west end of the city, are bound to be productive of much good. They appeal particularly to the laboring men, since the addresses delivered there have much to do with the effect that the free coinage of silver at a ratio of sixteen to one will have on their wages. It is a good omen of the interest taken by the masses when it is known that the attendance is largely made up of the laboring classes, who listen and ask questions with a sincerity that denotes their great desire to arrive at a proper conception of the supreme issue in the campaign.

ABOUT MR. WILLEY.

Freeman O. Willey, who is liable to be nominated at Elizabeth today as the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Eighth district, is a Wisconsin man, and it was in the Badger State that he secured the title of Judge. He is now a resident of Orange, and is enthusiastic in the advocacy of free silver. He has even gone so far as to write a book on the financial question, and has quietly informed his friends that he thinks he can give Congressman Fowler, who will be renominated by the Republicans, a hot race.

REPUBLICAN PREDICTIONS.

The New York Tribune this morning published letters from the different Congressional districts giving estimates of Republican pluralities in Charles N. Codding, chairman of the Union County Republican Committee predicts a Republican majority of 2,000 in Union county. W. H. Mason, editor of the Bound Brook Chronicle, estimates a Republican majority of 1,200 in Somerset county.

CONVENTION IN THE THIRD.

The Democratic Third Congressional district convention will be held in Somerville Saturday, October 10th. The Democratic primaries for the election of delegates will be held Friday, October 9th.

In a vain attempt to pin the silverites down to facts, the Baltimore News (Dem.) says: "Everybody knows that the money wages of car conductors have not gone down, though their hours of labor have been cut down and the purchasing power of the dollar greatly increased. The same is true of servant girls; the same is true, in most parts of the country, of farm hands. It is even more strikingly true in the case of most classes of skilled workmen. The silver men stand dumb in the presence of these facts, though they become as voluble as ever the moment they get a chance to get away from the facts."

THE ENDEAVORERS.

Since the formation of the Christian church one of the great problems has been how to interest, and retain that interest, of the young people. In a great measure, the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor is one of the organizations that has accomplished this purpose, and in coming to this city for their annual convention the New Jersey members do so with the intention that an exchange of ideas, a closer acquaintance with the work already developed, and the admonition of older and more experienced heads, will add to their fund of information and direct their energies in the path of successful evangelistic efforts. Their aim is not only to bring into the church those of the younger element who are not already there, but to keep them there—the latter a problem greater than the first. But the Endeavorers have succeeded where others have failed in this direction. The young mind wants activity, something to work for, something to gain, and in the great field open to young Christians, the Endeavorers find this element of life that keeps alive their interest in the society. The annual State convention is an apt prototype of this conception, and this year it is the fortune of Plainfield to be the scene of the gathering. The slogan of "Plainfield '96" had no sooner died away at Atlantic City a year ago than plans were making for the event which has its opening session tonight, and ever since the local Endeavorers have been aiming to make every detail complete for the entertainment of the delegates. They have labored long and earnestly, and without flattery we may well say that they have labored well

A MAN OF PRINCIPLE.

Allan L. McDermott, who was tendered the Congressional nomination by the Democratic Hudson county district, has declined to accept the honor, even though it is assured that an election goes with it. Mr. McDermott is known from one end of New Jersey to the other as a Democratic politician who has been always regular, but in the crisis that now confronts the country, he sinks his precepts of regularity and stands on a broader and more patriotic base—country before party. Mr. McDermott puts the Bryan and Sewall organization in a ridiculous position when he contrasts the conflicting resolutions of the two State conventions in New Jersey and asks: "Which, then, is the true Democratic doctrine?" It is as a patriot, and not as a politician, he speaks when he declares: "If the republic is to fall—and I believe that its existence today is seriously assailed—my desire is to be found under its ruins, not on them."

KEEP TO THE RIGHT.

The unwritten law of the road, "Keep to the right," has had a strong affirmation by Judge Cox, of Indianapolis, in a decision that a man driving a horse on the left side of the road who ran into a young man riding a bicycle on the right side, of course, was responsible for the accident. The man who drives on the wrong side of the road is presumed by Judge Cox to be guilty of an intention to commit assault and battery. The same guilty intention is ascribed by the Judge to bicyclers riding on the sidewalk. He does so entirely at his own risk, Judge Cox says, and in case of collision must be held guilty of intentional assault and battery. This, of course, is in addition to the penalty of riding a vehicle on a sidewalk, as it must not be presumed that Indianapolis tolerates wheels on the sidewalks.

THE RIGHT BRAND OF JUSTICE.

Commenting on the action of Deputy Game Wardens TenEyck and Squires in arresting two illegal hunters on Sunday, the Elizabeth Journal says: It is really refreshing to read of such activity on the part of the game wardens. Reports come to this office daily to the effect that men are shooting the birds on the outskirts of the city, and if the reports are true it is a great pity the slaughterers could not be captured and given a bit of such justice as is meted out in Plainfield.

MR. HANCE A CANDIDATE.

Hiram O. Hance, of North Plainfield, is said to be a candidate for the Democratic Congressional nomination in the Third district. Mr. Hance is a young lawyer with a growing practice and is a popular and clever gentleman. The convention is to be held at Somerville, Saturday, October 10th.

The Superior Criminal Court of Massachusetts has decided that what is known as the Irish flag is not the flag of an independent nation, and consequently does not come within the prohibition of the laws of the State which forbids the display of such on public buildings. The case grew out of the act of a contractor who, on the Fourth of July last, displayed an Irish flag on staging attached to a school building he was erecting in Lawrence. Judge Hopkins ruled: "Ireland is not a foreign country within the meaning of the statutes. I must, therefore, sustain the motion to quash." So the Irish flag can float anywhere in Massachusetts without interference by an officer of the law.

would make no impression on the number of the germs of consumption that exist in one affected lung. All germs are little enough, but those which cause consumption are very minute. Cod-liver oil won't kill them. We don't know a remedy which will. The germs float in the air and we can't keep from breathing them into our lungs. Then why don't all of us have consumption? Because a healthy throat, sound lungs, and a strong constitution won't allow the germs to gain a foothold.

TRUE KIND OF RELIGION

EVANGELIST MOODY TALKS OF THE CHRISTIAN AND THE WORLD.

His Subject Was Grace, and He Divided It Into Three Heads From Which He Made Many Interesting Observations.

"Monday night," said Mr. Moody "is the hardest night in the week in which to get a crowd," but nevertheless Convention Hall was well filled last evening when the veteran evangelist continued his meetings that opened so auspiciously last Saturday night.

The chorus choir, which filled the platform and the two front rows of seats, opened the meeting with one of those stirring song services, led by Horace J. Martin. Rev. A. J. Martine then lead in prayer. A hymn and prayer by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., followed and after the notices of the next meetings were announced by President R. E. Anthony, the white capped ushers passed the collection baskets. Mr. Burke then took charge of the singing and the choir sang "He Arose." Mr. Burke is inspiring as a leader, but the way in which he sang the solo "Shall You, Shall I?" was very impressive and better prepared the audience for Mr. Moody's powerful appeal that followed.

Mr. Moody read the five verses beginning with Titus 2, ii. and took as his topic "Grace," as referred to in the Scripture selection. He divided it into three heads. Grace, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men; Grace, that teaches us to live in the world, and Grace that teaches us to work in this world.

He introduced his talk by referring to grace as a word so frequently used and yet so little understood. Grace, he said, means unmitigated mercy—undeserved favor. Salvation, he declared, is a gift that we don't have to work for; not but that it is well worth while working for, however. We have to take it as a beggar takes a gift. We work because we are saved—not to be saved. There will be no boasting in the kingdom of God. Then he spoke of the so-called "self-made" man, who took all the glory on his shoulders when God was ready to the one. God comes to forgive, not to demand, he went on. You can get something for nothing in this case.

We often say "Work out your salvation," but you have got to have it first before working it out. Then you ought to be willing to work day and night out of gratitude to God. It is not a gift if you work for it or give something in exchange; it then becomes a debt. People don't want salvation for nothing; they want to work, they want to help themselves.

A great many are afraid, he continued, to become Christians because they fear they will not hold out. We are to be living epistles; where one person reads the Bible one hundred read us. What we need is a spiritual uplifting in our churches. "I believe," he exclaimed, "that more harm has been done to our religion by our so-called friends than by our enemies. It is said that they talk cream and act milk."

He expressed a belief that the present church has a low standard or it would not tolerate the existing evils—saloons, skepticism and the like. Some people, he said, like to stay on the edge of the world and the kingdom of God. They want to be Christians and remain in the world, and a sorry time they have of it. The world clubs them on one side and the church on the other.

The Christian is all right in the world, but the world is not all right in a Christian. It is the same as a ship. It is all right in the water, that's where it belongs; but when the water is in the ship, then you want to get out. He then told in his droll way his experience on the "Spree" when she was wrecked. We are to light the world.

It is impossible, he explained, to be filled with grace without its bearing fruit. Christ has promised peace for the past, grace for the present, and glory for the future. The days are growing better and better, our best days are not behind, they are coming. The future is bright. You know old people who are grumpy, he continued, and then he related the story of the little boy who didn't want to go to Heaven if his grandfather was going as he didn't want to be nagged all through eternity. Such people, he said, are living and feeding on the past. Instead of looking and feeding on the past, keep looking toward the future. Glory is just ahead. You say you don't want to depart, glorious. Christ took away the sting of death. It is only the death of the body, but the soul is going to live.

He declared that the twenty-third Psalm is one of the most misquoted portions of the Bible. The valley of death is referred to as such a dark place. Then said Mr. Moody that Psalm says "In the valley of the shadow of death," and did you ever see a shadow in the dark?

If you haven't enough grace, come tonight and get some, for God is always glad to give it. When you have more than enough, you are ready for service. People are afraid of being called peculiar for doing good works. When God has any great work to do he calls a peculiar man or woman to do it. "By peculiar, I mean out and out for Christ." A final exhortation ended his discourse and he closed the meeting with prayer and the benediction.

The music for the singing was furnished by William E. MacClymont on the piano, and Whitney Frazee on the cornet. Quite a number of the choir wore the convention caps, white tam o'shanters, with a band of light green ribbon about them on which is the word "choir" and the society monogram in gold. The men in the choir will wear yatching caps.

Arrangements have been made whereby the Christian Endeavor convention hall will be heated, so that the auditorium will be comfortable.

It was the platform and not the main floor at the Cycle Academy which was found in an unsafe condition. The difficulty has been attended to and everything is now in a perfectly safe condition.

Still More Plainfield Improvements.

MR. KYTE WILL NOT QUIT

THE SHERIFF IS A CANDIDATE FOR SENATOR IN EARNEST.

He Will Not Get Out of the Race, and This May Prevent the Renomination of Foster M. Voorhees, of Elizabeth, for Senator.

According to all appearances there will be a hot fight for the nomination for State Senator in Union county between Senator Voorhees, who wants a second term, and Sheriff Kyte, who swears he will not step out of the race this time to please the young Elizabethan. Sheriff Kyte was seen yesterday by a New York World reporter and asked if he was still in the field.

"Do I look like a man that had backed out?" replied the sheriff, while a determined look overspread his face. "You can just announce it in The World that I am in this struggle to stay, and have not the slightest intention of doing anything else. I mean to go all I can in an honorable manner to get the nomination."

From this it will be seen that Senator Voorhees has no picnic if he wants a second term. Sheriff Kyte's friends say that he was entitled to the nomination three years ago, and gave way to Voorhees only upon urgent pressure being brought to bear on him by the party leaders, who offered as a balm to his wounded ambition the position of Sheriff which Mr. Kyte did not want.

He was promised the Senatorial nomination this year, his supporters allege, and just when it was supposed that Mr. Voorhees was not a candidate and Sheriff Kyte had counted on getting the plum, the Senator suddenly changed his mind and jumped into arena. This has angered Sheriff Kyte, and he says that he will not be frozen out in this way.

It is strongly hinted that he will have John Kean's powerful backing in the fight, and if the latter throws the weight of his influence on Kyte's side it will make a very pretty fight and a sort of repetition, only on a more even scale, of the Kean-Voorhees contest of last year.

WANT IT ALL TO THEMSELVES.

Volunteers and Salvationists Come Together Again at an Open-air Meeting.

The contention between the Salvation Army and the American Volunteers over the use of the vacant lot near the Babcock building for open-air meetings on certain nights is still unsettled. Saturday night the Salvationists were holding their meeting there, as has been the custom for two years, when the Volunteers marched up and the lieutenant ordered Ensign Brewer and his soldiers to vacate the spot, as the former claimed the exclusive right to hold meetings there.

The Salvationists refused to stir, however, and the lieutenant of the Volunteers appealed to a policeman, who was near by, to eject them, but the officer had no authority to do this. The Volunteers then marched back to their post headquarters without attempting to disturb the meeting of the Salvationists, as was the case a few weeks ago.

Captain Bisbane, of the Volunteers, has written a letter to Mayor Gilbert, asking that they be granted the exclusive use of this ground for holding open-air meetings, thus intending to obviate a privilege which the Salvationists have enjoyed for two years. Ensign Brewer presented his side of the case to the Mayor last night, and the latter is now considering what action to take in the matter.

He was born in Virginia in 1772, and until a few years ago had full possession of his hearing and sight, now he is blind and a little hard of hearing, but for all that he seems happy and takes great delight in reiterating his early experiences.

ASSESSMENT PROTEST.

SENATOR VOORHEES APPEARS BEFORE THE COMMON COUNCIL.

He represented Mrs. Durlach Who Thinks That Assessment of Benefits and Damages Against Her Property is Unjust.

The Republican primaries held in the different wards last evening had a tendency to detain the members of the City Council from their regular meeting, and it was nearly 8:45 when President Lee called the session to order with Councilmen Barrows, Dumont, Ginna, Fisk, Frost, Tolles, Westphal, Moore and Serrell present.

Mr. Fisk asked that the rules be suspended so that the report on the Watchung avenue extension could be received. The report was then received, and on Mr. Fisk's motion action on the recommendation that the work go on was referred to the street committee. Mr. Fisk then stated that Senator Voorhees was present to represent Mrs. Durlach, who owned property along the proposed new avenue, and he moved that Mr. Voorhees be given an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Voorhees thanked the Council for the courtesy extended, and then went on to state that there was no intention to block the proposed improvement, but his client living in Elizabeth had not noticed the new proceedings regarding the opening. Continuing, Mr. Voorhees said: "While I have the highest regard for the Watchung avenue commissioners and believe that they are men of noted repute, I am quite sure that they made a mistake in their assessment for benefits and damages in the property in question. From the Y. M. C. A. 49 feet is taken and $6,225.96 allowed as damages, while 11 feet is taken from Mrs. Durlach's property for which $2,850 is allowed as damages and $625 for the portion of a house. In regard to benefits, the Y. M. C. A. has 79 feet left and they are assessed $1,250 for benefits. Mrs. Durlach is left 39 feet and she is assessed $2,250 for benefits. Considering the location of the ground, etc., it will require several hundred dollars to fill in to bring it up to the required grade."

Mr. Voorhees suggested that the report received be referred to the street committee for consideration, and he felt sure the matter could be settled without much trouble. Mr. Fisk then moved that the report be referred back to the street committee and that they make a report in one week's time. The motion prevailed, and Mr. Fisk made another motion which was carried that when council adjourns it be to meet Monday evening, October 12th at 8 o'clock. The regular order of business was then taken up and a communication was received from E. R. Clark which inquired what action had been taken regarding the laying of sidewalk on Grant avenue, between Greenbrook and Front street. The matter was referred to the street committee. M. Honan & Sons asked that the city pay A. M. Griffin a bill for $171.80 out of the money retained by the city as per their contract. The bill was against the contractors, and was referred to the Finance committee. Later, on the recommendation of Mr. Dumont the matter was referred to the Corporation Counsel, he in turn to instruct the city treasurer what to do. H. C. Corsa and other residents of East Second street asked that two two-way fire hydrants be placed on the above street between Richmond and Berckman streets. The fire and building committee will look into the matter and report. In accordance with the suggestion of Deliquent Tax Collector Bird, Assessor A. C. Hubbard re-adjusted the assessment on the property located at 308 East Third street, and gave the figures as $440 for two years. Mr. Bird was then authorized to effect a lien for the above amount and was instructed to confer with the corporation counsel on the subject. On the recommendation of the Board of Engineers, E. J. Vroom of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company was placed on the exempt roll. Inspector of Buildings T. O. Doane reported that he had granted twenty-three permits during the past month, and Street Commissioner Meeker reported that he had given 26 permits to connect with the sewer. Both reports were filed. Two applications for a hack and cart license were received and granted. Mr Dumont offered resolutions that a note for $3,000 be renewed, that $1,000 be borrowed for the general fund and $1,500 for the fire fund. All three resolutions were adopted.

The same member then reported concerning the town clock which a number of citizens asked the city to repair, they agreeing to keep it in running order. He stated that two bids had been received for repairing the clock. One from J. W. VanEps offering to do the work for $30, and another from J. Hervey Doane agreeing to do the same for $65. Mr. Dumont then moved that the city clerk be authorized to arrange with Mr. VanEps for the repair of the clock at a cost of $30. The motion prevailed. Mr. Fisk made a report concerning the petition of J. W. Vansickle, the North avenue butcher, who asked for the privilege of erecting an iron frame for an awning in front of his place of business. Mr. Fisk wanted to refer the matter to the fire and building committee, but Mr. Tolles interposed, and the petition was granted with the proviso that the work be done under the direction of the building inspector.

Mr. Fisk stated that the Street Commissioner had reported the names of several property owners on West Front street who had failed to lay sidewalks as required by the ordinance, and he moved that the walks be laid, and that a lien be effected on the property for the payment of the work. The motion was adopted. Following are the names of the property owners and the location of the property, all of which is on West Front street: G. W. F. Randolph, Nos. 901-935; W. H. Martin, 1095; H. P. Williams, 1027; N. K. Barnes, 1221; Timothy McCarthy, 1137-1151; W. J. Dodd, 1115-1119; Mrs. Elizabeth Kelsey, 1101-1107; John Hauge, 1049; Julius Williams, 1031-1037; Alex. Gordon, 1212-1216; Bennett Britton, 1220.

At this time Mr. Ginna introduced resolutions concerning the death of the late ex-Councilman E. N. Erickson. The resolutions are as follows:

WHEREAS, This Council learns with sincere sorrow that an all-wise Providence has called away our late esteemed friend and associate, E. N. Erickson, it is fitting that our feelings should be manifested in such manner as shall express our appreciation of his private excellence;

Resolved, That we deeply regret the loss of one whose integrity, prompt business habits and courteous manner won our regard as a personal associate and esteemed friend.

Resolved, That we sincerely sympathize with the bereaved family of the deceased, who has so suddenly been bereft of a devoted husband and father, and that a copy of these resolutions be transmitted them.

Following the reading of the above Mr. Barrows made a few remarks in testimony of the life of the ex-councilman. The resolutions were adopted by a rising vote.

Mr. Frost, who last year represented the city, certainly, at the meeting of the American Society of Municipal Improvements, stated that this year the meeting would be held October 14th to 16th at Chicago, and as cities like Jersey City, Newark, and Elizabeth were members of the society, he thought Plainfield should be. He said he expected to attend the convention this year, and asked the Council to join the society by paying a fee of $5. On Mr. Fisk's motion Mr. Frost was authorized to attend, and the necessary $5 was ordered drawn for the purpose above mentioned. The society is organized for the purpose of discussing the best ways and means of promoting information on subjects relative to improved street pavements, electric lighting, sewerage and sanitation, water works and supply, taxation and assessment, city government and legislation, and the disposition of garbage and street cleaning.

At this time the meeting adjourned, there being no further business to transact.

Avenue Extension Work.

According to a survey made of Watchung avenue in the borough the grade will be about fifteen inches below the regular grade, between Chat*ham street and the proposed bridge.* This is done owing to the fact that there does not seem to be a street in the borough that is able to carry off the surplus water, and the object of making a cut in a portion of the new avenue is that the water will find an outlet. The dirt from the avenue is now being removed to fill the grade. Already several houses have been placed on new foundations on the line of the avenue, which has thus far been opened to Manning avenue.

Mrs. James to be Taken Care of.

Overseer of the Poor Ralph, of Warren Township, was in town this morning on his way to Somerville, where he was to have made out the commitment papers for the removal of Mrs. Harriet P. James, of Warrenville, who has recently been declared insane to the asylum at Trenton. The woman is seventy-nine years of age, and has frequently wandered away from home, remaining away for several days at a time. The woman's condition was examined and her antecedents looked after, but the commission declared her wanting in several respects, and she was incarcerated as a person unsafe to be left at large.

Nervous

People often wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they start at every slight but sudden sound; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and nervous

Dyspepsia

The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood which is continually feeding the nerves upon refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. In such condition opiate and nerve compounds simply deaden and do not cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves with rich, red blood; gives natural sleep, perfect digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

ENDED WITH A BANQUET

VISITING KNIGHTS TEMPLARS ROYALLY ENTERTAINED.

Tables Loaded Down With Good Things to Satisfy the Inner Man After a Fatigue of the March.

Plainfield has again assumed its wonted quiet, but only for today, however, as the firemen promise to make things lively Saturday. The last waving white plume vanished last evening, either on some departing train or to some safe place, while its owner returns to the regular costume of this civilized world. The gorgeous Knights Templar in his showy uniform of black and white has disappeared, and in his place may be found some quiet appearing citizen ready to do his share in the routine of duty. The martial music, that stirs the blood and makes the feet unwittingly keep time, that too, is gone, but Plainfield is to hear more tomorrow.

The long talked of State Field Day of the Knights Templars is over, and it may be well accounted a success. The holding of the Field Day exercises Thursday was rather unfortunate in several ways, as there were two counter attractions, a big day at the inter-State at Trenton and the firemen's parade at Easton, and a number of the commanderies did not turn out for that reason. The ranks of those that did come were slightly thinned out for the same reason. The Field Day with its parade was a success, however. The Sir Knights were entertained most royally, and every thing passed off in the best way imaginable.

There was a surprised lot of men when all was over. Many of them came from cities that Plainfield was a country town of perhaps five thousand inhabitants, and that if they marched a half mile in any direction they would come out in a cornfield. But oh, how mistaken they were. The handsome residences and elegant roads surprised them, but when they reached the Masonic headquarters in the Babcock building and realized their extent and beauty, their astonishment turned to stupefaction, as Plainfield has one of the finest lodge rooms in the State, and even some Plainfielders would be surprised by a glance into these rooms.

The story of the arrival of the Sir Knights was told in yesterday's Daily Press, and the paper appeared in the streets as the paraders were marching along the line of march.

The headquarters of the Grand Commandery was at the Revere House, and in front of that hotel on Park avenue the Sir Knights gathered yesterday afternoon for their annual parade. The commanderies were ordered to be ready for dress parade at 2:15 o'clock, and it was but a very few minutes after that time that the Sir Knights had all marched up to the designated place. They came with banners waving and the inspiring strains of the brass band sounded from all sides. The people flowed in that direction too, on foot, awheel and in carriages until Park avenue, with all its wideness, was crowded. There was a goodly sprinkling of strangers in the crowd but many of the faces were familiar. The small boy was there in all his glory, for the public schools had only had one session on account of the parade, and his pride rose twenty degrees as he planted himself by the side of some imposing Sir Knight and sturdily plodded forward with the procession. The band and especially the bass drum was an unfailing source of interest to him, and each musician had a score of young admirers who watched him with awe and admiration from afar.

The Sir Knights did certainly make a pretty appearance in their black uniform with silver trimmings and accoutrements, and their black chapeaus with the white plume. They were a good looking set of men and they kept very good line. They marched in a column of threes, most of the way, but several of the commanderies, including Trinity, formed the cross, which had a fine effect. The Damascus Commandery appeared to be the best drilled of all in fancy tactics, for they performed several quite intricate manœuvres.

There was some little delay at the start, and it was not until 2:45 o'clock that the Sir Knights were lined up in single rank along Park avenue for the dress parade. Trinity Commandery had the right of line with her special guests, Temple Commandery, of Metuchen, and Clinton Commandery, of New York, and then came the other commanderies in order of their establishment. In the centre of the long line of Sir Knights were gathered the standards of the different commanderies, and that of the grand commandery of the State. Opposite them were the grand officers clustered together. The line was at attention and all was silent. A bugle call sounded from the head of the line and then came a burst of music as the Plainfield Cornet Band struck up and started from its position at the extreme right of the line and marched down the long line of glittering knights and then back again.

Open carriages were driven up and most of the grand officers were seated in them and then the regular parade began.

At the head of the column came a platoon of Plainfield's "finest." Sergeant Kiely commanded the detachment of policemen while Roundsman Fredericksen marched on the right. Next in line was the Plainfield Cornet Band. Then came the Grand Captain General, Eminent Sir P. McGill, well mounted on a charger from which he directed the movements of the column. Five open landaus followed with most of the grand officers of this State and their guests, the grand officers of New York, while the remainder, the younger men, marched together close behind. The grand officers of the Grand Commandery of New Jersey present here were:

Acting Grand Commander, Very Eminent Sir John E. Bowe; Grand Generalissimo, Eminent Sir W. H. Sebring; Grand Senior Warden, Eminent Sir W. B. Pugh; Grand Junior Warden, Eminent Sir J. Davidson; Recorder, Right Eminent Sir C. Bechtel; Treasurer, F. Weise; Grand Prelate, Eminent Sir George Maddock; Grand Standard Bearer, Eminent Sir Daniel Demarest; Grand Sword Bearer, Eminent Sir D. C. Adams, M. D.; Grand Warden, Eminent Sir J. Sheriff; Past Grand Commanders, Right Eminent Sirs E. Pulper, L. L. Greer, Isaac S. Roberts, A. D. Winfield and Edward Mills; Past Grand Captain General, Eminent Sir J. N. Alstrom; and Past Grand Prelate, Eminent Sir Thomas Godson.

The grand officers of the Grand Commandery of New York present were; Grand Commander, Right Eminent Sir John A. Mapes; Deputy Grand Commander, Very Eminent Sir Arthur McArthur; Grand Generalissimo, Eminent Sir George Nicholson; Grand Sword Bearer, Eminent Sir W. J. Maxwell; Past Grand Commander, Right Eminent Sir John H. Ronning; and Eminent Sir J. F. Valentine, M. D., of St. Elmo Commandery.

The Trinity Commandery, No. 18, of this city, had the position of honor at the right of the line. Eminent Commander Jacob Kirkner led, while Captain-General Walter H. Freeman directed the movements of the fifty-local Sir Knights and their twenty visitors from Temple Commandery, No. 18, of Metuchen, that marched with them. The other special guests, the members of Clinton Commandery, of New York, marched next and were distinguished by their white plumes. They had forty swords in line and were commanded by Eminent Sir John C. Reid. Twenty Sir Knights of Hugh De Payen Commandery, of Jersey City, were in line under their officers, Eminent Commander Bertholf and Captain-General Westell.

The blue uniforms with yellow trimming of Voss' First Regiment Band preceded the Damascus Commandery, No. 5, of Newark. A well drilled commandery they were and they also had the most in line, sixty-six swords. Eminent Commander L. D. Crane and Captain-General Dawson were in command.

More music followed then in the shape of the Washington Band that came with DeMolay Commandery, No. 6, of Washington and that commandery followed the musicians, forty swords strong, headed by Eminent Commander Daues and Captain General Smith.

Then came the St. John's Commandery, No. 9, of Elizabeth with thirty-five swords in line and commanded by Eminent Commander Burk and Captain General Shepard. Next was Melita Commandery, No. 13, of Paterson, with Eminent Commander Levie and Captain General Stenton, in the lead. Garrett A. Hobart, Republican candidate for vice-president, is a member of this commandery but was not present.

Last in line was Carson Commandery, No. 14, Eminent Commander Bennett, Captain General Parsons, with forty swords and preceded by Voss' band.

The line of march, advertised in the Daily Press, was followed out and the grand officers reviewed the column on West Front street from the reviewing stand erected for the occasion across Madison avenue from the Babcock building.

After their parade Trinity Commandery and her guests marched back to the Babcock building and spent the rest of the time in the Masonic headquarters. Tables groaned beneath the load of a sumptuous banquet in the banquet room and here the local Sir Knights and guests satisfied the inner man.

Mind as well as body was provided for and the grand organ in the lodge room sent forth sweet music under the touch of W. E. MacClymont. Then Elmer E. Runyon sang "Love's Nocturne" most acceptably in his fine tenor voice and B. T. Barnes gave the famous bass solo from "Bobin Hood," "The Armorer's Song." Together Mr. Runyon and Mr. Barnes sang a very pretty duet, "I come." A general reception followed and all the visitors were looked after by the local Sir Knights, who certainly know how to entertain.

The visitors were all presented with souviner badges while freshly cut flowers were lavishly distributed among the Sir Knights and their ladies, quite a number of whom attended the reception in the Masonic rooms.

Great credit is due to those who arranged the field day.

The committee of arrangements consisted of Sir Knights Asa Collier, O. T. Waring, W. R. Codington, H. M. Stockton and J. W. Murray, Sr. The reception committee consisted of Eminent Sir Knight W. H. Sebring, Past Commander B. F. Coriell, Eminent Sir Knight D. C. Adams, Sir Knight J. H. Pollon. The committee on decorations consisted of H. W. Marshall.

Quite a number of distinguished men were included among the visiting Sir Knights. Among them was Col. Fleming, of Essex Troop, Orange, who came with Carson Commandery. Among the guests of Trinity Commandery were Sir Knights from Kansas, Illinos, Missouri, Maryland, and Virginia.

FOR SAKE OF CHARITY.

THE RELIEF ASSOCIATION'S ANNUAL MEETING HELD THIS MORNING.

Officers Chosen For the Ensuing Year—A Woodyard to be Established to Give Employment to the Needy.

The annual meeting of the Board of Managers of the Plainfield Relief Association was held in the Y. M. C. A. hall last Friday, Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph presiding and Mrs. Brooks recording the proceedings.

Included in the routine of business was the report from the secretary, stating that this is the eighteenth year of the society's existence. The society moved into its present quarters on March 1st last, and there is still an indebtedness of $600 on the premises. Eighty-six persons were given assistance during the winter, fifty-four Thanksgiving dinners were provided, and assistance was rendered to others in various ways. The receipt of twenty-five tons of coal from Chas. J. Fisk and five tons more from Irins & Co., was gratefully acknowledged. In the past six months $60 has been realized from the sale of articles made by the association.

The coming winter there is to be established a wood yard with sawing apparatus, where the needy can find employment. J. P. Laire has generously donated saws, axes, and other necessary tools

The report of the treasurer showed the total receipts to be $1,079.63; expenditures, $1,018; leaving a balance on hand in the treasury with the September bills not yet settled.

The donations from individuals have been few and far between, and what is now needed is second hand clothing, remnants of cotton and woolen and other materials which can be made up into warm and comfortable winter clothing.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing term; President, Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph; Vice-President, Mrs. J. K. Myers; Secretary, Mrs. Charles E. Brooks; Treasurer, Mrs. H. P. Reynolds.

The following ladies were elected the Board of Managers: Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. Joseph Myers, Mrs. M. W. Tyler, Mrs. C. E. Ryder, Mrs. Alexander Gilbert, Mrs. Charles Fisk, Mrs. E. L. Suffern, Mrs. S. P. Simpson, Mrs. Charles W. McCutchen, Mrs. J. E. Tracy, Mrs. H. P. Reynolds, Mrs. B. J. Shivers, Mrs. H. M. Maxson and Mrs. James B. Joy.

Messrs. M. W. Tyler and Rowland Cox were named as the auditing committee.

The matter of changing the constitution so as to increase the Board of Managers was considered at some length, but no definite action was taken regarding it.

Certain doctors were scored for not reporting cases of scarlet fever and other contagious diseases, and the attention of the Board of Health was respectfully called to the matter.

Miss Tweedy spoke of the necessity of having assisting visitors to visit the homes of the poor and sick, and suggested that each member invite a friend to assist in the work.

Considerable discussion also followed on the subject of a depleted treasury, but no definite action was taken in the matter.

DEMOCRATS HOPEFUL

NEWARK CHOSEN AS THE HEADQUARTERS OF THE STATE COMMITTEE.

A Canvass of the State Being Made and an Energetic Campaign Is Planned—Chairman Voorhees in Charge of the Affairs.

Newark has been selected as the headquarters for the State Democratic Committee of New Jersey, and the first meeting was last Wednesday afternoon in the Jeffersonian club house in West Park street.

Every county in the state with one exception was represented, and the first regular business was the announcement by Chairman E. L. Price of the following Executive Committee:

Johnston Cornish, of Warren, chairman; Louise F. Braun, of Passaic; Harry B. Paul, of Camden; David S. Crater, of Southern New Jersey; James W. Lanning, of Mercer; William D. Daly, of Hudson, and William D. Wolfskeil, of Union.

This committee will meet at State Headquarters daily from now until election day, and it will have virtual charge of the campaign, subject to the approval of the General Committee. Former Senator Kays, of Sussex county, was among the non-members who were present. He gave a glowing account of what Sussex will do and said it would be in line for Augustus W. Cutler and other candidates in the fourth Congressional district. Johnston Cornish declared Warren will give a plurality of 2,000 for the entire ticket. Encouraging reports were heard from other parts of the State, and Secretary Devereux announced that he has offers of services from 300 speakers and a list of 480 regularly organized clubs.

Partial reports of a thorough canvass of the State, which is being made, were said to show that old line Democrats by the hundred who have not voted in years will vote for Bryan and Sewall in November. An energetic campaign plan will be carried out, and the matter of raising funds for election expenses was discussed. Chairman Price declared that if the reports of the present are half realized on election day the Democrats will carry the State and elect seven Representatives, five State Senators and a safe majority of Assemblymen.

Senator Daly declared for a Bryan and Sewall plurality of at least 10,000 in Hudson county. Mr. Whitehead, of Union, said his county is all right, and W. B. Pugh, the new Bergen county man, said that the defection of former Senator Winton and others will not materially affect the party in Bergen. Senator Smith was not mentioned during the meeting. Most of those present declined to talk of his position.

"Mr. Smith has the right to think and talk as he feels disposed as an individual," said Senator Kuhl. "But he is a politician who has been more signally honored than any other man in the State by the Democratic party. An ordinary mortal would feel grateful for the treatment which he received, but I am inclined to believe that he is more than ordinary, or at least that he regards himself as such. A sense of decency would have impelled Mr. Smith to be on hand to receive Mr. Bryan when he arrived in Newark."

Secretaries Devereux and Naar will be at the Newark headquarters until election day.

Frisky Pups Cause a Tumble.

Peter B. Hodge, of Randolph's pharmacy, was the victim of an unfortunate circumstance, Saturday evening, while riding his wheel home to supper. He had not gone far along Front street when his wheel struck one of two canines that were playing in the road. The force of the collision was strong enough to throw Mr. Hodge from his wheel with the result of cutting the left side of his face severely, and bruising his knee and hip. Dr. Probasco was passing at the time in a carriage, and he at once jumped out and assisted Mr. Hodge back to the drug store, where upon examination he found it necessary to take several stitches in the cut. Mr. Hodge is able to work though he feels very sore from his shake up.

HOWLED FOR FARMER JIM

BUT MR. MARTINE WOULDN'T ACCEPT THE NOMINATION.

The Farmer Orator Stirred the Delegates to the Wildest Kind of Enthusiasm—J. O. Willey the Congressional Nominee.

The Eighth Congressional District Democratic Convention, held at Elizabeth Thursday afternoon, was the liveliest that has taken place in that city since John T. Dunn was nominated for Congress in 1892. The great central figure that dominated everything else was the picturesque personality of James E. Martine, the farmer orator, who never had such a task in his life as to keep the convention from making him a candidate. Martine plainly did not want it, but the delegates yelled for him just the same.

Mr. Martine had a conference at the Sheridan House prior to the convention with Freeman O. Willey, of Orange, who was just as anxious to grasp the prize as Martine was to refuse it. The Union county man pledged himself to Willey that he would not oppose his candidacy.

Mr. Martine was chosen chairman, and made an impassioned speech, which provoked wild enthusiasm. He bitterly assailed the Republican party, and when he finished the convention was all ready to make him the nominee. Mr. Martine, however, was true to his promise, and despite a scene of almost riotous tumult, he was obstinate and would not permit the use of his name.

The Bayonne delegation jumped on their chairs and howled for him, while Elizabeth's and part of South Orange's delegates followed suit.

Martine pounded the desk and shouted: "I don't want it! Let me off, I say! I know your generosity, but I love my party more than myself. I cannot be your candidate. I'll work for the party, but I can't take the nomination."

Even this appeal would have failed had not Timothy Barrett, of South Orange, taken the floor, and, after singing the praises of Martine, declared that if he would stick South Orange would would stand by him.

"But since he won't" he added, "why, take him at his word. He has too often led in forlorn hopes, but never realized anything."

A delegate shouted: "But he will now!"

Mr. Barrett, continuing, said: "The Hon. Freeman O. Willey has occupied the bench of the Wisconsin court and is an author and economist. We ask you to support Willey."

Then there was another uproar. One of the Bayonne delegates shouted: "Willey wants too much for a stranger. Why, he has only been in New Jersey a couple of years!"

Capt. Page called on the Bayonne delegation who favored Martine to stand up. Most of them did so.

Terence McDonald, of Bayonne, asked that Martine, being a candidate, be retired as a presiding officer, and the vice president take his place.

Mr. Martine replied: "I am not a coward, I can stand defeat, but I will not take the nomination."

H. C. Page, of Bayonne, then strode to the front and shouted: "Martine must stand! He is the peer of any one. Willey is comparatively unknown, but we know Jim Martine and want him."

The roll-call proceeded, and when it was seen that Willey was getting most of the votes Freeholder Noah Woodruff, of Union, moved to make the nomination of Freeman O. Willey unanimous.

A committee found the candidate nervously pacing the floor in his room at the Sheridan House. He was brought before the convention and his speech of acceptance made a favorable impression. He told the reporters afterwards that he was fifty-seven years old, born in New Hampshire and migrated to Minnesota in 1880. He was for a short time a surrogate by appointment in one of the counties there. He has lived in New Jersey a little over three years and has a wife and four daughters, two of whom are married. He is the author of a book on political economy, which he claims has attained quite a circulation in the west. He professes to be one of the pioneers in the free-silver movement and declared he would give Congressman Fowler all the chance he wanted to debate the issues of the campaign with him before the people of the district.

Candidate Willey is a pleasant-featured, rather dignified man of medium height. Two of his daughters were the only women at the convention.

Candidate Willey signed his nomination papers before leaving Elizabeth.

COSTLY HUNTING THIS.

TWO WELL-TO-DO MEN FINED $107.50 FOR VIOLATING GAME LAWS.

Game Wardens TenEyck and Squires Captured Them in the Act of Shooting and Found Game on Their Person.

Deputy Game Wardens Israel J. TenEyck and Geo. W. Squires bagged big game yesterday afternoon when they captured two well-to-do men violating the game laws by hunting on Sunday and shooting birds prohibited by law. Sunday hunting has become a pastime much in vogue in this section of late, in direct contravention of the game laws, and the game wardens have determined to break up the practice.

Yesterday morning, Messrs. TenEyck and Squires started out in quest of violators in the neighborhood of Coontown, but all the morning they did not hear the bang of a gun. In the afternoon they decided to invade the district between Coontown and Mt. Bethel. They were proceeding along the road, skirted by a piece of woods owned by Otto Wagner, near Warrenville, when they suddenly heard the explosion of a gun. Looking in the direction from whence the sound came they saw two men in the woods a few hundred yards distant from the road with rifles swung over their shoulders and in hunting togs. They lost no time in getting over to where the hunters were and found that they had a woodpecker, a highholder, and a cedar bird in their bags.

The hunters were placed under arrest and immediately taken before Justice Austin at Washingtonville on the double charge of hunting on Sunday and killing birds prohibited by law. Otto Wagner, the owner of the property on which they were arrested, was one of the culprits, and Fred Demeyer, of Jersey City, a dealer in hides of wild animals, was his companion. Since they were caught in the act of shooting and the game found in their possession, there was nothing for the Justice to do but to convict them. He fined them $30 each for hunting on Sunday, $20 for each of the three birds, and $7.40 costs, amounting to a total of $107.50. They paid the fines on the spot and returned to Wagner's home.

WELL-SOLD SNAPPING TURTLE.

It Led Country Lad to Wall Street, Montgomery and Albanese.

"I would not have minded John's action on the floor the other day," said a broker to a party of friends, "if he had not used such a tone of suspicion when he asked me more margin on certain stocks that I had with him in a loan."

"It's only his way, Charlie," said a friend, "he didn't mean to injure you at all."

"Possibly he did not," said the first speaker, "it may have been due to the thinking that this old Dutch banker, ——, gets him, and his innate desire to let nothing escape.

"Then he and I were boys," Charlie continued, "I spent several summers on his big farm out in Jersey. It was there that he met his partner, and also in a curious little story connected with their first business transaction — one in which he 'did' the old fellow, but at the same time endeared himself to him.

"John and I had been fishing, and among other things had caught a snapping turtle that weighed about 20 pounds. We were carrying the snapper home tied to a stick, one having hold of each end of it, when we met the banker driving along in a buggy to his summer home.

"We catch presented a good appearance, and the old fellow stopped to inquire about it, as he had never seen so large a turtle before, except in the market. He asked what we were going to do with it, and we told him what delicious soup it would make. At once he wanted it, and offered 50 cents for it. I was for accepting the 50 cents, but not so John. He felt that he had a customers and held out for one dollar—and he got it.

"Old —— was a little afraid of the snapper's jaws, but John and I bridled the turtle by passing a bit of fishing line around it and between its jaws—and so felt safe in letting it remain in its shell. We then received our silver dollar, tossed the snapper under the seat of the old man's buggy and he drove off with it.

"As he did so I started on toward home, but John sat down by the roadside.

"'What are you waiting for?' I said

"'The snapper,' said John.

"'It's gone,' said I.

"'Mebbe it is, and mebbe it ain't. Wait a minute and watch the old man,' said he.

"And, sure enough, before the old man had gone half a mile we heard him yell and then saw him jump from his buggy.

"John rolled on the grass and laughed nearly as loudly as the old man had yelled.

"Picking himself up, he said: 'Let's go get our snapper.'

"'I'd rather have the dollar,' I said.

"'What's the matter with having both?' he replied, and tossing me the dollar and telling me to remain where I was, he started up the road after the old man, who was afraid to go near his buggy, for the snapper had bitten through its bridle, and nipped the old man's shins, and had taken undisputed possession of the buggy.

"He (the old fellow) was in a state of consternation—swearing at the snapper in the most expressive German at his command, and rubbing his shins at the same time.

"'What you sell me, de devil?' asked the old man.

"'No, a nice, fat, juicy snapper,' said John, "and I sold him too cheaply, too. He'll make delicious soup, and plenty of it.'

"'Dunner-vetter! soup! I'll hat no soup. Gif me my toller and take de brute.'

"I haven't your dollar, Charley has it back there in the road. Take the snapper to him and I guess he'll give you the dollar.'

"'No! Me take dat eatin' ting! I vouldn't get into that puggy now for a quarter each vay. Get 'im out, and keep the toller.'

"It was like rolling off a log for John to take a fork, prod the snapper, and jerk him to the ground as soon as he had fastened his jaws upon it. Old Dutchy, as we called him, jumped into his buggy as soon as the snapper touched the ground and drove hurriedly away.

"Of course I rejoined John and we soon had his snappership swinging from our stick. We walked home in triumph with the dollar in one pocket and the snapper, metaphorically, in the other. Our joke was too good to keep, and that night we related it to all who visited the mill.

"The old man bore us no ill will, but still he never wanted to buy any more of our snapping, although he occasionally stopped to look at them, from the seat of his buggy, when he met us carrying them home.

"John and I were sitting on the mill steps one evening when the old man drove up. He jumped down, came to us, ride with him, and together they drove off. They were gone about an hour. That night John said: 'I'm going to be a banker.'

"'You going to be a banker—what nonsense!' I exclaimed.

"'Nonsense or not; it's a fact. The old man to-night asked me to take a position with him. I told him I knew nothing of the business, and would be a failure.'

"'You're a failure!' he said. 'You who bat solt me a schnapper and hat pot my toller and my schnapper! Dot is too funny. You come vit me. I vant you, and some day I put you on the vatchange. You judge human nature, and you know animal nature—de bulls and de bears is de place for you.'

"John went with the old man, and ever since has had the dollar in one hand and the snapper on the stick in the other. He married the old man's daughter, got into the firm, and now owns the whole concern. If he ever gets a coat of arms the device should be a schnapper rampant on a field of green, with, possibly, a silver dollar in the schnapper's mouth."

CHEAP BICYCLES.

A French Invention Which Sells for a Quarter.

It Is Hardly Up to Our American Machines, However as Thought It May Affect the Price of Bicycles the World Over.

A business has just been started in Paris which may affect the price of bicycles all over the world. It undoubtedly will, if the claims made by the champions of the new undertaking prove true. Some true, others, they say, that the mention of the sum takes one's breath away, are to be the product of this new business or factory.

Wooden bicycles were offered for sale in Paris some time ago at the unheard-of price of 25 francs each. Henri de Parville, scientific editor of the Journal des Debats, was musing over this strange fact, when one day he received a letter informing him that a very useful bicycle could be made for two sous, which are equivalent to a couple of cents of American money. A bicycle for a couple of cents! Just think of it! A few days later Paul Clerc, the writer of the letter, showed M. de Parville his two-cent bicycle. It was simply composed of a couple of pieces of wood taken from an old box and two cents' worth of iron.

It was, in other words, a rough specimen of the primitive velocipede, as invented by Baron de Drais in 1818. The component parts of this machine were a rough wooden framework and two wooden wheels of equal size.

M. Clerc's idea is to place on the market machines fashioned after this old model, but with all feasible and inexpensive improvements. The machines will have neither pedals nor intricate mechanism of any kind. They will be composed simply of a wooden framework, two wooden wheels and a saddle. They will be known, not as bicycles, but as celerets.

It is not expected that the celerets will supersede the regular bicycles, but it is considered certain that thousands who cannot afford to buy bicycles will buy celerets. A first-class bicycle costs $100 or more, a celeret can be made or bought for one dollar or two dollars, and one of an inferior grade can be purchased as low as 25 cents. Nay, there is no reason why a handy man or boy should not make a celeret for himself, in which case the only outlay necessary would be a couple of cents for iron.

And in regard to the utility of the celeret Baron de Drais said many years ago: "On a good road my machine can travel at the rate of two leagues, and even four leagues, an hour, and when going down hill its speed is greater than that of a galloping horse." Perhaps the baron bragged. The celeret may not go quite as fast as he claims. Still, it can be made to go fast, and with little effort. The rider is really walking, while in a sitting posture, and is far less likely to become fatigued than if he were running in the ordinary manner. Progression is made by touching the ground alternately with the right and left foot. The machine, once set in motion in this manner, goes along steadily, and the speed at times is so great that the rider has no need to propel himself with his feet.

Put pneumatic tires and other modern improvements on a celeret," says M. Clerc, "and there is no reason why it should not go almost as fast as a bicycle."

He also says confidently that a man can travel a long distance on a celeret and feel hardly the least fatigue at the end of his journey. He accounts for this fact on the ground that none of the energy spent on propelling the machine is wasted, and that the amount of energy required to travel a long journey is much less than might be expected.

M. Clerc sees clearly that it will be no easy task to make the celerets popular. When their prototypes, the draisenes, were invented, at the beginning of the century, the few persons who ventured to use them in France were unmercifully caricatured. In England the machines became more popular, but there too, their riders were ridiculed. We all know how long it has taken the modern bicycle to win its present high position. M. Clerc, however, is confident of success.

"According to him," says the Journal des Debats, "thousands can derive benefit from a machine like this, which costs almost nothing, which travels as fast as a trotting horse, and which can be ridden by anyone without the slightest danger of falling off. How many young people would use it for amusement and health, and also for the purpose of learning how to ride the regular bicycle? Workingmen could ride to their business on celerets, children could go to school on them, peasants could ride to market on them, and even business men could use them to save time. So light could they be made that riders could easily carry them under their arms, if necessary."

Analyzed thoroughly, then, M. Clerc's idea is philanthropic. He wants to furnish workingmen and the poor generally, who cannot afford to lay bicycles, with machines for a few cents, and if perchance he will prove quite as serviceable to them as any bicycle.—N. Y. Herald.

She Had a Reason, Too.

He thought to test her affection as he took her little hand in his and looked fondly into her eyes.

"If you had your choice," he said, "would you prefer to have an engagement ring or a bicycle?"

For fully three minutes she said nothing, but he could see that a fearful struggle was taking place within her. Finally she spoke:

"All else being equal," she said, "I would prefer an engagement ring, but—"

"My darling! My own!" he cried.

"You don't be so sudden," she protested. "I said all else being equal, but it isn't. Would an engagement ring give me a license to wear bloomers? Well, I guess not. Trot out the wheel."—Chicago Post.

MALONEY SEES LIGHT.

But It Was a Long Time Before This Event Occurred.

Park Commissioners's Family Goes Abroad on Dandelion and His Beast and Escapes Police Interference for a Long Time.

"Whiniver I see thim bicycle lanterns driftin' down the road loike witch lights I feel loike a farmer," said Maloney, the "sparrow cop," dejectedly, to a Chicago Tribune reporter.

"To begin wid, Oi'm a cop, ye should understand is, to use a Frinch term, the perquesit of a park commissioner by the name of Watson, a great man he is too. He should be Irish and prisident. Well, I got me job through a frind of mine, who is the frind of Watson's, so the same is wate to me ears.

"The beginnin' of me trouble was an order to pinch the min as were ridin' without lanterns—sure 'twas no use ordrin' Maloney to disturb the ladies, for bein' acquainted at the toime with the min of influence I wan night ran in a man with a pull and was near losin' me job for the same.

"'Use your discreshun, Maloney,' said the captain to me. 'Use, your discreshun.' 'I can't,' said I. 'I'm a cop.' 'Well, remember this is a republic,' said he to me, 'and lave min with pulls alone.' 'I will,' said I, and that was the second cause of me trouble.

"Well, the nixt noight, ah, I was standin' in the drohve, along comes two min, with nary a loight on their bicycles. 'Be cautious, Maloney,' said I, and I sizzed 'em up. Sure, they looked harmless, and grabbed 'em. 'Come along wid ye,' said I. 'Fur what?' sez wan of thim. 'Fur what?' sez I; 'fur ridin' without a loight,' sez I. 'We was goin' to a banquet,' sez he, 'whin our lamps wint out.' 'Ah' where did they go,' sez I, 'fur they had not a lantern on their bicycles.

"'Now, look ahere, Mr. Orficer,' said the other wan, 'our name is Watson, sons of Park Commissioner Watson,' said he; sure, I thought I would drop dead at the mintion of the name—and I think ye should let us go this toime,' said he. I did. I dropped 'em loike the divil would holy water.

"They wint, and the noight after along comes three more without a lantern among thim. This toime it was a man and two wimen—they was ladies, but 'twas the stoile to go by wimen, ye know. Sure it wint to me heart to frighten thim, but 'twas me duty, so I jumped out and said: 'Halt!' said I. 'Halt and loight thim lanterns.'

"'Our name is Watson,' said they. And before I would be beggin' their pardon they was gone.

"About tin o'clock the next noight I seen a party of no less than twinty bicyclers ridin' along without loights. Sure 'twas me among thim they moight all been engaged. 'Maloney,' said I, 'the toime has come to earn a reputashun.' So I jumped out in the road and drew me club. 'Halt!' said I. 'Ye are arristed,' and what do you think they done? Halt? Niver a bit. 'Git out of the way,' said the leader to me, 'we're Watsons,' and away the whole twinty wint. Sure a baby could has knocked me down and bate me, I was that surprised.

"I wonder if all the commissioners have such multitugenous families,' said I to meself. 'Sure, an' if they have I don't want the job, that's all.' So next day I asked our mutual frind: 'What nationality is this man Watson?' 'He is an American,' said me frind, 'and a great man.' 'He is, indade,' said I.

"That noight near midnoight I seen two riders come a wabblin' down the road without lanterns. I knew all the Watsons were good riders, so I grabs 'em—they bein' min. 'Ye are under arrist,' said I. 'Git out, will ye,' said one. 'Our name is Watson,' said he, with a hiccup. 'You're no Watson,' said I. 'You're Irish.' 'Faith an' I'm as good,' said he. 'I'm the Watson's cook'—and sure 'twas a woman, a woman in man's clothes—them things they all bloomers, we understand. 'An' what have ye on?' said I, pointin' to the bloomers. 'The English groom's roidin' suit,' said she. 'And who is this?' said I pointin' to the other, a little wan. 'That's the English groom,' said she. 'Let me be, ye ruffian.'

"'An English groom,' said I, an' I gives him a shake, fur me grandfather was bung in '98 fur killin' a cunstable. Then I wint to me captain and I says,' said I, 'an' don't be disgracin' your race and imployer by wearin' such things,' said I, pointin' to the bloomers. As fur the little Inglish groom, I locks him up. And thin the light began to dawn on me.

"So the next day, seein' Mr. Watson oin the park, I said to him: 'Axin' your pardon,' said I, 'how many children have you, sor?' 'Four,' said he, 'but I hear some people have been usin' me name to avoid burnin' off in their bicycle lamps,' said he. 'But they will not use me name any more.' 'They will save no more oil,' said I. 'And they haven't; but ivery toime I see thim lanterns I feel loike a farmer. The idea of an Irishman bein' caught loike that."

PROGRESS IN SURGERY.

Connecticut Baby Supplied with a New-Fangled Ear.

An an Organ of Hearing It Will Not Be Much of a Success, But It Adds Greatly to the Little Tot's Appearance.

Ears can be made to order now—almost "while you wait."

If your next baby, instead of having a fine, shapely shell of an ear that the nurse and all the women of the neighborhood will rave over, should happen to have just a kind of a bump that doesn't look like anything at all, don't be discouraged.

Modern surgery is not dismayed by any such trifle as that. It goes to work and builds noses and ears and anything else almost that the human face and figure lack to be symmetrical.

One of the most delicate, most delicate, as well as the most successful of the recent ventures of the new surgery, was the construction of an ear to supply the sad deficiency of a Connecticut baby.

The patient in this very skillful operation was an infant with the euphonious name of Michael Kopeake. The child's parents keep a thriving boarding house in Union City, Conn.

The change was thought best on account of the cold weather and the fact that most of the athletes in the High School were completely out of training. AROUND THE BASES.

The deciding game in the series between the Bound Brooks and Somersets was won on Saturday by the former team by a score of 6 to 3. Terry and Jones were the Bound Brook battery, and H. Major and Smith the Somersets. The game was exciting throughout, and was practically won in the third inning by a three-bagger by Terry, when two men were on bases.

MUST BE BORN AGAIN.

because he went to church. Satin is one of the best of church attendants. Rogues cover up their rascality by going to church. Another would say by belonging to the church. Didn't Judas live with the Lord and go through all the forms. A third would answer, by being baptised. You can't be baptised into the Kingdom of God.

You can't get there by simply making good resolutions. If all the good resolutions made here were recorded on parchment it would take four horses to drag it, and yet most of them have been broken as soon as they are made. To make vows and resolutions isn't being born of the spirit.

There is a certain class of people that believe that they are so good that they don't need to do any better. You can't find a man or woman on the face of the earth that is really good at heart. We are all bad at heart.

"I'll prove it to you," exclaimed Mr. Moody. "Suppose a man came to town advertising to take photographs of the heart and show everything there. Do you suppose he would have a single customer? No! A team of horses couldn't draw one there. We don't want to show what our hearts are."

He read the picture of the heart as given by Mark and declared it the natural heart. He compared it to a fountain sending out impure water and said what was the use of trying to make the stream good. God's method is to purify the fountain and then the stream will be pure.

You will say, continued Mr. Moody, that I have told you that we have to be born again but have not told you how to do it. Man lost life by believing the word of the tempter. We are going to gain it again by believing the Word of God. The Word of God is an incorruptable seed, which, when planted, will send up new life. You may receive a new life now, a new life as pure as Christ's, because it is part of it.

A mother often says to me, told Mr. Moody, isn't it strange that my son or daughter doesn't like to go to church? No. Nature likes natural things when the touch of God has not been felt. A heavenly taste likes heavenly things.

Did you ever see a young man with an ideal home, loving mother and sisters, and all that he could wish? Then he will leave all this and go down to the slums and finally bring up in some wretched whiskey dive where he will do almost anything to get whiskey. You go to him and talk about the lovely home he has left and the loving welcome that is waiting him should he return. He says he does not want to go. He wants his whiskey and he cannot have it at home. Put a Heavenly nature in that man and he leaves, oh! how quickly.

If you have a wound it is a good thing to know it, but don't tear it open every day. Look at it first and then look at the remedy, and that remedy is to be found in the third chapter of John, 14-17 verses. There it tells you how to get into the Kingdom of God. Read the verses and ponder over them.

"I thank God," exclaimed Mr. Moody, "that Salvation is open to all. Will you reach out and take it?"

An earnest prayer by Mr. Moody and the benediction closed the service and the large audience passed out while tears stood in the eyes of many, for some of his illustrations and incidents had been very pathetic while his appeal reached the hearts of many.

THE NEED OF PRAYER.

All the Important Events in Christ's Life Were Preceded by Prayer.

The Crescent Avenue church was filled Tuesday afternoon at an audience that had gathered to hear Evangelist Moody. The first half hour was occupied with a song service led by F. H. Burke and the Christian Endeavor choir, during which Mr. Burke sang most impressively two beautiful solos. The subject of Mr. Moody's talk was prayer and it was a soul-inspiring, helpful discourse. A substance of his remarks follow: "If there is one thing that the church needs today it is prayer, and she needs it badly. Every important event in the life of Christ was preceded by prayer which fact is worthy of emulation. If we are going to get to heaven we have got to pray. It was when Abraham fell on his face in prayer that God heard him and that means humiliation. If you want a blessing, pray, and I trust that the delegates who come to this city may be inspired to pray and thus be an instrument in the salvation of souls. If we ask God for bread, he will surely not give us a stone. We often say that our prayers are not answered, but if we examine ourselves we will find that the fault lies at our own door. There are several important things we need as Christians.

"Firstly, we need adoration. We should not speak lightly of divine things. Secondly, it is essential that we confess our sins. A known sin will separate us from blessings. Thirdly, it may be that the lack of restitution is keeping many out of Christ's kingdom. Lastly, we should not be unforgiving. The meanest person is one who won't forgive and for that reason the church is deprived of many blessings. We should possess enough grace to live as true Christians."

During Mr. Moody's talk he related several interesting incidents to substantiate the above points mentioned. At the close of the first service a short prayer meeting was held and most all of the congregation remained.

Convention Notes.

Miss Alice B. Spangenberg, State Superintendent of the Missionary Department of the Christian Endeavor Society, wishes to announce that she has established her headquarters on the top floor of the Y. M. C. A. building, and has provided a place where she and her committee can meet all Endeavorers interested in missions. She has also arranged to distribute good literature along her line of work. The rooms will be open positively from 8 a. m. to 8 p. m. During the following hours Miss Spangenberg will be present: From 8 to 9 in the morning; 12:30 to 1:30 in the afternoon, and from 5:30 to 7:30 in the evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all interested to attend.

Arrangements have now been made so that the delegates can ride their wheels to the Convention Hall and there have them looked after. A wheel room has been established, the entrance to which is on East Fourth street, adjoining the W. C. T. U rooms.

Delegates to the Convention should not forget that they must register the first thing on their arrival. The registration place is at the First Baptist church.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIX. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1896. NO. 39

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

RAIN DROPS AND REPUBLICANISM.

Stormy Weather Interferes With the G. O. P. Meetings.

COL. POPE ELOQUENT AND FORCIBLE.

The Power of His Remarks Were Such as to Incite the Popular Fancy of His Audience, and He Was Frequently Greeted With Enthusiastic Applause.

"This campaign will be a stormy one," predicted a well known politician, but he didn't mean it in the same sense as the Republicans of this city have experienced. Rain has been the steady accompaniment for every move they have made. The mass meeting, which was held at Music Hall, Tuesday, was no exception, and rain fell almost all the evening.

No one can expect to get a big crowd out in a storm, but the Republicans took extra pains to inform the people that there was to be a meeting. The Independent Fife and Drum Corps was placed in a special car and a circuit made of the city, while colored fire and fireworks aided in stirring up the general excitement. The trolley parade finally ended in front of Music Hall, the band marched in and the crowd gathered. The hall was fairly well filled, not only with the recognized McKinley faces, but some of the Bryan supporters were visible here and there, coming to hear what the Republicans had to say for themselves.

The campaign glee club made its first appearance under the direction of William N. Runyon before the meeting opened and gave several selections that were loudly applauded. Assemblyman W. R. Codington called the meeting to order and introduced the chairman, Col. Mason W. Tyler.

The usual chairman's remarks followed. Col. Tyler spoke of the importance of the standard, something which, he said, was fundamental and could be relied upon. The list of the other officers of the meeting was read. They were as follows:

Vice-Presidents, William Rockwell, C. H. Rugg, Isaiah L. McVoy, D. S. Roberts, Israel C. Pierson, H. E. Bowen, H. S. Thatcher, J. Frank Hubbard, Jacob Kirkner, Spencer Conway, William Mayhew, S. C. Peck, E. E. Anthony, James Clawson, Hon. Charles A. Reed, Charles Matthews and Charles Place; secretaries, Walter F. Murray, Eugene Moore, H. E. Clark and Robert Guttridge.

Then Col. Charles H. Pope, of Missouri, was introduced as the speaker of the evening. His speech was one of oratory and argument, and he seemed to catch the popular fancy so that his remarks were frequently interrupted by loud and continued applause. After the glee club was heard again the platform was resigned to Col. Pope.

He told of a recent visit to Philadelphia and of there going to Independence Hall and seeing the original of the Constitution, which is on exhibition. The platform which was made at Chicago assailed this Constitution, so he declared, and he was glad to be with a party that stood by it.

This country is at a crisis, he said, where only careful thought can preserve the honor and integrity of the nation. They would be dragged in the dust if the infamous Chicago platform is carried out. He referred to the great conspiracy at the time of the Civil War, which was foiled by Lincoln and the other patriotic men of the country, and then declared that a new conspiracy for power and plunder was being started to build up a new Confederacy. The true heart of all patriots are standing together, he said, to preserve the honor and integrity of the Nation. It is cheering to find, he went on, that the brains and intelligence of the old Democracy are lined up against this revolution. "All honor to the old Democracy," he exclaimed. "All honor to the fearless old Democratic journalists and the Democratic journals, for they are nearly all with us. On their shields shall be engraved in golden letters, 'Principle above party.'"

He then discussed the character of the two men who have been nominated for the Presidency. William McKinley, he declared, was mentally, morally and politically great enough for the American people. McKinley, he said, shouldered a musket and went to the defence of his country at seventeen years while the Democratic candidate was in his swaddling clothes, cutting his teeth on a 16 to 1 silver rattle.

Of Bryan, he admitted that he is clean in mind and morals, but he criticised him politically. Bryan was, he stated, everything by turns and nothing long. He was inconsistent.

He next spoke of the issues. He

COUNTY SOLONS AT ODDS

MIDDLESEX AND SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS DISPUTE OVER A BRIDGE.

Each County Claims that the Other Should Pay for the Construction—Litigation Likely to Grow Out of It.

There is likely to be litigation between Middlesex and Somerset counties, growing out of the construction of a bridge over Green Brook, at Bound Brook. The Freeholders of Middlesex County have already considered the matter, but as yet have taken no decisive action. The bridge to be rebuilt has long been out of repair, and to reconstruct it the county will be put to an expense of about $1,000. The question was raised as to whether the bridge was a line one between Somerset and Middlesex counties. The bridge is over an artificial waterway that enters the Raritan river below Bound Brook at right angles to the course of that stream. This artificial water way was constructed by the Central Railroad of New Jersey several years ago, and took the place of the old Green Brook, which extended in a diagonal course from the the river. The old Green Brook marked the boundary between the two counties, but the latest surveying and investigation shows that the waterway does not mark the line, and the new bridge to be constructed will be wholly within Middlesex county, thus throwing the entire expense upon Middlesex.

Two years ago the two counties joined in the construction of another bridge over another portion of the artificial waterway. At that time Somerset county claimed this artificial waterway as the boundary line between the two counties, and the bridge erected was accordingly regarded as a line bridge, and Middlesex county, without hesitation, paid one half of the cost of the construction.

This former claim of Somerset county has now been proven incorrect. The bridge was not a line bridge, but was wholly within Somerset county. Middlesex county should not have paid one cent of the cost of construction. Middlesex will, therefore, demand of Somerset county that the latter repay one half of the cost of the former bridge. If the demand is not acceded to a suit will be instituted in the courts to compel Somerset county to return the money.

A Misstatement of Facts.

The item published in The News Tuesday stating that the condition of Harrison street to be in a bad way and fast going to rack and ruin, is entirely contradictory to the facts, and an unjust reflection on the borough administration. Last year, Harrison street was partially macadamized, but the funds for this purpose were exhausted before the last two hundred feet of the street, between Greenbrook road and the bridge over Stony brook, was completed, and it was necessary to stop work. Now, however, the street commissioner has a gang of men at work finishing up the work on the street, and in a few days it will be in fine shape. A large culvert is also being built to drain off the surplus water which has always gathered at the corner of Greenbrook road and Harrison street, and when all the work is finished the thoroughfare will need no further repairs for a long time.

Borough Republican Delegates.

The Republicans of North Plainfield held their primary in the public school building Tuesday night for the purpose of selecting five delegates to go to Somerville to nominate candidates for Senate and Assembly. Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., called the meeting to order. Ex-Mayor Charles Place was chosen chairman and H. B. Reed, secretary. The delegates selected were W. W. Howland, B. A. Hegeman, Jr., N. B. Smalley, P. A. Emmons, from the borough, and J. Worth Coddington from the township. The delegates were empowered to fill vacancies.

Small Damage For a Life.

The jury in the $10,000 suit for damages brought by Daisy L. Bogart against the Pennsylvania Railroad for the killing of her brother, Harry, by a train at Wood avenue crossing, Linden, October 21, 1895, came into court yesterday morning after being out all night with a verdict of $1,868.25 for the plaintiff. The family of Gustave Haefner, who was also killed, settled with the railroad company for $5,000, while the coachman, who was severely hurt, received $1,500.

Death of an Estimable Woman.

All that was mortal of Mrs. Phœbe E. King, a resident for many years at 57 Clark street, Jersey City, was committed to mother earth yesterday afternoon. The late Mrs. King was the mother of Frank King, well-known in this city, and leaves besides him, a husband, and a daughter, to mourn the loss of a christian wife and mother. Her death occurred on Sunday, and was the result of paralysis.

WISDOM IS THE GOAL SOUGHT FOR

Organization of Educational Department of the Y. M. C. A.

DR. RICHARDS HOLDS UP EXAMPLES.

All Men of Lasting Greatness are Those Who Were Filled With Intelligence—The Y. M. C. A. Doing Their Part for Obtaining Education.

Politics and rain combined to keep many away from the opening of the educational department of the Y. M. C. A. Tuesday, but there was a good attendance, nevertheless. Stephen Cahoone, chairman of the educational committee, presided. Opening prayer was offered by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell. An interesting address was delivered by Rev. W. R. Richards, D. D., who spoke in part as follows:

"One of the first questions that one of us would have been able to answer if we were asked was who was the wisest man? We would have answered, Solomon. It is interesting to take the books of the Bible which come to us with the name of that man, either written by him or under the inspiration of his example and influence in Israel and see what they have to say about wisdom—the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and Job. The one thing to be had more precious than rubies is a good education.

"The forefathers in our own land made it their principle in every little hamlet, before they had comfortable homes for themselves, almost as soon as they laid foundations for the church of God, to select a place for a school. That great ruler, Alfred the Great, was not only a learned man himself, but he also appreciated intelligence in his people, and he took great pains to afford facilities for learning to his people.

"Wisdom should be sought for itself. It is true that Solomon said that riches and honors were in his hands, but that was not all that we should seek her for. Man glories in exercising the strength of his body, and in the same way one rejoices in exercising his mind. Every artist and artisan should rejoice in his work. Stradivarius delighted in making violins, which have been unrivalled for years. Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' though not rewarded in money, was a delight to its author. Everyone should make his life work not a mere drudge for the pay that is given for it, but rather a constant source of delight to himself and others."

The first sessions of the classes will be held as follows: Mechanical course, Monday, October 19th; bookkeeping, Wednesday, October 21st; stenography, Monday, October 19th; Spanish, Tuesday, October 20th; German, Friday, October 23d.

Time-Saving Invention.

Labor-saving machines are constantly being invented, but many of them do not accomplish their purpose. Manning & Son, the enterprising West Front street monument dealers, have just introduced something new in their workshop that does the work much more rapidly and with greater skill than by the old hand method of hammer and chisel. It is a rapid vibrating hammer, the power for which is furnished by air an compressor. Any chisel may be used. With this machine, the operator is able to do the work of three men and with more precision. Messrs. Manning have a large selection of granite and marble monuments, which they are selling at low figures. This new machine will enable them to do more and better work at a less charge. They have not only a large local trade, but control much of that in the outlying districts.

Yale Club Officers.

The annual meeting of the Plainfield Yale Club was held Tuesday night at the Y. M. C. A. building. It was decided to hold the regular alumni dinner this year and the president was instructed to take charge of it. It will probably be held in December. Roger L. McGee and Henry B. Lovell were elected to membership, making forty-three members in all. Officers were then elected as follows: President, A. H. Atterbury; vice-president, Herbert L. Moody; secretary and treasurer, Arthur Lovell; executive committee, John Leal, Rev. W. R. Richards and S. St. John McCutchen.

Struck Quicksand.

The Board of Freeholders of Union county are having trouble in building a culvert on South avenue near Clinton avenue. The culvert is over 80 feet long, and the presence of quicksand in large quantities makes it difficult to get a foundation to work on. The culvert on Clinton avenue has been completed.

NO SILVER LINING IN THEIR CLOUD.

Palmer and Buckner Democrats Argue For Gold.

A. H. ATTERBURY PRINCIPAL SPEAKER

He Says the Free Silver Advocates Fail to Tell How the Price of Silver Will be Increased or How Workingmen Will Get Better Wages.

The National Democratic Club resumed their meetings Tuesday night, and a fairly good-sized audience was in attendance in the rooms on Muhlenberg place. The meeting was addressed by the club's president, A. H. Atterbury. Many arguments, he said, had been advanced recently showing the fallacy of the free silver policy which would cause a depression generally in business and would affect wages. Continuing, Mr. Atterbury spoke in part as follows:

"Facts prove to us that tampering with the currency makes business poor and creates an uncertainty. Bryan and his followers tell us that the greater number of silver dollars we have the better it is. But you cannot clothe yourself with dollars, neither can you eat dollars. It is when you can exchange them that you get the advantage of the money. Allowing that wages were increased in Plainfield, you would not be able to buy any more flour than there is in this city. Silver is now worth one-half what it was twenty years ago. Bryan tells you that under his plan the price of silver will go up, but he doesn't tell you how it will go up. He also tells you it will make higher prices, and in that respect he tells the truth. However, he doesn't tell you that wages will be higher. I read carefully the account given in The Daily Press of the silver meeting held Saturday evening, and I failed to see one argument in favor of free silver. The speakers declared against monopolies, but do you know that the silver trust is the worst of all. It is controlled absolutely by a dozen or fifteen men, who secured the passage of the Bland act, which saddled on the country an immense amount of silver."

Mr. Atterbury then read extracts from Macauley's works, showing the condition of affairs many years ago under the rule of the free coinage of silver, showing how business was depressed and people were driven to desperation. The speaker cited England, Austria and several other gold standard countries as being among the strongest nations of the world.

The last part of the hour was devoted to a discussion of various questions asked by those present. Dexter O. Tiffany and C. P. Bull were among the sound money men present who spoke regarding the present great issues, and they as well as Mr. Atterbury answered several questions on the money question. It was announced that Dexter O. Tiffany would be the speaker on Thursday evening. The meeting then adjourned.

Serious Charges Being Investigated.

The Grand Jury at the Union County Court, Elizabeth, will have two Plainfield cases to consider. One is that against Ernest Luccio for the abduction of Louise Giles, which comes up today. The other is against Lawrence Wallace, better known as "Larry" Wallace for attempting to wreck a train on the Jersey Central. As will be remembered, a pile of ties was discovered on the tracks near Terrill road, and the evidence pointed toward Wallace as the would be train wrecker. The crime is a serious one and should he be convicted he may have to serve a long term. The extreme penalty is forty years. This case will be considered by the grand jury in a few days.

Praise and Song.

A praise service will be held at the Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel, Washingtonville, Sunday evening. A chorus of sixteen voices, under the leadership of H. O. Newman, will assist in the musical portion of the exercises. Rev. Dr. Gibbs, of Millington, is expected to preach.

Plainfield Man Got the Contract.

On Monday evening last a contract for grading, macadamizing, curbing and guttering on one of the public streets of the borough of Hasbrouck Heights, Bergen county, was awarded to David Bowden, of this city, the work to be under the supervision of F. A. Dunham, C. E.

If your children are subject to croup watch for the first symptom of the disease—hoarseness. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse it will prevent the attack. Even after the croupy cough has appeared the attack can always be prevented by giving this remedy. It is also invaluable for colds and whooping cough. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, druggist.

UNABLE TO CONVERSE

A. M. RUNYON SUFFERS A PARALYTIC STROKE OF HIS VOCAL ORGANS.

It Will be Several Days Before the Attending Physician Can Tell Whether or Not He Will Recover His Health.

A. M. Runyon, the undertaker, was taken with a light stroke of paralysis while in his office Tuesday afternoon. He was taken to his home on Madison avenue and Dr. T. H. Tomlinson was summoned. Upon examination it was discovered that only the nerves governing the vocal organs were effected. Prompt remedies were applied and by nightfall Mr. Runyon was somewhat more comfortable.

Today, Dr. Tomlinson says the only noticeable change is a very slight one for the better and that it will be several days before it can be determined whether he will recover or whether the paralysis will extend. Last July, while at Poland Springs, Mr. Runyon noticed the first premonitions of the trouble which came upon him so suddenly yesterday. On Monday, August 31, the symptoms again appeared and Dr. Tomlinson was consulted. He prescribed and the paralytic symptoms disappeared, only to manifest themselves decidedly and threateningly yesterday. It is the physician's belief that the trouble is the result of the severe nervous shock which Mr. Runyon suffered in the railroad collision three years ago near Greenville, when a Long Branch express ran into the 11:30 Somerville train in which he and his son, E. E. Runyon, were passengers.

REGISTRATION FIGURES.

Indications Are That There Will be a Heavy Vote This Year.

Tuesday was the first day of registration and a few names were added to the lists which the Boards of Election had not already secured in their house-to-house canvass. There is still one day more for registering, Tuesday, Oct. 27, from 1 to 9 o'clock p. m. The 1895 registration, published in the table below, is the total number of names on the poll lists, and it is probable that the last day of registration this year will bring the total up to a number greater than that of a year ago. The registration by wards was as follows:

First ward, First district	1892	1895
First ward, Second district	197	194
Second ward, First district	691	636
Second ward, Second district	286	76

LINER HITS FERRYBOAT.

A Sharp Knock in the Fog on North River With No Great Damage.

The New Jersey Central ferryboat Central, which left Jersey City in the fog at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning, was hit in midstream by the Atlantic transport steamship Europe bound out for London. The Europe struck the Central on the port side. Engines had been reversed on both vessels, and the impact was not severe.

The heavy guard of the ferryboat and a part of her upper rail were broken. About 150 passengers were jarred a good deal and somewhat startled, but nobody was hurt. A number of Plainfield commuters were on the ferryboat.

Milkman on a Rampage.

A milkman came over the mountain Wednesday to serve his customers as usual. When he completed his duties he visited several saloons until finally he reached Park avenue in a sad state of inebriation. Patrolman McCue landed him in the lockup and this afternoon he was taken before City Judge DeMeza. He had not quite recovered from the effects of his overindulgence and was profuse in his promise to believe in the future. He appeared quite harmless and the Judge suspended sentence. As he departed he thanked everybody for their kindness and promised, should they ever come where he was, that he would make things square. He gave his name as Daniel Moore and said he was fifty-three years of age.

Dissension in the Republican Caucus.

The Republicans of Warren township met in the Mt. Bethel Hall Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock to elect delegates to the County convention which is to be held at Somerville on Saturday next. George Sage was the chairman and some 200 persons were present. From the start it was evident that there would be some dissensions from what is known as the old Republican regime. Two sets of tickets were placed in the field and the following were elected: John Wendell, Isiah Corbell, Reuben Coddington, Andrew Plummer and A. D. Martin.

Alex. Bass, of West Eighth street, who has been seriously ill for some time past, is no better and there is much anxiety felt concerning his recovery.

SCENIC BEAUTIES OF DEVONSHIRE.

Miss Caroline Fitz Randolph Describes a Pleasure Trip.

SEEN FROM THE TOP OF A COACH.

A Bracing Air and a Clear Sky Made a Superb Impression of the Thanksgiving Season of This Country—First a View of the Tossing Sea and Then the Mountains.

The many friends of Miss Caroline Fitz Randolph will be interested to learn through this paper that she has returned to Berlin, for a second year of study. She went thither a year ago with a Wellesley chum and co-graduate, and with another young lady (whose home is also in this State) and worked on until July last on special courses of music and German language and literature. She spent the month of July in the Isle of Wight, and during August and September she sojourned at Oxford and visited in London, in Devonshire and in Nottinghamshire—the last named county having been, three centuries ago and more, the home of the Fitz-Randolph family. From a letter descriptive of her trip to Devon we are permitted to copy the following passages:

Collingwood Villa,
Ilfracombe, Devonshire.

The which same high-sounding name of a place stands for a lodging house, which has, however, the great advantage of being perched on a hillside opposite a beautiful bay and commanding a wide view of the Bristol channel. The channel is a good broad arm of the sea, salt and strong, and full of great waves and white-caps. Across it on a clear day, one sees dimly the Welsh hills—a faint line on the horizon.

We came down here from Oxford, and find clean rooms, plenty of good will and romantic surroundings. The Devonshire Coast is many times as beautiful as its reputation has led us to believe it; and very heartily glad I am that we came, and that I have seen this most charming part of England.

Besides its beauty, Devonshire is famous for its fine cattle, its delicious cream and its equally delicious cider. The weather has been rainy, as it was of late in Oxford, except for two grand days of which I am about to tell you; but all the time you'd most imagine an air like our late October, with very bracing, strong winds. Indeed, the cider and some roast goose we had at Lynton, and the "zeel of the air" made a strong impression of Thanksgiving season on our American senses.

To give you an account of our expedition and of the finest two days I have had in England, I may premise that on Saturday afternoon, after I had "closed" my two hours of music, we sallied forth and boarded the coach for Lynton—twenty miles distant to the east, along the coast. No railroad is within a score of miles of that charming village, and so the coaches are not gilded and ornamental but plain, mail-carrying, freight laiden affairs, with four strapping horses and one "relay" on the road. Therefore, being sensible turnouts, they are reasonably cheap; and we paid nine shillings for our return tickets, good for forty miles of riding up and down these beautiful Devonshire hills, and along the ruggedest coast. The weather was perfect, with a bright sun shining, and plenty of fleecy clouds hurrying across the blue. The hills are higher than our Plainfield mountains, in the main running from five hundred to a thousand feet above the sea; and they rise steeply from the narrow valleys, being cut into single peaks, and have many rapid streams which hurry down rocky glens and gorges to the channels. The roads—which are centuries old, and perfectly kept—lead straight up the sides and over the tops of the hills, and then drop down to the valleys again. They seem often to be inclined across the forty-five degrees-angle; and the grades are so long and so steep that they seemed to us inexperienced people quite impossible for any horses. And there is never a "thank-you-ma'am" obstruction in all England, so far as I can make out. But the horses are used to it, and plucky, and strong of lung, and they go at the hills with a will, galloping up the first twenty or thirty yards of the steepest, and then settling down to work, with heads well bent and great muscles standing out. Going down the hills was rather scary at first; but they have all manner of break and-boot contrivances, and the horses are sure footed. That was a grand ride! The country changes with every hill you cross and with every curve in the road. There are thickly-wooded

THE JUNIOR ENDEAVORERS PARADE 983 STRONG

A NOVEL AND IMPOSING DEMONSTRATION OF HOW THE LITTLE PEOPLE ARE INTERESTED.

Boys and Girls Hardly Out of Their Babyhood or Just in Their Teens Trudged About to Show Their Forces—Afterward They Had a Meeting All to Themselves at Convention Hall—What Was Said and Done.

Never did Plainfield see such an army of invaders as marched through her streets last Friday afternoon and finally took possession of Convention Hall. It was a wonderful army and what was most noticeable of all was the size of its soldiers. They were children, bright happy-faced children, and they all wore the orange and black convention badge, and every child carried a little American flag. 'Twas the Junior Endeavorers. There were hundreds of them; some little tots of barely four years whose baby eyes looked innocently about, and others who had just entered their teens, sturdy little lads and pretty little lassies. It was a sight well worth seeing, this great army of children, and then to realize that here were the future rulers of our country, the Christian Endeavor Society of the next century, all thus testifying their allegiance to the King of Kings. Early hatred little misses of wealthy families marched contentedly by the side of their bright-eyed companion of less fortunate circumstances. Here was equality for all. How proud they all were, too, of being Juniors.

The senior societies have been in the majority at the other sessions of the Christian Endeavor convention but the juniors were not forgotten and last Friday afternoon they held their service at Convention Hall.

The service was preceded by a grand parade of juniors and truly it was a great sight. The Juniors began to assemble soon after two o'clock and from that time until the parade started soon after three o'clock, the streets in the vicinity of the Crescent Avenue church were crowded with the bands of expected Juniors and the many spectators who came to see this wonderful juvenile army.

The chief marshal of the parade was Bert, Charles L. Goodrich and the three divisions were under the charge of David E. Titsworth, Walter Harris and Rev. W. C. Donnell. After the excitement attendant on the distribution of the flags and badges, the little Endeavors were, at last, arranged in line and headed by Sergeant Kiely in command of a squad of police, and the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, the long procession started. The tiny feet could not tramp in the dust and mud of the streets and so along the sidewalk they marched out Crescent avenue, to Park avenue, to West Seventh street, to Madison avenue, to West Fifth street, to East Fifth street, to Watchung avenue, to the Convention Hall, into which they marched.

The Junior societies in line were the following churches and under the charge of the following: Trinity Reformed of Plainfield, seventy children, Mrs. Cornelius Schenck; First Presbyterian of Plainfield, forty children, Miss Frudes; Warren Chapel of Plainfield, fifty-five children, Mrs. J. O. McKelvey; Seventh-Day Baptist of Plainfield, thirty-two children, Mrs. H. M. Maxson; Congregational of Plainfield, twenty children, Rev. C. L. Goodrich; Crescent Avenue of Plainfield, eleven children, Miss Carrie Dewey; East Third Street Mission of Plainfield, six children; Washingtonville Chapel, twenty-one children, Miss Nettie Cooper; Park Avenue Baptist of Plainfield, twenty six children, Mrs. W. S. Lowry; First Presbyterian of Westfield, thirty children, Miss Clark; First Baptist of Westfield, thirty-two children, Mrs. C. F. Conant; First Presbyterian of Cranford, fifty children, James Watson; First Presbyterian of Roselle, twenty children, Miss Tenney; First Baptist of Roselle, eleven children, Miss Bogert; Third Reformed of Raritan four children, Miss Coleman; Baptist of South Plainfield, thirty two children, Walter L. Harris; Monroe Avenue chapel, of Plainfield, seventy-six children, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell; First M. E. of Plainfield, fifty-two children, Rev. C. B. Barnes, D. D.; First Presbyterian of Dunellen, forty-seven children, Miss Lowe; Bound Brook Juniors, thirty-six children, Rev. T. A. Davis; Willow Grove Junior Union, thirteen children, Miss Lee; Elizabeth Junior Union, twenty-eight children, Mrs. Louis Williams; First Baptist of Scotch Plains, thirty-two children, Rev. J. S. Braker; Grace M. E., of Plainfield, seventy-six children, Rev. H. J. Johnston; Reformed of Lebanon, four children.

In they marched, singing as they came, while the chorus choir on the platform, led by D. E. Titsworth, sent back the song, "Our Junior Band." Just 983 Juniors entered the hall and filled the center sections of seats. When they had settled themselves the tiny American flags began to flutter in welcome. Rev. A. W. Spooner, State superintendent of Junior work, who presided, waved a response with his handkerchief, in which the choir joined, while a perfect sea of moving flags re-echoed the welcome. A silent prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer, followed. Then all united in the hymn, "Sunshine in the Soul." The twenty-fourth Psalm was read responsively and then, while the Juniors offered up their mites, the instrumental trio gave several well-rendered selections.

When the last penny had been deposited in the collection baskets, Rev. Dr. Spooner introduced Miss Rita Pond, a Plainfield Junior, who made the address of welcome. And right well did she do it, for her clear voice rang through that entire hall and she spoke and acted so unaffectedly and sincerely that the hearts of her hearers went out to her on the spot. The remarks were short but well chosen and the welcome made as general and hearty as could be wished. Dr. Spooner was greatly surprised but highly pleased and as he replied to the welcome he said so.

"I didn't know," he exclaimed, "that we had a girl orator of the east that is a peer of the Boy Orator of the West. That's a compliment to the Boy Orator." And really his praise was well deserved.

He then told of his reception at the depot by Juniors and told of his delight in the city and its Endeavorers Another hymn followed his response.

Then Rev. C. H. Tyndall, Ph. D., of New York, preached an illustrated sermon to the Juniors on "God's Contract Between the Righteous and the Wicked." His text was from the first Psalm. His remarks were very simple, so that the youngest might easily understand. He showed his comparison with examples of goodly and stunted apples and the dead branch and the branch of an evergreen tree. It was like the latter, he said, that God wished his Juniors to be.

After another hymn the Consecration service was held, with Rev. W. B. Ackers, of Hoboken, leader. A few words of counsel and cheer and then he called the roll of the different societies, each responding with a verse of Scripture or a song.

The junior societies from the M. E. churches were not Junior Endeavor societies, but Junior Epworth Leagues. They fell in line with the rest, however, and took their share in the services at the hall.

Then all united in singing the hymn "Onward Christian Endeavorers" and the great assemblage of youthful Endeavorers was dismissed with the Mizpah benediction.

DENOMINATIONAL RALLIES.

They Were Held in the Different Churches Last Friday Afternoon.

The denominational rallies were held in the different churches last Friday afternoon beginning at 4:15 o'clock and all were well attended.

The Presbyterian rally in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church was well attended. Rev. Samuel M. Studdiford, D. D., presided. Miss Catherine Jones spoke in behalf of the Board of Home Missions. Rev. William Dulles, Jr., treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions spoke briefly in behalf of the work of that Board Rev. John Dixon, D. D., chairman of the committee on Synodical Home Missions briefly presented the work of the committee. President French spoke on the resolutions of the Presbyterian church and our young people, making special mention of the action taken at the last General Assembly. All in all the meeting was a most interesting and profitable one.

The congregational rally was held in the Congregational church. Dr. Amory H. Bradford, of Montclair New Jersey, presided. In his opening remarks he emphasized the fact that their must be intelligent faith and loyal service in the church. The meeting was then thrown open and a number of short and pointed speeches made. It was brought out that the Endeavor movement was founded in the Congregational denomination and they were proud of it.

Between 200 and 300 enthusiastic Baptists gathered in the First Baptist church for their rally. A spirited address was made by the leader Rev. J. A. Francis, and he was followed by Rev. Judson Conklin, M. T. S. Lumbor, T. J. Cross and Dr. Yerkes, who all spoke along the line of denominational fellowship. A delightful spirit of prayor also pervaded the meeting.

The other rallies were held as follows: Methodist, Rev. N. D. Aspinwall, of Plainfield (Vincent) Chapel. Methodist Protestant, Rev. W. D. Stultz, of Bridgeton, leader, at First Presbyterian Chapel. Seventh Day Baptist, Rev. L. E. Livermore, of Plainfield, leader, at Seventh Day Baptist Church. Church of Christ (Disciples,) Elder B. W. Hand, of Plainfield, leader, at Liberty Street Mission. Lutheran, Rev. J. P. Krechting, of New Germantown, leader, at Y. M. C. A. Building.

Bert Mundy, of Park avenue, is suffering from an attack of exsema in the eye.

INTENDED TWO MURDERS

DEPRAVED CONFFSSIONS OF YOUNG ELMER CLAWSON.

Admits That He Killed Harry Hodgetts and Says He Intended to Shoot Reuben Abel—Expert Testimony Offered.

The defence in the trial of Elmer Clawson, the youthful murderer of Harry Hodgett, completed their case in the Somerset court last Friday morning.

Clawson was placed on the stand and told a startling story. He admitted that he planned to shoot Hodgetts and accomplished his purpose. He then hurried to Bernardsville to "get the other man." The second man was Reuben Abel, ticket agent at Bernardsville. Clawson said the reason he wanted to shoot Abel was because he helped Hodgetts. The witness said he was whipped by Hodgetts when he lived with him, and did not like him much for it.

The witness was wary in answering questions. He said he gave himself up because he knew the men were after him. His mother had told him they would be after him if he shot Hodgetts, and that he would then be hung.

In reply to a question as to whether he thought he did wrong, he answered: "No, sir!" He said the reason he shot Hodgetts was because he had to.

The State began rebuttal evidence, showing that Clawson always acted like a boy with sound mind, and Dr. John Ward, of the Trenton Asylum, will be the expert witness for the State.

Thursday, Mrs. Phillips, of Bernardsville, testified that while Clawson was staying in her family last July she had occasion to reprimand him for staying out too late at night. The next night she saw Clawson mixing some green stuff with apple sauce. The following morning she saw him at the barn vomiting, and some of the green apple sauce was near him. He admitted that he had taken Paris green and said that he had to do it.

When Dr. Gray was on the stand the counsel for the defence put hypothetical questions to him. He was asked what would be his opinion of a boy who had not walked until two years old, nor talked until three years old, had scarlet fever and diphtheria at six, injured on the head between nine and ten, had another blow between ten and twelve years, attempted suicide, and had occasional hallucinations until seventeen years old. The doctor replied that such a boy must have been born an imbecile.

GOLD MEN NOMINATE IN SOMERSET.

Sound Money Democrats Form a Permanent Organization.

The Sound Money Democrats of Somerset county met at Somerville, last Friday for organization. E. M. Wright, Esq., was elected as Chairman and George M. LaMonte as secretary.

A central committee was appointed, who will appoint a committee from every polling place in the county to look after the sound money Democratic vote. The following gentlemen compose the central committee: Wm. V. Steele, chairman, Hon. George W. Pace, Joseph W. Ballantine, of Somerville, Calvin Corle, of Bedminster, Geo. M. LaMonte, of Bound Brook.

Geo. V. Vanderveer was nominated for State Senator and Charles A. Moran for the Assembly. The meeting was a very enthusiastic one.

Geo. V. Vanderveer, the nominee for Senator, is a very popular man. He is vice-president of the Second National Bank, in Somerville, Treasurer of the People's Building Loan, of the Somerville Publishing Company, and of the Central Hook and Ladder Co.

He is a brother in law of Judge J. D. Bartine.

AT A RIPE OLD AGE.

Miss Margaret Ewing Dies at the Age of 99 Years Conscious to the Last.

In connection with the death of Miss Margaret Ewing who died at her home in Fanwood Township last Thursday night, at the age of ninety nine years, there is quite a little history. Her death was quiet and peaceful. Last Thursday night she went to bed as usual, suffering from a two days illness but the next morning she was dead. She was the daughter of John Ewing, and she was one of eleven children, and the last of the family in the country. She had been a resident in the neighborhood for the past fifty years, living alternately with her nephews, Charles and William Thomas. She came here from Johnstone, Scotland, about fifty years ago.

In Scotland she was a member of the Presbyterian church, and to the faith she strictly adhered during her long residence here. She was one of God's chosen people, inasmuch as she had led a pure Christian life.

Prominent Elizabethan Dies Suddenly.

Moses W. Mulford, a prominent lumber dealer of Elizabeth, dropped dead in his office this morning. His death was caused by heart failure. He was a prominent Democrat and was well known in this city and, during its existence, was one of the directors of the Middlesex Gun Club. He was about forty years of age.

SEVEN YEARS' GROWTH

MIANTONOMAH TRIBE OF RED MEN CELEBRATE THEIR ANNIVERSARY.

All the Great Chiefs and Several Visiting Tribes Were There—Speech by Many of Them—Names of Some of the Visitors.

Anniversaries are always pleasant events, and when the Miantonomah Tribe, No. 118, I. O. R. M., celebrated its 7th year of existence Friday evening, the celebration was in no wise an exception to the rule. All the great chiefs were present, and a number of visiting tribes who entered into the festivities with a will. It was seven years ago than Miantonomah Tribe was instituted, with eighty-five charter members, by Norman C. Magee. Since then the tribe has grown steadily. At the present time there are 120 members. The lodge is in a healthy, prosperous condition and bids fair to be one of the best in the State.

William Newcorn was master of ceremonies last evening, and his peculiar, happy style, mingled with the speeches by the great chiefs and visiting Indians, made the event one of pleasure to all. After the speeches a bountiful collation was served, followed by a smoker. The State officers present were:

Great Prophet, W. J. Forsyth, of Jersey City; Great Sachem, John Russell, of Washington; Great Senior Sagamore, D. B. Peterson, of Camden; Great Junior Sagamore, W. J. Smyth, of Asbury Park; Great Chief of Records, D. M. Stevens, of Camden; Great Sanap, G. C. Magee, of Plainfield.

Tribe delegations were present from Perth Amboy, Cartaret, Somerville, Raritan and Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sin-gue Tribe, of Plainfield. The committee in charge of the anniversary consisted of D. C. Allen, William Newcorn, William Westphal, C. L. Holstein and George Houseman.

SALVATIONISTS AWHEEL.

The Cycle Brigade and Band Parade Saturday Night.

The cycle brigade and band from the New York headquarters of the Salvation Army visited the local corps Saturday afternoon and remained until this morning. Ensign Gooding, the captain of the brigade, was in command. Brigadier George French, chief divisional officer, Adjutant Rhinhardson, national cashier, and Ensign Gereopazzi, private secretary to Mrs. Booth-Tucker, were also present and assisted at the meetings here.

The bicycle band rode out on their wheels and expected to arrive in time for a parade at 4:30 o'clock. Several punctures had to be repaired and so they did not arrive until an hour after that time. A parade was held in the evening and a large number attended the meeting that followed. Good meetings were held yesterday and largely attended, despite the heavy rain in the evening.

Can Be Used by Both.

Mayor Gilbert recently announced his decision in reference to the dispute between the American Volunteers and the Salvation Army as to whether or not the former should have exclusive use of the vacant lot near the Babcock building for open air meetings. The Mayor decided that the same plan which has been in vogue since the Volunteers were formed should be continued, which is the use of the round on alternate nights by the two organizations.

Anniversary of the Turn Verein.

The tenth anniversary of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein will be celebrated on October 19th with appropriate exercises. The committee have been tireless in their efforts to arrange an entertainment that promises to make this event one of the greatest in the history of the society. Societies from different parts of the State, including the Arion Singing Society and National Turn Verein, of Newark, will attend.

A Pleasant Surprise.

A birthday surprise party was tendered to Louis Bimble, at his home on Harrison street, North Plainfield last Friday. About twenty couples were present and danced to music furnished by Messrs Blake and Keller. The guests met at J. Keller's home nearby, and went over in a body, where they surprised Mr. Bimble completely. The festivites continued until two o'clock next morning.

Looking After the Game Laws.

It has been said, and truthfully, too, that there's no use in making laws unless they are enforced. Thursday Game Wardens Sisty and Sebring detected two Italians shooting highholders on the mountain back of Dunellen, and they were forthwith arrested, arraigned and fined $20 and costs.

Plenty of Political Talk.

Leo Fairchild, of California, will address a Republican mass meeting in Music Hall, Tuesday evening, October 27th, and it is possible that ex-Congressman Roswell G. Horr will speak at a meeting to be held in the same hall October 31st. The meeting to be held in Music Hall next Tuesday evening will be in charge of the Young Men's Republican Club and there will be music by a glee club.

END OF THE ENDEAVORERS GREAT CONVENTION

IMPRESSIVE SERVICES MARKED THE FINAL GATHERINGS IN HALL AND CHURCHES LAST NIGHT.

An Elevating and Helpful Spirit Dominated the Consecration Service—Moody Made a Passionate Appeal for the Saving of Souls—Nearly All Old Officers Were Re-elected to Serve for the Ensuing Year.

Who that was present will ever forget the last service of the '96 convention, the consecration meeting? The other meetings were impressive, they were crowded, but in none was the spirit of intense earnestness so great. The delegates seemed to realize that they met for the last time and they came determined to obtain as much spiritual strength as they could to keep them during the days of trial in the future. It was, indeed, a fitting close for one of the grandest Christian Endeavor conventions ever held in the State, yes, even in the United States. Long before the doors were unlocked the crowd began to gather outside of Convention Hall. Fifteen minutes before the meeting was to open, the hall was filled while the crowd outside extended far out into the street. Even the fact that there were two other meetings to be held during the evening did not seem to lessen the number, although both overflow meetings were crowded. Three sturdy policemen were hardly able to prevent a general rush into the hall. Every seat was filled while many delegates had to stand. Then the doors were closed, while several hundred delegates had to go away disappointed.

Those who were fortunate to be admitted found the hall divided by counties, the delegates gathering around a banner carrying the name of their county. That grand white-capped choir crowded the platform and sang as it never sang before, for the Endeavorers there had caught the consecration spirit, and they too were anxious for spiritual benefit. It was the culmination of the events of the three days.

While waiting for the service to open, the Endeavorers started some of their rousing songs and soon the vast hall was filled with a volume of song. At last, F. H. Burke started the song service, and what a song service it was! Everybody sang with their whole soul, and the leader seemed to possess more than his usual power. Wm. E. MacClymont is an inspiring accompanist at any time, but his fingers seemed to fly with greater skill than ever. Whitney Frazee assisted with his cornet, while the instrumental trio did their part.

The Scriptural selection was read by Rev. J. W. Richardson with great feeling, and then he prayed very earnestly.

State President French then announced that the Union County Junior Union had been awarded a banner for their efficient work of the past year. Mrs. Wheaton S. Lowry, he superintendent of the union, received it amid loud applause.

Dr. French then called for the reports of committees.

The report of the nominating committee was first made by its chairman, Rev. C. Rudolph Kuebler. The report report was as follows:

President—Rev. J. Clement French, D. D., Newark.

First Vice-President—Rev. Cornelius Brett, D. D., Jersey City.

Third Vice-President—Rev. Titus E. Davis, Bound Brook.

Secretary—Miss Ida B. Stephens, Hackettstown.

Treasurer—E. E. Anthony, Plainfield.

Executive Committee—Rev. Lewis W. Mudge, D. D., Princeton; A. S. Johnson, Orange Valley; Rev. E. W. Thompson, Paterson; J. L. Conner, Flemington; Rev. C. C. Tilly, Bridgeton; Hamilton Turner, Wenonah; Rev. Edward Mason, Basking Ridge.

Dr. French was also nominated as a vice-president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union.

Rev. Mr. Kuebler then moved that the report be approved, and it was unanimously carried. The officers were then announced elected.

The report of the committee on resolutions was made by its chairman, Rev. E. W. Thompson, of Paterson.

The committee on resolutions presented the following report:

First, That the hearty thanks of the Endeavorers of New Jersey are due to the city of Plainfield for entertaining this convention, to the faithful committee who have made arrangements, to E. E. Anthony and his corps of assistants, to the reception committee who met us at the railway station, to the pages who guided us to our destinations, to the firemen for the services they voluntarily offered to the ushers, to the press for the complete and accurate accounts of the addresses and doings of the convention, and to the choir for leading in the singing.

Second, That we heartily recommend to the society and the local union conventions the deputation work in behalf of missions by the students of the Theological Seminaries and Colleges at Princeton and New Brunswick.

Third, That the suggestion of President Clark and Secretary Baer, to the effect that the Endeavorers of America join in universal prayer for Armenia, the second week of November and spend that week in special prayer and holding of special prayer-meetings that God will stay the hand of the great assassin in that afflicted region.

Fourth, That the formation of the World's Christian Endeavor union which was inaugurated at the convention in Boston and which held its first regular meeting in connection with the Washington convention, receive the consideration of the Endeavor societies of New Jersey, and that the constitutions and circulars furnished by the World's Endeavor union be secured by all, in order that the matter may be brought clearly before them.

Fifth, That the recommendation of the evangelistic department, advising the local unions and societies of the local churches to take up the work of evangelism in their several communities, be heartily endorsed by this committee.

Sixth, That suggestions made by all departments receive the attention of the delegates and be reported to the societies on the return from the convention.

This report was unanimously adopted. Mr. Dunham, chairman of the auditing committee, reported that the committee had examined and approved the accounts and found them correct in every detail. This report was accepted.

The last announcements of the convention were made by President E. E. Anthony of the local union. Dr. French now stated that the departments were appointed the same as last year as follows:

Missionary Department—Miss Alice R. Spangenberg, Plainfield, N. J., superintendent.

Junior Department—Rev. A. W. Spooner, D. D., Camden, N. J., superintendent.

Evangelistic Department—Rev. F. B. Everitt, Trenton, N. J., superintendent.

Press Department—Rev. George E. Ingram, Trenton, N. J., superintendent.

Correspondence Department—Dr. William R. Ward, Jr., Lyons Farms, N. J., superintendent.

Christian Citizenship Department—Rev. W. E. Davis, Lebanon, N. J., superintendent.

The report of the committee on greetings, of which Rev. D. J. Yerkes, D. D., is chairman, was as follows:

To the Pennsylvania State convention in session at Scranton, the following greeting was sent: "The New Jersey Christian Endeavorers now in session in Plainfield, greet our brothers and sisters of the Keystone State. II Corinthians 6: 1, 'We then as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain.'"

To the United Society the following was sent to John Willis Baer, at Boston, Mass.: "The New Jersey Christian Endeavor convention 3,000 strong, send cordial responsive greetings to you and President Clark. Psalms 134: 3, 'The Lord that made Heaven and earth bless thee out of Zion.'"

To Dr. Talmage's Society in Washington, D. C., where the New Jersey Endeavorers were entertained during the last National convention, the following was sent: "The Endeavorers of New Jersey assemble in convention at Plainfield, most heartily greet you with pleasant memories of Washington hospitality. III John 8, 'We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow helpers to the truth.'"

To the Christian Endeavor convention of California, the following was sent: "The Christian Endeavor convention of New Jersey respond to your welcome greeting. Brotherly love reaches from ocean to ocean. Phil. 4: 8, 'Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.'"

To Rebuild the Terrill Road Bridge.

Superintendent R. A. McCarthy and George Look, C. A. McCarthy, G. B. Stees, Geary Clemson, James Kelly, William Woodring, John Gorman, Wilson Ritter and Charles Waldo, are all new arrivals at "Billy" Lee's Wall Side Hotel, Scotch Plains. They are railroad employes, and came from Pennsylvania to erect the new wagon road bridge over the Jersey Central tracks at Terrill road, to replace the one destroyed by fire several months ago. The bridge is to be of steel frame and girder, 30 feet wide and 100 feet long. The material is to be furnished by the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and it is expected that the new bridge will be completed with a month.

ECHO OF THE CONVENTION

CHRISTIANS GATHER TO ENJOY THE AFTERMATH OF THE BIG EVENT.

The Immense Audience Rose Up Almost Solidly When Asked If They Had Been Helped Spiritually by the Meetings.

The lowering sky of yesterday afternoon, with its foreboding of storm, had no effect on the earnestness and enthusiasm of the large number of Endeavorers who gathered in the Convention Hall, at 4:15 o'clock, to hold a convention echo meeting. The chorus choir crowded the platform and front seats, while the congregation filled almost the entire building. President E. E. Anthony presided over the meeting. Horace J. Martin led the singing, while William E. MacClymont acted as pianist, assisted by Whitney Frasse with the cornet.

The meeting began with the usual song service, the stirring Endeavor hymns ringing out with the old convention fervor. Scripture reading and prayer followed, then came a few very earnest words from President Anthony. He said that if any city in New Jersey had cause for thankfulness and self-congratulation, it was Plainfield. It had just witnessed one of the grandest conventions ever held, and listened to the finest speakers that could be heard. And now what would be the result of all these grand opportunities for spiritual uplift and increased consecration? Would all these young people merely say to one another, "What a splendid time we have had! Wasn't Moody fine? Wasn't Cortland Myers inspiring?" and then go back into inactivity and uselessness in their churches.

He then asked all those who felt that as a result of the past week's experiences their lives this coming winter ought to be better and more fruitful than ever in the past, to rise. Almost every one present responded. Then he said that it was not enough to feel that one ought to do these things; how many would promise to actually go forth and do them? Once more the greater part of the audience rose, the leader thanking them for this proof that the great convention should have lasting results, in the increased usefulness and beauty of character of those who attended it.

The minutes were now given to short, earnest testimonies, many Endeavorers telling how they had been helped by the convention, and of their desire for a more consecrated and helpful Christian life. Then each of the pastors present, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., Rev. J. W. Richardson, Rev. C. E. Herring, Rev. W. R. Richards, D. D., and Rev. D. J. Yerkes, D. D., spoke briefly and earnestly to the young people, emphasizing the increased responsibilities which the great privileges of the past week had laid upon them, and urging that they press onward with new energy in their service for Christ and his church. Ten minutes of prayer followed, many prayers being offered from all parts of the house.

One final hymn and Dr. Yerkes' benediction closed the meeting with which ended such a week as Plainfield Christians Endeavorers have never known.

NOMINATED A MINISTER.

Rev. J. W. Wells the Free Silver Representative in the Third District.

Rev. J. W. Wells, the Presbyterian minister of Liberty Corner, captured the Congressional nomination at the convention of Democrats held at Somerville Saturday afternoon. Neither Monmouth nor Middlesex had a candidate for the honor, and in a caucus before the convention convened the Somerset county decided to abide by the unit rule. Rev. Mr. Wells had the support of the delegates from the agricultural districts and thus crowded Hiram O. Hance out of the race. The delegates from the farming communities said they had too many lawyers already in Congress and they were opposed to electing any more.

The convention passed resolutions endorsing the Chicago platform and candidates, and Rev. Mr. Wells addressed the delegates. He is well posted on the currency question and will doubtless make a strong canvass for election.

Recognized at Yale.

Plainfield is being well represented at Yale College this year by the party of young men who entered there from this city. Raymond A. McGee and Wm. M. McCutchen were both candidates for the freshmen team and the former secured a place on it which he kept until an accident, resulting in water on the knee, forced him to stop practice. McGee was one of two freshmen that were taken into the Yale Glee Club, where he sings second bass. The manager of the club was so pleased with McGee's voice that he suggested private lessons to him with a view that McGee should become a soloist of the club.

Another Bicycle Stolen.

Miss Eleanor Williams, of West Seventh street, is mourning the loss of her wheel. Last Thursday night the wheel was left outdoors all night and the next morning there was no wheel to be found. It was a ladies' Crescent Special. There is no trace of the thief

JUNIOR WORK.

What is Being Accomplished Among the Little Ones.

A Junior Worker's session was held Friday afternoon in Convention Hall begining at two o'clock. State President French presided. Rev. J. O. McKelvey read a selection of Scripture and then made an earnest prayer. Rev. A. W. Spooner, D. D., of Camden, made his report as superintendent of the Department of Junior Work. It was as follows:

Dear Endeavor Friends—There is much more to be said today about the Juniors of New Jersey than when you called me to the office of superintendent three years ago. Steadily their numbers have kept increasing, their service for Christ and the church becoming with each passing year more efficient, until, today, this "Junior band," a great army of little folks, with big banners and big, warm hearts, is recognized as one of the potential factors in the church, helping to hasten the conquest of the world for Christ, and the dawning of the blessed millennium for which we wait and hopefully pray. It is a record of history that one of the pagan emperors of Rome testified to the numbers and influence of the Christians of his time by exclaiming "If they were all removed what a silence would ensue." Surely the pastors of our churches and the more advanced Christian workers can but feel that the removal from the ranks of toilers of the earnest-hearted, devoted children, would entail a loss to the church which she could scarcely surmount. And yet it is but a few years since we awoke to the *importance of organized child la*borers in the Master's vineyard.

Somehow there seemed to be a deep-seated conviction that little hands could not sow and plow and prune and reap; that this was reserved for men and women of mature years and fully developed brawn and brain. How strangely have our old-fashioned notions been overturned by the triumphs of our little brothers and sisters. There are still many churches that fail to know a good thing when they see it, and stand yet in a doubtful attitude with reference to this new department of Christian Endeavor. We can only pray that ere long they may "awake from sleep" so that God shall be enabled to give them light on this *question of vast moment to them*selves and the lambs of the flock. The work among the Juniors of New Jersey during the past year has been marked by

INTENSE EARNESTNESS.

This is testified to by the character of the reports received, and corroborated by facts gleaned by your superintendent from his contact and personal acquaintance with many societies all over the State.

Among the older societies the novelty of the organization has worn off, and the members are held together simply by their love for the society, and their passion for actual service in the Dear Master's name.

The little people are themselves surprised at what they can accomplish under sympathetic and skillful leadership. The sweet ministration of "sunshine committees" in sick rooms, at hospitals, and among the aged and infirm, is one of the forms of Christian service upon which the Master must look with a smile of approval. This is "inasmuch endeavor" for which God's "well done" waits. Could we but hear the prayers, and listen to the songs, and mark the activities of these "busy little bees," we should discover in the society of the Junior Christian Endeavor a prophecy full of promise of a glorious triumph in the immediate for Christ and the church.

The reports which have come to us from the faithful superintendents, are so many polished mirrors, from whose surface we see the heart of the society reflected.

I wish you could look into them all as I have done, and see how beautiful is the image reflected therefrom.

Take for example a report which declares that the lookout, prayer meeting, missionary, music and sunshine committees, are organized and doing faithful work—that fifty, or a hundred, or as in one instance two hundred dollars had been contributed to missions—and best of all five, ten, or fifteen had been led to the Saviour and into the church during the year—and who can fail to perceive that beneath the surface, and back of the figures there has been constancy of prayer and effort upon which the seal of divine approval has been set by the Holy Ghost.

The entire church of Christiandom is experiencing a spiritual quickening in view of her enlarged conceptions of her mission, which finds expression in this rallying cry—

"THE WORLD FOR CHRIST!"

The Juniors have caught the Spirit of conquest which breathes from the battle hymn of the church:

The morning light is breaking
The darkness disappears;
The sons of earth are waking
To penitential tears.
Each breeze that sweeps the ocean
Brings tidings from afar,
Of nations in commotion
Prepared for Zion's war.

If one's confidence in an enterprise is shown by what he is willing to invest in it, then, judging from the amount of money contributed to that cause during the year, Jersey Juniors believe in missions.

LOOK AT THE FIGURES!

Undoubted these figures tell but a part of the truth. Had all our societies reported, the sum would have been increased by hundreds of dollars

Two years ago we reported $1,333 67 for missions. Last year the contributions were somewhat larger while this present year the contributions actually reported aggregate $2,006.91 an increase of over one hundred per cent. in two years.

The gifts from many of the junior societies are larger than were once expected from this entire church. One society in Essex county reports $200 contributed to missions alone.

HOW IT WAS GIVEN.

One year ago, as an incentive to strive for larger things for Christ, it was decided to prepare a "roll of honor, upon which should be written the name of all the societies contributing during the year, through the channel of their own church boards not less than five dollars for missions and to prepare a "badge banner" upon which should be placed the bad*ges of these societies contributing not* less than $10.00 this there own boards

We believe that the societies have felt the influence of this anticipated honor and that the large increase in gifts is due, in part, at least to this fact. The following figures will be of interest to all: Forty-five societies gave $5 00 or more through the church boards, 6 societies gave $5.00 or more not through the church boards; 6 societies gave $10.00 or more through the church boards; 10 societies gave $10.00 not through the church boards; 45 societies gave less than $5.00 to missions; 89 societies gave nothing.

One society reported having given seventy six cents, "and all through the' boards." The superintendent making that report is to be most highly commended for having given the little society credit for all that it did, though it seems to be small.

All honor to the society great or small that does its best!

What higher compliment, what names praise ever fell from the blessed lips of the Son of God, than that which was spoken with reference to a poor thinking woman eager to render some service of love.

"She hath done what she could"; In summarizing the work of the year, I have endeavored to group it by *counties so that all may in the con*ditions of the work in different parts of the state. Let it be home in mind that this is not strictly accurate, for in all the counties there are some societies whose superintendents failed to report the work of last year

Listen, Endeavorers, and you will hear
There our clans will gather another year:
To the city whose gates have stood open so long.
Will we go with our banners and jubilant song.
We pledge you our word, and trust there's none,
That next year we'll meet you in fair Paterson.

Rev. J. Clement French, re-elected President of State Y. P. S. C. E.

The committee is well organized and doing splendid work in each department.

The Best Yet Held.

E. E. Anthony, president of the Christian Endeavor Local Union and chairman of the '96 committee of arrangements for the State convention, is in receipt of a letter from Rev. J. Clement French, president of the State society, stating that the convention held here last week was the best yet held by the society.

E. E. Anthony, the new Treasurer of the State Y. P. S. C. E.

The Convention Song.

The following are the verses of the convention song written by Miss Minnie G. Morse, a valued member of The Press staff:

As we meet together,
Soldiers of the Lord,
With a single purpose,
Heart to heart accord
Let us lift the watchword,
One in Christ are we,
Thanking Him who brought us
To such unity.

Join them, hearts and voices,
Loud His praise to sing;
Jesus, our Redeemer,
Prophet, Priest and King.
Draw us, O our Savior,
Closer still to Thee;
May this great Convention
For Thy glory be.

From the whole State over
North and west and east,
Gather we together
To th' Endeavor feast;
Waiting for The blessing,
Father of us all;
May Thy Holy Spirit
On our gathering fall.

Join them, hearts and voices,
Loud His praise to sing;
Jesus, our Redeemer,
Prophet, Priest and King.
Draw us, O our Savior,
Closer still to Thee;
May this great Convention
For Thy glory be.

Father, give Thy children,
Through these festal days,
Free, receptive spirit s,
Hearts prayer and praise raise.
When our gathering's over,
Stronger may we be,
Homeward turn, to better
Serve Thy Church and Thee.

Join them, hearts and voices,
Loud His praise to sing;
Jesus, our Redeemer,
Prophet, Priest and King.
Draw us, O our Savior,
Closer still to Thee;
May this great Convention
For Thy glory be.

WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Dwight L. Moody Addresses Another Large Audience.

The seating capacity of the First Baptist church was taxed to its utmost last Thursday night, when D L. Moody conducted the service and F. H. Burke led the Christian Endeavor choir. After the devotional exercises and a twenty-minute song service, Mr. Moody spoke from the text, "Work of the Holy Spirit."

During his discourse Mr. Moody stated that he was in the church fully ten years before he actually knew the meaning of it, and now his work is to convince others in church work. It requires the Holy Spirit, said the speaker, to convince the man or wo*man of the fallacy of unbelief. My* work is to preach Christ and not to convict of sin; the power of God takes hold of hearts deep. Some people never go to church because the pastors don't preach politics, but what we want to do is to get the young idea and the unconverted into the fold; after we're convinced of our sins and acknowledge them, then the rays of light and true Christianity come into the heart. It has been said that ministers are overworked, but it's not so; they only need oiling like the wheels of machinery.

"A man may be a good lawyer, merchant and business man, yet have no love for his customers, but to be successful, one must have the love of God in his heart. If you want power, it requires the love of God in your heart; if it's dark where you are, there is light 'round the throne of God. French hope and see how things brighten up. People, Christians and others, talk politics by the hour and never tire, yet they haven't the time to talk of the church and its good deeds. Some people spend hours depicting a sermon and getting at the cold points, but they forget to mention the many good points. Some criticise and say Moody's doing much, but just try it yourself."

Continuing his discourse, Mr. Moody said, "It was highly essential to get out of the spirit of grumbling. Young ministers oftentimes become discouraged on account of unjust criticisms. Hold up Jesus, they say, but don't preach theory and theology: but the world can't get along without the true spirit of Jesus Christ. Teaching spiritual manifestations is the light of God, and having that, He will teach us all things and guide us into the truths. Newspapers tell of things that have been, but the Bible tells of the things which are to come. The man or woman who is filled with the spirit of the Holy Ghost is filled with the Scripture.

Resuming his discourse Mr. Moody said: "I believe Christ would have died as soon as he was born, had it not been for the Holy Spirit coming down and holding up His faith. Christ was a very believer on the face of the earth. We can't care for our souls, but we can for the body—the temple in which the soul dwells. Many of the church members haven't got the Holy Spirit to build them up. God grant that all these Christian Endeavor delegates be filled with the spirit and power of God.

Mr. Moody concluded with prayer and with the benediction the assemblage dispersed.

FOR THE MISSIONS.

Yesterday Afternoon's Session Devoted to This Department.

Again was Convention Hall crowded when the missionary session was held last Thursday afternoon, State President J. Clement French, D. D., presided, and Horace J. Martin and Prof. Wm. E. MacClymont acted as musical directors. Before the service, the waiting Endeavorers sang with their well-known vigor until Mr. Martin opened the regular song service. Rev. E. M. Rodman, D. D., read a portion of the nineteenth chapter of St. Luke, and then led in prayer.

President Anthony, of the local union, made his usual announcements. He requested the ladies to take off their hats, remarking that those over seventy years of age or without hair would be excused. After this little pleasantry there was a sudden movement in the audience and most of the hats disappeared.

Miss Alice B. Spangenberg, of Plainfield, next read her report as superintendent of the missionary department as follows:

At the close of this, the second year of the existence of the missionary department of our State Union, feeling better acquainted with our constituents than ever before and better able to judge the work accomplished, we can safely say that during the past year there has been a greater development of missionary intelligence and consecration to the cause than we have previously been able to report.

It is the purpose of the State missionary department to endeavor in various ways to interest the members of the local unions in the cause of missions and to encourage more systematic and prayerful study where the interest already exists. This work is undertaken and successfully carried on through the local missionary superintendents, who are appointed by the city and county unions.

The State superintendent has at the present time fifteen assistants, and unremitting effort has been made to increase the number so that every union in the State may be reached by the department. It is the earnest hope that the time is not far distant when the efforts will be crowned with success and each union will have its missionary superintendent, who shall act as a co-worker with the State officer. Hence the importance of your State superintendent to send out a monthly circular to her assistants and to the secretaries of the unions where there is no missionary superintendent. In this circular are questions expected to reply by sending a communication in the form of a report, containing useful hints and suggestions. In this way useful material is furnished by the circulars and their responses. Christian Endeavor is a change," containing practical methods of work, plans tried and found best.

The most nary superintendents are scattered as they are over the State that it has been impossible to arrange a meeting where all would come together for the purpose of definite plans for work, so thus far we have reported entirely by correspondence, but the fullest cooperation of the M. S. has been secured as "Missionary Headquarters" during the convention, and here we expect the missionary workers of the State to assemble and become better acquainted with each other and the work. An exhibit of literature of the various missionary boards and the missionary organs may be found at the headquarters, and the welcoming and information committees are also instructed to direct every one desiring information to the many visitors whom we hope will be present during our sessions. Should help make this new feature of the convention a success.

Before the State convention we hope to give a detailed account of the work accomplished by each union and society, but this report would be incomplete did it not contain an idea of what our societies are undertaking in the way of the missionary interest felt and seen during the year. The effort put forth by many societies has been crowned with success, while from others reports have been received, telling of failure. Failure to report is due to two causes, either the society is too small, with like the continuous dropping of water, at least bear fruit by wearing away the hardest stone, or else the society "does vows." Among the many successful plans that have been tried and found best to secure the best success are the following. First, One-half hour for prayer for the individual Endeavorers for the study of missions. Second, Collection of missionary literature and missionary information as will prove special, interesting and stimulating, and given to the Endeavorers in the children's hour, if prepared with a hectograph or some kind of duplicating pad. Third, Have a table or stand set apart in each prayer meeting to listen to the missionary reporter and the latest news from the mission fields. Fourth, In having the name of the weeks topic in the society posted on missionary topics. Fifth, In keeping a list of the best missionary books posted on a bulletin board in conspicuous place and calling attention to them. These simple methods have often led to the awakening of an interest that has made the members ready to search and pray for themselves, and this has resulted in their becoming hearty supporters of the cause.

The second feature of the work which has claimed much attention is the missionary meetings. These have been varied and interesting. Special study has been given to ways of conducting missionary meetings, and in most cases simple programmes have been used. The new features of Sunshine Subjects, and the old facts in new dresses have given spice and life to the meetings.

The third and last feature of the work which has attracted our thoughts and which may be mentioned here is the plan under the head of systematic giving. Some societies favor the envelope system, others use printed books. Some hold to the tuition two cents per week plan, while the duplex envelopes are satisfied with nothing less than the gospel plan, a money box or plate to be passed each week and collecting from four or five to fifteen cents from each. In addition to the systematic plans used, self-denial funds, thank offerings and birthday gifts are in force. Many Endeavorers are not satisfied with giving their money only; their time and talents are freely given for the relief of the sick, furnishing food and clothing for the needy, and their visits and prayers those who know nothing of the luxuries of life. The sum raised from these various sources during the year has amounted to $14,194 56. Of this amount $2,006 91 has been given through the denominational boards. Our Endeavorers have responded generously to the appeals that have been made, and to swell the total amount received by the State secretary being $2,200.

If becomes more and more evident as we study the burning question of missions of the day, that we, as Christian Endeavorers, must give even more generously, pray more earnestly and labor more diligently, if we would have the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord. We should not be satisfied with past efforts or past successes, but with the knowledge of coming events the coming year crowded with victories won for Christ. Our superintendent has watched with keen interest the missionary work as it has developed in our State, and she has become convinced of the fact that while a strong missionary spirit has been shown by our more consecrated Endeavorers from time into some when a tremendous impetus should be given to the missionary spirit wherever it exists, and an intelligent enthusiasm created where no interest is felt. To this end we suggest as a available means which would bring about the desired results second to none, the holding of a Mission Study Conference. After much thought on the subject it was considered best to arrange a plan by which the Mission Study Class may be so desires may apply to the State Missionary Superintendent, who will then arrange for the full particulars of the plan for New Jersey will be cheerfully sent to all who desire it, and may also be obtained at headquarters. It is the earnest hope that this plan may receive hearty approval of all and that it will be used extensively among the Unions of this State. Let us go forward upon the chirted expression of Annabel Morris Buchanan, no cross too heavy to bear, no service too humble to perform, no shadow too severe, no battle too great to fight when the cause of missions is at stake. Let us go forward with Jesus we can safely go cheered and encouraged by His gracious assurance "Lo, I am with you all the days." We will meet principles that would not endure the heat and the ordeals of the great Captain, even about by the glorious victory, when Christ overcomes the world and over the earth as the waters cover the channels of the deep."

BLAZE IN THE NOTCH.

Barns Outbuildings on Wm. Demler's Place Destroyed by Fire.

The bright reflection on the skies last Friday at 7 o'clock was made by the burning of the barn on William Demler's property in the Notch.

Mr. Demler went to his barn with a lighted lantern about 7 o'clock for the purpose of feeding his horses. He was standing in front of one of the stalls with the lantern in his hand when a trapdoor, which hung overhead, came down with a crash and knocked the lantern out of his hand, at the same time breaking the glass. In an instant the dry hay was all in a blaze, and it was with difficulty that Mr. Demler rescued his three horses. By the time the animals were removed the whole barn was one mass of flames, and another barn belonging the Stewart estate was consumed, also.

The neighbors responded quickly and assisted as much as possible, but the buildings could not be saved. The houses belonging to Andrew Wilson and Wm. Demler narrowly escaped destruction. Besides an immense quantity of new hay just put in the barns, three sleighs and three sets of single harness were consumed, also three election booths belonging to the township. Mr. Demler says that his loss will be about $2 000.

Former Newspaper Man.

R. Henri Herbert, of Trenton, has been in Plainfield the past few days, combining business with pleasure, and incidentally looking after the interests of the Republican party among his people in this section. Mr. Herbert was some years ago connected with the New Jersey State Republican, as associate editor. The paper was published in this city, its editor being Mr. John D. Bagwell. Mr. Herbert is one of the best known colored men in this State, a man of education, refinement and scholarly attainments. Mr. Herbert, however, has given up newspaper work, and is now with the National Cigar Manufacturing Company, of Trenton, as secretary and treasurer.

Dunelle Wins.

The Dunelle and Independent Gun Clubs competed for the third time Thursday, and it was unfortunate that the latter did not turn out better. Each shot at 25 targets. The score follows:

Wedemeyer	16	Gray	18
Cook	13	Brokaw	14
Hazard	11	Lindsey	14
Hyslop	11	Dunelle	19
Hall	22	Baron	16

The Dunellen team won by 18 birds. Several sweepstakes were also shot. All the money was divided by the Rose system.

In Honor of a Guest.

Mrs. John H. Carney, of 40 Craig place, tendered a reception to Miss Mary, Francis Higgins of Mount Saint Mary's Academy Newburgh-on-the-Hudson last Friday. The evening was delightfully spent. Mr. Rogers, of Madison N. J., furnished the music and Miss Libbie and Alfred Springer favored with solos and duets which were delightfully rendered. John H. Carney had a few words in dialect which drollery put many smiles upon the young people features.

ONLY TEMPORARY DEFEAT.

As the time draws nearer to election day, and a more thorough understanding of the currency question fills the minds of those who were the doubters one and two months ago—and upon whose votes the general result hinges—there seems to be every reason for the Honest Money Democrats to feel that the principles and candidates put forth at the Chicago convention in defiance of all Democratic precedents and teachings will be buried under a great plurality that willeffectu ly squ lch the element who have for the time being gained control of what is termed the "regular" portion of the party.

Such extraordinary and threatening legislation is advocated and promised if Bryan and Sewall are victorious, that drastric measures have been necessary as a protest to such ideas by the men from whom it was naturally supposed the real strength and support of the Democratic party would come this year as it has in all the years gone by. It was not a pleasan duty for thirty Democrats to find it necessary to dissent from the views promulgated from what they considered would be a convention moved by the same Democratic precepts that had argued other Democratic National conventions, but it was much preferable that they should suffer defeat-temporarily that they might not have the stigma of repudiation and infamy attached to that which has been near and dear to them in an association of a lifetime.

Senator Palmer, the candidate of the Honest Money Democrats, says that he feels confident that the ticket which he heads will poll 2,000,000 votes, and this being true—and there is every reason for so thinking—with the votes coming from the States considered close or else States in any other election but this surely Democratic, the defeat of free silver advocates is assured. Democracy will temporarily receive a set back, but in another four years it will be able to go forth and battle successfully.

Dr. Scudder, of Jersey City, in his pulpit last Sunday, exposed the dishonesty of the Popocratic talk against what they call the domination of England. He said:

"Some hysterical campaign orators would make us believe that England owns our bodies, body and soul; that she dictates our financial policy and determines how we shall vote. They tell us we should be independent of all foreign nations in matters of trade, all of which is consummate rubbish. Any one knows that the properity of this country largely depends upon its exports, and any policy that would diminish our trade and credit with foreign nations would be suicidal to our own interests. If money goes across the water as interest on money loaned to us more money can be made to come to us in exchange for agricultural and industrial products. What this nation needs is reciprocity and friendly relations with the rest of the world, not repudiation of debts and warlike bluster."

Benjamin Smith, a man formerly prominent in New Jersey and also once very wealthy, died a day or two ago in the almshouse at New Brunswick. It is said that his poverty was the result of excessive generosity. Few there are who, having once acquired wealth, bestow it upon others and take upon themselves the miseries of poverty. Mr. Smith ought to have a monument, says an exchange.

At the Republican Convention for the Sixth Congressional District of New Jersey, including East Orange and Newark, which was held in Newark Tuesday afternoon, Representative Parker was unanimously renominated.

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

Plainfield has again resumed its wonted quietude. The visiting Christian Endeavorers have gone and the tenth annual State convention of the Christian Endeavor societies of New Jersey is now a thing of the past. For three days Plainfield was in possession of these bright young people and everything else was given up on account of this gathering. Last night they met together for the last time and now scarcely one of that great army remains. Although the convention is over and the delegates gone, it will be many a day before Plainfield forgets them. The spiritual life of the city has been quickened and the local Endeavorers given renewed strength to fight life's battle. The convention was the most successful of any ever held in the State, and great credit is due to the committees, thanks to whose efforts the convention passed off so successfully. To E. E Anthony, chairman of the '96 committee, unbounded credit is due, and his election to a State office by the society was but just recognition of his labors in behalf of the Endeavorers. The secretary of the convention, Jos. M. Hawkins, seemed to have the happy faculty of doing several things at the one time, and without him it would have been impossible to accomplish what was done. The other members of the committee and its treasurer, David M. Runyon, were also responsible for the grand result The other members of the committee were: J. M. Hawkins, printing; Wm. E. MacClymont, music; H. J. Martin, reception; Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Pastors; J. G. MacLaughlin, entertainment; Herbert Bonnell, finance; Harry W. Marshall, hall and decorations; Miss Florence G. Hawkins, evangelistic; Harold Serrell, ushers; Miss Emma V. Fish, press; Rev. C. E. Herring, Rev. J. W. Richardson, Rev. A. I. Martine, pastors' advisory.

GREAT GROWTH.

No organization has ever had the extraordinary growth which the Christian Endeavor Society has had in its brief existence. The parent society was formed only fifteen years ago. Now there are 45,125 societies, having a membership of several millions. This phenomenal growth shows at once the society's power of accretion and its power for good. The aim of the society is so simple and yet so broad and far-reaching that Christians of widely divergent views on many matters purely theological can take its pledge and work under its guidance and are thus banded together in a fellowship that makes for good. It is a pleasure for Plainfielders to see the many members of the society who have come here to attend the State convention, and that their presence is gratifying is shown on every hand in the many evidences of welcome.

THE BEST YET.

No interesting feature of the great Christian Endeavor convention was left uncovered by the reports of The Daily Press yesterday, and without flattery The Press believes that it can lay claim to the credit of having better reports of the proceedings than has ever been published by any other paper before in the nine previous gatherings of the State society. That it was appreciated is best shown by the hundreds of subscriptions for the convention issues that have poured into the business offices from the delegates. Today's paper speaks for itself, and of tomorrow's we propose to make just as good.

"The campaign for sound money has brought the people of all sections closer together than they have been brought since the war," says the Syracuse Post, (Rep.) "Honest money is as much needed in Georgia as in New York. A staple currency is as essential to business success in Texas as in Massachusetts. The credit and honor of the nation are as dear to loyal men of Alabama as to those of Illinois. This campaign will have accomplished much more than the election of McKinley and the triumph of the Republican party; it will have buried the ugly spirit of sectionalism which the enemies of the republic have invoked."

The representatives of the press to whose lot it fell to record the proceedings of the State Christian Endeavor convention were greatly assisted in the performance of their work by Rev. George H. Ingram, superintendent of the press deprrtment. Many little details were furnished that would otherwise have made the newspaper men's task, and the courteous and accommodating spirit of Mr. Ingram made him exceedingly popular with the reporters.

Some of the merchants of New York city are so confident of the election of McKinley, a conviction strengthened by the reports of the 50,000 strangers daily from all sections of the country who visit that city, that they are courageously beginning to buy goods for the expected revival of trade to follow the election.—True American.

A Great Battle.

Do consumptives recover? Yes, thousands of them. Even after the disease has a firm hold? Yes, no doubt about it. After cavities have been formed and hemorrhages have occured? Yes, even then. If the system is too weak, the disease will probably conquer, but if the body can be reinforced there is a fair chance for a winning fight. For twenty years, thousands have testified how they gained the victory.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil with the Hypophosphites is still coming to the rescue. Out-door life, fresh air, and good pluck are of immense value. But in addition to these the body must be supplied with that peculiar kind of fat which is found only in cod-liver oil; combined with valuable medicinal agents; and there must be the tonic effect which comes from the hypophosphites. It is a great battle, and a great victory is often gained.

"Just as Good" is not SCOTT'S EMULSION.

SCOTT & BOWNE, New York

The electoral tickets of the National Democratic party are now published in nearly all the States, and the Bryan managers are so much afraid of their influence that they are making strenuous efforts, on one pretence or another, to prevent their being declared "official" by the State authorities. This is a worse than idle effort. No action whatever can be instituted which will prevent sound money men from casting their ballots against the nominees of the Chicago convention. If by any chicanery, in any State, the Palmer and Buckner ticket is not permitted to be placed in the hands of the people by the election officers, affording them a chance to vote according to their convictions, in whatever State the wrong may be accomplished, sound money Democrats will be sufficiently exasperated to put their protest on file against the Bryan ticket where it will do the most good.—Hackensack Democrat.

New Jersey and Delaware, neighboring States, have usually voted on the same side in State and Presidential elections since the close of the Civil War. Once only since 1864 has New Jersey been carried by the Republicans in a Presidential year. That was in 1872, and in the same election Delaware was lost to the Democrats. This year both States are claimed with confidence for McKinley. Both chose Republican Governors at the last election for that office.

William E. Sackett, the well known political writer of New Jersey, says that if William J. Keys is nominated for Senator by the Democrats in Somerset county, Charles A. Reed, who is assured of the Republican nomination, will have to fight hard to be elected.

Chronic constipation is a painful, disagreeable and life-shortening difficulty. It deranges the system, causes sickheadache, bad breath, and poisons the blood. Rheumatism Cured in a Day.

"Mystic Cure" for Rheumatism and Neuralgia radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action upon the system is remarkable and mysterious. THE RIGHT TO TAX MONEY.

The question of the right to tax the moneys of a resident of New Jersey on deposit in a New York bank, after the death of the depositor in New Jersey, has given rise to an emphatic difference of opinion in the Court of Appeals. One John F. Hondayer of Trenton, N. J., died in that city last year, having on deposit upward of $70,000 with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York. The money thus deposited belonged partly to him individually and partly as trustee, but the account was in his name as trustee. The Surrogate held that the deposit was taxable under the Transfer Tax act. The Appellate Division reversed that officer, and declared that the deposits were not property within the State, under a proper construction of the Statute, but that upon receiving them the trust company merely became indebted to the depositor for the amount which it had received from him. On Tuesday the Court of Appeals, in turn, reversed the Supreme Court, a majority of the Judges saying, through Judge Vann, that they "are of the opinion that a deposit of money in a bank, although technically a debt, is still money for all practical purposes, and as such is taxable under the Transfer Tax act." Judges Gray and Haight dissent on the ground that when Mr. Hondayer made the deposits they became the property of the trust company, and the relation thus created was simply that of debtor and creditor.

WILL FOWLER DEBATE?

Candidate Willey Wants a Contest on the Public Forum.

F. O. Willey, the Free Silver candidate for Congress in this district, has challenged Congressman N. Fowler, the Republican candidate, to a joint debate. The letter was presented to Mr Fowler by James P. Powers, formerly of this city, and when urged for a reply, Mr. Fowler said that he would answer it in the regular order of his correspondence. The letter of Mr. Willey's is as follows:

37 Hawthorne St., Orange, N. J., Oct. 13, 1896.

Hon. Charles Fowler, Elizabeth, N. J.

Dear Sir:—You have been made a candidate for Congress for a second term. I understand that the nomination has been given to you as a fourth term candidate by the Republicans of this district of the Republican party during the two years served in the National Legislature.

The Democratic party has placed me in nomination for the same office. Both parties are agreed upon one proposition, to-wit: The gold standard. In the platforms of the St. Louis conventions are more vital than any issues ever before presented to the nation. I think the people of this Congressional district are entitled to a full discussion of the questions involved, especially that of finance, which is generally regarded as overshadowing all others.

Therefore respectfully invite you to a series of public debates at such time and such populous centers in our district, the same to be satisfactory to your committee.

Awaiting your reply, I have the honor to remain, Sincerely yours,

F. O. Willey.

A Baby Christened.

A pleasant event occured at the home of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Hauser, on Duer street, yesterday afternoon, when their infant daughter was christened by Dr. Oertel, of New York, founder of the German Reformed church of the borough. Mrs. Altenhain, of Jersey City, grandmother of the daughter and Mrs. Case, of Plainfield, acted as sponsors. The given name is Viola Irma Amelia Anna Hauser. After the ceremony a social time was enjoyed by the few guests present.

Got His Bicycle Afterall.

Fred Stark, who had his nickle-plated bicycle stolen off the porch of his boarding house on East Fifth street, recently, wrote to McKee & Harrington, the bicycle makers, at New York, at the time, and they kept a lookout for the missing wheel. Yesterday they notified Mr. Stack that they thought they had located the wheel in a "fence" in New York. He went to the city, and after considerable detective work he found the bicycle. With the aid of the police he secured possession and brought it home with him.

THEATRICAL.

We are to have that popular comedian, William Jerome, and his excellent company of players at Music Hall, Thursday evening, in his twentieth century idea of an entertainment entitled, "Town Talk." It is entirely different from any other attraction on the road this season, being a combination of high-class vaudeville with sparkling farce comedy—thus giving a continuous performance from the rise of the curtain until the finish of the last act. The company is composed of such artists as Maud Nugent, the Mahr Sisters, Daly and Hilton, Barnes and Coakley, W. C. Davis, Master Tommy Meade, Charles Sedgwick and others.

Experience of the last decade in New York has been strong in evidence that the critical test of a comic opera's worth, or the opposite, comes about midway in the second week of its production. Such being accepted as a criterion of comic opera conditions, Francis Wilson's one more mark established himself in the midst of a thorough success—"Half a King"—and the Knickerbocker Theatre is sure of its nightly crowded house. "Half a King" met with so great a degree of popularity from the very first that it seems needless to say that improvements have been made. Everyone has grown "easy" in his or her assignment, and Mr. Wilson gives something bright and new at each performance.

The bright faces of farce comedy combined with the catchy songs and dances of vaudeville, is what will greet the audience at Music Hall on the evening of Tuesday, October 15th. This company comes to us highly recommended and contains some of the best people in the profession. William Jerome, who heads this all star cast, is too well known as a song writer and parodist to need much mention. Some of the others in the cast are Miss Maud Nugent, the Mahr Sisters, Daly and Hilton, Barnes and Coakley, W. C. Davis, Master Tommy Meade, Charles Sedwick and others. Be sure and watch for the big show.

Worthy Your Confidence.

The success of Hood's Sarsaparilla in conquering scrofula in whatever way it may manifest itself is wonderful, and by thousands who were severely afflicted by this prevalent disease, who now rejoice over a permanent cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula may appear as a humor, or it may attack the glands of the neck, or break out in dreadful running sores on the body or limbs, or it may affect the organs of brane, it may develop into catarrh or lodging in the lungs lead to consumption. Some or it may, as faithful course of treatment with Hood's Sarsaparilla will overcome it, for working upon the foundation of all diseases, impure blood, it purifies, enriches and vitalizes, and vigor, strength and health restored to the body.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

To Meet in the Westfield Congregational Church Next Thursday.

The sixteenth annual convention of the Union county Sunday School Association will be held in the Congregational church at Westfield, Thursday and a large attendance is expected. In the morning at 11:15 there will be an address by Rev. G. H. Payson, of Rahway, on the subject "Christ and the children." An address on "International Sunday-School Work" will be given in the afternoon at 2 o'clock by Captain C. B. Parsons, of Red Bank. At 3:30 Mrs. Alonzo Pettit, of Elizabeth, will conduct a conference on primary work, and at 4:15 Rev. Linn E. Wheeler, of New Brunswick, will deliver an address on "The Secret of Success in Teaching." In the evening at 8:40 W. H. Beach, of Jersey City, will deliver an address. The morning session will be opened at 10 o'clock, the afternoon at 2 o'clock and the evening at 7:30. The programme is an excellent one and contains many things outside of the above mentioned.

Many Foreigners Naturalized.

Law Judge John D. Bartine, of Somerville, told a Press representative Saturday that he had naturalized more foreigners this fall than at other time, outside a presidential year, during the long time that he has been on bench and that the class naturalized were Italians and Slays. The Judge said that he asked one Italian who was governor of New Jersey and that he replied "Mika Corcora." Now Michael Corcoran is overseer of Bridgewater township and lives in Raritan where the Italian resides and he undoubtedly looked upon the warm hearted Irish Republican as the greatest man in the State and so answered the Judge.

ONE MORE AND IT STAYS

PARK CLUB LIKELY TO BECOME OWNERS OF THE WHIST TROPHY.

Defeated the North End Whist Club, Newark, Monday In a Game That Was Close Contested at Every Point.

One more victory and the Park challenge whist trophy, a handsome silver cup, will become the property of the Park Club. Monday, they defeated the challengers and added the ninth to their string of victories. Their opponents were the crack team from the North End Whist Club, of Newark, and it was only by the hardest kind of play that the Park Club players defeated them by a score of 13 to 11. It was probably the best game ever played in the clubhouse of the Park Club, and the trophy still remains in Plainfield.

The Parks gained the lead in the first round when they scored 7 points to their opponents 4. The second round resulted in the visitors scoring 3 points while Plainfield only got 1. The third and last round was favorable for the home team, the score being 7 to 4 in their favor. The total was 16 to 11, in favor of the Parks, of course.

The same team, that has made the Park Club famous in the whist world, represented them last night. Messrs. Rogers, Howell, McCutchen and Townsend. The North End Club team consisted of Messrs. Cannon, Reynolds, Eagles and Smith. Mr. Bruck, of the Ridgewood Club, acted as umpire.

The terms, by which the cup was offered, provide that it shall become the property of any club winning it ten times. Last night, the Park Club won their ninth victory. The next challenge is from the New Jersey Athletic Club, and that match will be played in about two weeks.

The Parks looked on the North End Club as their most dangerous opponents, and now that they have defeated them, the Park Club is looking forward to becoming the owner of the cup at no distant date. The cup was first offered last year.

FARMER JIM'S HOT SHOT.

TURNED HIS ORATORICAL BATTERY ON REPUBLICANS AND BOLTERS.

The Democrats at the Mass-Meeting Gave Him a Great Ovation—Many Local Hits Worked in His Address for Free Silver.

The local supporters and advocates of William Jenning Bryan and free silver assembled in T. A. S. Hall on West Fourth street, Saturday evening, and held a rousing mass-meeting. The sentiments of that portion of the democratic party were proclaimed in no uncertain tones and those present were enthusiastic to the highest point imaginable.

When James E. Martine entered the hall escorting Hon. J. S. Beckwith, of Ohio, round after round of applause was given.

Mr. Martine called the meeting to order and Charles H. Lyman was made chairman. When he took the position of honor the heartiest applause was accorded him. Mr. Lyman spoke somewhat as follows:

"Gentlemen, I consider it an honor to preside over a meeting of this kind, which stands for the principles of William Jennings Bryan and his party. I am a good American citizen and would fight for my country if necessary. I stand on the Chicago platform first, last and all times, no matter what the enemy calls me."

Hon. J. S. Beckwith, of Ohio, was then introduced by Mr. Lyman, and again loud applause was given. The address of Mr. Beckwith was substantially as follows:

"I am a good deal Ohio and considerable New Jersey. I am here to-night to help drive out of this country a pack of wolves. I have been a Republican since the party was known and was one of the original forty. The delegates who went to St. Louis wanted free silver. A certain delegate present said, 'We have an Ohioan of whom we think a great deal, but you can't place him in nomination unless you swallow our gold-coated pill. The pill was taken and it made many sick at their stomach, and I am one of those who was made sick. I am a Republican, but I am here to plead the cause of the Democrats. There were eight-tenths of every State that declared for bimetalism, but the Republicans revolted and repudiated. They are not Republicans, for they want to help England instead of the American citizen and his country. I am now an old man and you may wonder why I am here. I will tell you. It is because the present issue is more serious than any since the war. It is a contest of the American citizen to be freed from a moneyed power. You people of the east are only new in the fight. You have not felt the effects of the enemy like we have in the west, where heart-rending scenes have been witnessed. Just think of potatoes selling for seven cents a bushel and onions for four cents a bushel. What kind of a living can a farmer make on such prices. It is one story like the Lord's Prayer, for the more times it is repeated the better it is. A trust, what is it? It takes away the rights from man to live. It won't let you have a match to light your pipe without first fixing the price on it. Monopolists are reducing the soil producer to want, but we are going to build America anew. We have a responsible duty on our hands. The question is American freedom or gold oppression by wealth.

"All-wise Providence gave man coal, but the trust seized it and now families are obliged to suffer because they can't pay the price. Again, God is just, and he gave us oil. But the Standard Oil Company has seized the product of the Almighty and controls every gallon that is consumed. No American in Congress or out would have stricken the silver measure from our statute books unless he was under English control. Shall silver be restored? The swayback Democrat or broadescript has got around his neck a chain of gold, and we should bury them in a grave and mark it 'unknown.' They tell us we claim alone for free silver, but at Chicago you demanded free coinage of gold and silver. One is as fair as the other. Shall the money of our fathers be restored to us? Money is the product of God for man's use and a value has been placed upon it carefully and they went to the trouble of using the French scale to do it, and silver has been kept at a parity with gold all the way through. Money is life and the blood of the nation. The colors white and yellow are significant, and white and yellow it shall remain for the American people. In 1874 silver money was drawn out of body politic, and we are now here to send John Sherman out of remembrance. Anyone that says aught against McKinley is doing so against an honest man, but anyone saying aught against Bryan is a slanderer. Sherman took one half of the blood out of the nation and in consequence gold has gone up and will continue to go up at the present rate. If I had a boy ten years old who wasn't intelligent enough to understand these questions I would send for a brain specialist. I stand here to tell you that when the American people pay her bonds in the money she promised to that is honor enough to take to my grave. In 1874-'75 we were threatened with a panic and wages went down. Farmers formed an alliance of which you are the outgrowth. It will take seventy-three years to get the amount of silver that Congress secured by two single acts. The gold men are too mean to believe in our country's power and they want to get England to help them out. We believe in the Stars and Stripes and we are independent of every nation on the face of the earth. We are told that Congressman Fowler secured money at 5 per cent and loaned it at 12 per cent. The English people will never run us as the Republican party want them to do, and we will not suffer any more. You may go vote for McKinley, you may vote for Bryan, or you needn't vote at all, but we shall put Bryan in power. What you comes to vote to do so."

When Mr. Martine finished his address the crowd went wild with enthusiasm, and all through the address the loudest applause was given every few minutes. Mr. Wolfskell, of Elizabeth, a member of the State Democratic committee, was present and was called upon for an address. He responded in a happy manner by saying that he had heard that there was no Democrats left in Plainfield, but he was convinced that there were a few left. He then continued and spoke concerning the gold and silver question and explained in an impressive and clear manner his ideas on the same. At the close three cheers was given for Bryan and three more for Mr. Martine, after which the meeting adjourned. Among those sat on the platform was Frank M. Bacon, an earnest silver supporter.

DEMOCRATS CANNOT UNITE.

Somerset County Estimates Show That McKinley Will Have a Majority.

A strong effort has been made in Somerset county to keep the gold and silver Democrats united on a county ticket. The gold Democrats held a conference on Friday and sent word to the silver leaders that if they would nominate a county ticket without indorsing the Chicago platform they would unite with them. This the silverites refused to do, so the gold men decided to nominate a ticket of their own, as published in Saturday's Press. A petition is now being circulated, as the nomination must be made in that way.

The ticket has in the support of all the strong leaders of the party, and they think it will poll a heavy vote. James J. Meehan and William J. Keys are the only leaders of importance left with the free silverites. It has also been decided to nominate a candidate for Congress in the Third district, on the Indianapolis platform. A petition is being circulated for W. S. Jones, of Red Bank, and it will be no trouble to get the number of names required.

James J. Meehan, who leads the free silver movement, says that he believes the county will give a small majority for Bryan and Sewall. The gold men and the Republican leaders say that McKinley will get more than one thousand majority.

The silverites hold their county convention on Monday, October 19th.

H. E. Rider's and C. H. Lister's Bicycle Stores to be Joined.

It is probable that this afternoon the necessary papers will be signed for the formation of a company to succeed H. E. Rider and Charles Lister in the bicycle business on an extensive scale. Those interested in the company are B. A. Hegeman, jr., L. S. Pocock, A. D. Thompson and Messrs. Rider and Lister. It is intended that Mr. Lister will combine his store with the one now conducted by Mr. Rider on the opposite side of North avenue. Mr. Lister is an experienced dealer in bicycles and together with the well known enterprise and responsibility of the other members of the company, the combination would be a strong one.

Messrs. Hegeman and Pocock will be directors and Messrs Thompson, Lister and Rider the incorporators.

VICTORIA MAY RETIRE.

England's Queen Weary of Performing Official Duties.

A Few of the Notable Events in the Venerable Sovereign's Career—Characteristics of the Prince of Wales and Duke of York.

[Special Letter.]

Twice within 15 months the rumor that Queen Victoria contemplated retiring from Great Britain's throne has come across the ocean. When the statement was made early in 1895 it was discredited in all well-informed circles, but the latest report seems to be based on substantial grounds and an announcement of the queen's withdrawal from active political life may be expected any day. It is hardly probable, however, that the queen contemplates abdication. She is a woman of remarkable pride and, in spite of physical debility, a great stickler for etiquette. Should she decide to rid herself of the cares of state she will insist upon relinquishing queen and the prince of Wales will perform her functions possibly under the title of regent, but he will not become king of Great Britain as long as his mother may live.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

Has Reigned Nearly Sixty Years.

One of the most beneficial in the history of Great Britain. When she was born, May 14, 1819, in Kensington palace, the daughter of the impoverished Edward, duke of Kent, there were several lives between her and the succession; and when she ascended the throne on June 20, 1837, the people of England felt restless and discouraged. But the young girl, whose succession was viewed with so much alarm, developed into one of the ablest rulers of the world. Without being ultra-conservative, she insisted upon the observation of every form and ceremony calculated to inspire respect for the monarchy, and, at the same time, granted many privileges to the common people. The betrothal of which had been fought desperately by her stubborn predecessors, the Georges. Her marriage, Feburary 10, 1840, to her cousin, Prince Albert of Saxe-Gotha, with whom she had long been deeply in love, was not received favorably by her subjects, who did not become reconciled to it until after the prince's death, December 14, 1861. Then it began to dawn upon the coldest British minds that there might be a thing or two, after all; and cities, villages and hamlets joined in expressing sympathy for their bereaved queen. The noble gentleman who, in his lifetime, had been ridiculed and lampooned by duke and pauper, was held up to the world as a pattern of a man and husband. The praise came too late, however, to please the queen, who showed her devotion to the memory of her consort by remaining faithful to it. During their 21 years of married life the queen and her consort were blessed with nine children, all of whom are living except Leopold, duke of Albany, who died March 28, 1884, and Princess Alice, wife of Grand Duke Frederick William of Hesse, who died December 14, 1878. The children still living are Albert Edward, prince of Wales, the duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha; the duke of Connaught; the empress Frederick of Germany; Princess Christian of Denmark; Princess Louise, wife of the marquis of Lorne, and Princess Beatrice whose husband, Prince Henry of Battenberg, died recently in South Africa.

Attempts on the Queen's Life.

The momentous political events, in which Queen Victoria took an active part, can be counted by the score. In her reign the population of the mother country increased from 26,000,000 to close on 45,000,000, and that of the colonies has grown from 4,000,000 to 17,000,000. As empress of India her rule extends over nearly 1,500,000 square miles, with a population of 275,000,000. In 1854 she declared war against Russia, and, in alliance with France and Turkey, compelled the St. Petersburg government to give up its intention of seizing Constantinople. In 1856 she entered into war against China and Persia, both of which countries were eventually compelled to accede to Britain's demand. The mutiny of the Indian army, in 1857, was suppressed effectually at her request, but the afterward instituted many reforms in her Asiatic empire, thereby preventing a repetition of the horrors of the fifties. Humanitarian enterprises of every description received her active support, both as a woman and as sovereign; and the great railway system of the United Kingdom was established with her direct assistance. Like almost every other old-world ruler, the queen has frequently been the mark of would-be assassins. The first attempt on her life was made by Edward Oxford, who discharged two pistols at her and Prince Albert, as they were proceeding up Constitution hill in an open phaeton from Buckingham palace, June 10, 1840. He stood within a few yards of the carriage, but no one was injured. Oxford was sent to an insane asylum and got at liberty in 1868, on condition of going abroad. On the 27th of June, 1850, a fellow named Pate tried to imitate Oxford, but the queen escaped unharmed. On February 29, 1871, Arthur O'Connor, a boy 18 years of age, entered Buckingham palace with an unloaded pistol, and threatened to shoot the queen. He was apprehended and sentenced to imprisonment and flogging. The last attempt at assassination was that by Roderick Maclean, who, on March 10, 1883, shot at the queen at the Great Western railway station at Windsor. He was committed for high treason. Somewhat more pleasant than these occurrences was the queen's experience with an eccentric miser, named John Camden Neild, who was so pleased with her personality and public acts that he bequeathed to her the sum of £250,000 on August 30, 1852.

Albert Edward, Prince of Wales.

Should the prince of Wales be appointed regent, as has been reported, he would be the real head of the nation, except in name. And he would be the most popular male ruler England has had for nearly a century and a half. Albert Edward was born in Buckingham palace November 9, 1841. He studied under private tutors, passed one session at the University of Edinburgh, spent a year at Oxford, and pursued a four-years' course of study at Cambridge. In 1859 he was made a colonel in the British army and devoted some time to the study of military tactics in camp at the Curragh. Two years later he visited Canada and the United States, being received in both countries with great enthusiasm. The position of heir-apparent is never a pleasant one. Its incumbent cannot take part in politics, and tradition forbids him to participate in the affairs of state. These conditions in a measure wrecked the prince's life, which has been of an ornamental character altogether. Among the sporting fraternity of the continent he is known as a "high roller." This sobriquet he has earned by years of devotion to the gaming table and the betting ring, two pastimes which have frequently placed him in financial straits. Parliament relieved him several times, as did also wealthy friends, among them the late Baron Hirsch, who bequeathed to his highness $1,000,000 in unpaid notes. The only serious pursuit which he has followed is freemasonry, his craftsmen having repeatedly honored him with election to the grandmastership of England. On March 10, 1863, the prince married Princess Alexandra of Denmark. Their married life has not been without bitterness. The princess, like the other royal girls of the Danish royal family, was brought up to look upon lapses of all kinds with horror, and the innumerable scandals with which her husband's name has been connected are said to have soured her naturally sweet disposition. Now the women of England the princess of Wales is immensely popular, as she is not only a model wife but at the same time one of the best dressers in Europe.

Second in Succession.

Next in succession to the prince of Wales is George, duke of York, who was born June 3, 1865. He is the second child of the prince and princess of Wales, their eldest son, Albert Victor, having died January 14, 1892. Albert Victor was engaged to Princess Hélène of Teck, and after his death George took his place not only in the line of succession, but also as the bridegroom of his fiancee, the marriage occurring on July 6, 1893. The duke of York is known as "the sailor prince," and is well liked, although he is said to be far from perfect in his manners or morals.

G. W. WEIPPIERT.

POOR OLD UNCLE SAM.

Almost Everybody Tries to Loot His Treasury.

Big Thieves and Little Thieves by the Score Steal Money from the Government—How They Work Their Schemes.

[Special Washington Letter.]

Men who call themselves respectable, and who are sometimes called honorable, often try to loot the national treasury; and they do not seem to have any twangs of conscience.

The protection afforded the treasury by the senators and representatives in congress, and particularly the chairmen of the committees on appropriations, guarantees safety of the public funds. There are more honest men than dishonest men in congress; or else they are compelled to be good for fear of consequence. It is most likely that their moral sense, in a majority of cases, is well developed, for appropriations are carefully scanned before being passed in committee, or in the forum of debate.

President Cleveland, however, found it necessary to veto the river and harbor appropriation bill, and also the general deficiency bill. There was an immense amount of jobbery in the river and harbor bill, but nearly every member of the house of representatives had a slice of the steal, and hence the bill was passed by a two-thirds majority over the veto, and the money was thus appropriated. Fortunately large sums are left to the discretion of the secretary of war for disbursement; and the secretary is in no hurry to expend the public funds needlessly.

The general deficiency bill contained two "pork" steals, and everybody in Washington knew that the veto was right. The bill was killed by the veto, and could not be passed by a two-thirds vote, as the river and harbor bill had been. Four years ago a certain senator, who occupied a position of prominence and power, inserted an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the French spoliation claimants, as an amendment to the general deficiency bill. The bill carried so many important items that President Harrison did not veto it, and hence the treasury was looted to that amount. During the past session of congress the same senator championed the French spoliations claimants again, in the secret of a committee room; but did not do so on the floor of the senate. On the contrary, he intrusted the work to another senator, who proposed the amendment providing $1,000,000 for French spoliation claims, while the principal senator was absent from the senate chamber for a few minutes. That enabled the chief manager to say, if ever accused of jobbery: "Thou canst not say I did it."

The same appropriation bill opened the way for enormous appropriations under what is known as the Bowman act. If the bill had become a law, there would have been fully $100,000,000 drawn from the treasury inside of ten years, for the payment of obsolete and unworthy claims. But the president vetoed the bill, and thereby rendered his country a great service. Senators and representatives who voted for the big steals referred to would not listen to the demands of smaller and more deserving claimants.

But not only during the sessions of congress are the cormorants here. They are with us all the time, trying and scheming to get their hands into the treasury. There are schemers and plotters of every description, and not one of them seems to think that it is wrong to swindle the federal government.

Fifteen years ago appropriations were made for the purpose of constructing a tunnel a mile long, to carry water to a section of this city which was not well supplied. The tunnel was constructed under the direction of engineers of the army, and when it was completed the aggregate appropriations amounted to nearly $2,000,000. About ten years ago the tunnel was ready for use, and before turning the water into this viaduct the quartermaster general caused an inspection to be made an honest report. Everybody was amazed to learn that the enormous sum of $2,000,000 had been actually thrown away. The tunnel was useless, and had been constructed not for the purpose of carrying water, but for the purpose of robbing the government. The hole in the ground was there, but the brick work lining was an awful botch. Common plaster instead of cement had been used. Great holes and cracks in the brick work were left unfilled; and the pressure of water would have broken down the brick lining almost immediately. The inspectors cared nothing for that. All they wanted was to get the money accepted by the government, so that they could draw their final moneys from the treasury, and get away from Washington as soon as possible.

The tunnel is still there. It has never been used, and it cannot be used without the expenditure of at least another million dollars. Moreover, other appropriations might be misspent in that same hole; and nobody seems to be willing to take the responsibility of recommending that the work be taken up and honestly completed.

That is only a sample of the methods employed by unscrupulous men to get money from the treasury without rendering an equivalent for it. We recently have found another little steal going on; and it is of such a petty nature that nobody would have suspected it. We are quite surprised when we see men reaching for hundreds of thousands or millions; but we never expect men to undertake little jobs for a few thousand dollars. In other words, little thieves do not abound among men who have attained positions and secured recognition before the executive departments, or who have the privilege of doing business on Capitol hill. The last discovery of corruption involves only the sum of $8,000; and out of that the contractor could not have made more than $4,000, although he might have made at least $1,000 if he had done his work honestly.

Opposite this city, on the Virginia heights, there is a cavalry post called Fort Myer. It is near Arlington cemetery, and in plain view of Washington. For several years there has been considerable complaint concerning the meager supply of water at Fort Myer, and various plans have been considered for supplying a sufficient amount of water for the comfort, convenience and health of the soldiers stationed there. The prevailing impression was that a viaduct must be built to connect the fort with the water supply of this city. In accordance with this plan, an appropriation of $100,000 was made, and the secretary of war caused the subject to be investigated by his engineer officers, who reported that a well ought to be sunk on the premises which would supply sufficient water, and which would cost not much less than the viaduct. It was reported that a flow of 50,000 gallons per day would be ample, and surely that amount could be procured by an artesian well. At any rate the effort should be made.

Just at that juncture ex-Congressman Levi Maish, of Pennsylvania, secured the contract for digging the well, his compensation to be $8,000, if he could produce 50,000 gallons per day. Col. Maish hired a subcontractor in Pennsylvania, brought him here and set him to work. Three wells were dug, the first two being unsatisfactory. The third well produced a flow of 60,000 gallons of pure water per day; and the government chemist declared that the water was absolutely pure. It was not a spontaneous flow, but was forced up with an eight-horse power pump. It was thoroughly tested, and sure enough 60,000 gallons per day were produced, and the well was accepted, and the $8,000 paid to the chief contractor.

The quartermaster general recently caused the well to be carefully examined, because it did not produce the amount of water required. In fact when the pump was worked and the water used, it soon gave out. Investigation disclosed the fact that a four-inch terra cotta pipe was connected with the well, and ran down the hill side into a little brook. A few days' pumping from the stream a dam had been constructed which backed up the brook water, so that it could be pumped up into the fort premises. But, as long as the water was merely pumped to show its volume, it was pumped into the little stream; and thus a flow of 60,000 gallons per day could be kept up. The same water was being pumped up over and over again. There was no well at all, and there never had been a well. It was simply the dishonest practice of a subcontractor who secured his money and then disappeared.

Congress appropriated $100,000 to provide a water supply for Fort Myer. The sum of $8,000 has already been expended and no result produced, so now only $92,000 remain available for the purpose, and the soldiers at Fort Myer must still go thirsty, or else pump up water from their well by hand until it becomes exhausted, and it is not very full of water during this heated season. The ex-congressman proposes to pay back the $8,000, although he will be the loser of that amount, in addition to the money which he paid to the swindling subcontractor. The question is, how will he get it back into the treasury. Under existing practices, the money having been expended for the well, and the treasury books showing that fact, the money can only be restored to the treasury as a part of the conscience fund. It cannot be added to the appropriation for Fort Myer's water supply.

It is of vast importance to everyone in this country, that only honest men be sent to congress, and only honest men be placed in high positions in the national capital. It is important to the farmer, the miner, the merchant, the manufacturer, the preacher, the wife, mother, daughter, son, and to the infant in arms, that this should be honestly and truly a government of the people, for the people and by the people.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISES.

City of Berlin Derives Large Revenue from Them.

How German City Councils Deal with Corporations—Contracts Which Add Millions Annually to Depleted City Treasuries.

[Special Berlin (Germany) Letter.]

For sound municipal government is it indispensable to let out contracts and leases and to dispose of franchises in a way to redound to the best interests of the community, financial returns included. Whoever has given the subject of American city government the slightest attention knows that it is precisely in this respect that it is most at fault. The municipal history of New York is in itself a glaring illustration of the systematized misuse mayors and aldermen have made of their most important prerogative, and the enormous debts piled up and the insufficient income of most of our large American cities are, leaving downright corruption out of the question, the consequence of reprehensible neglect of all due precaution in guarding the interests of the commonwealth against the greed of private schemers. To bring about a thorough reform of municipal government in the United States nothing is more needful than to inculcate the lesson deeply in the hearts and brains of the average city council that the needs of a city are just like those of a private individual, of a commercial firm—there must be profit in all its undertakings in order to get to, and then remain on, a flourishing basis. That lesson once learned and insisted upon by the people at large, the greatest stumbling block that now lies in the way of municipal reform will have been removed.

Take, for instance, the three great items of gas works, electric plants and inter mural communication. All three of them have been made important sources of revenue to Berlin and with that the quality and price of the service rendered by the companies is above what is rendered by American companies. In Berlin the gas supply has been made a city feature. The works operated, however, by two distinct companies, at the city's risk and under the city's strict control. Both the grades of the illuminating and fuel gas and their prices are prescribed and no deviation in either of these circumstances permitted. The gas is tested daily by municipal officers. The price is about 30 per cent. lower than in the majority of large American cities. Yet the clear profits accruing to the municipal treasury every year are reckoned by the millions, and the taxes are by that much diminished. Berlin is, however, not by any means alone in this respect. Other German cities owning their gas works are Hamburg, Breslau, Dresden, Leipsic,

Cologne, Konigsburg, Bremen, Nuremberg, Dantzic, Magdeburg, Chemnitz, Dusseldorf, Barmen, Stettin and Brunswick. And in every instance they are making it a success in every sense, both as to price and quality and means of revenue.

In the matter of electric plants things are still in an evolutionary stage in Germany, municipal governments being here rather slow before engaging in enterprises as to the value and permanence of which they do not yet feel fully assured. The Berlin works were opened in 1886, and the five important German cities of Breslau, Cologne, Dusseldorf, Altona and Cassel have built plants of their own likewise. In other German cities they have preferred contracts with private firms, Siemens & Halske being the favored one. In each case, however, the city's interests are sufficiently guarded. As a sample I quote from the revised contract which the company may operate [illegible] quires, under heavy penalties, that [illegible] awn be fully provided with mains within a brief period, specified in the contract. As compensation for [illegible] tion (not exclusive) to use the [illegible] it is agreed that the municipality shall receive ten per cent. of the company's gross receipts, and, further, whenever the company realizes a net profit of more than six per cent. on actual investment of capital, the treasury shall receive 25 per cent. of such excess profits, in addition to the ten per cent. of the gross income. Besides this, it is agreed that the city shall provide the magnificent electric illumination of Unter den Linden, together with that of the Potsdamer Platz and of Leipziger strasse, at the expense of maintenance and interest at a price so low as to be nominal.

Besides this a special and favorable rate is provided for such further electric street lighting as the municipality may desire. The city authorities retain the fullest right to inspect, both technical and financial, the company's affairs are open to the knowledge of responsible public officials. The city requires the deposit of 250,000 marks as surety, and holds the company down to the strictest limit in regard to the laying of wires and the breaking up of streets or sidewalk surfaces. The company is required, moreover, to maintain a renewal fund equal to 20 per cent. of its invested capital and this fund, in the form of Berlin municipal bonds, must be kept on deposit with the city magistrates. Accompanying the agreement is an official schedule of rates that the company is authorized to charge its private patrons. No departure from such rates can be made without the consent of the city authorities. Finally the municipality reserved the right to buy the entire plant and all its appurtenances at any time after October 1, 1901, on a fair basis of valuation, carefully provided for in the contract. The whole arrangement is the perfection of business lucidity and intelligence. And I may add that under all the above conditions the company has been doing a flourishing business.

And now as to franchises granted to street railway companies. Generally, it may be said that such franchises are much more profitable properties in America than here; but, on the other hand, the companies themselves are under incomparably closer municipal control in Germany, and they have to pay about all for the privilege and for all they reasonably expect of them. In most instances they have to pay a tax of from eight to ten per cent., or more upon gross receipts, with certain other advantages accruing to the city, such as reduced rates of transportation. For short distances the rate of price for a ride is one-half what it is in American cities, viz., ten pfenings, for longer distances it is increased to 15 or 20 pfenings, or five cents, in American money, and citizens have a much lower rate. That is about the general rule in German cities of large size, and these rules hold good for horse, steam or electric cars, with rates averaging 50 per cent. lower than in the American elevated roads, the Berlin city railway (or "L" road) is the best constructed and safest elevated line in existence, and yet it pays handsome dividends.

In dealing with these companies, too, the city always takes the best care of its own interests. Thus just now the renewal of franchise (for another 12 years) granted to the largest and most flourishing of the Berlin street railway companies—the Great Berlin Horse Car company—has about been perfected. It yields the city much greater advantages and a much higher profit out of its revenues than did the old franchise. The tax on the gross receipts is to be increased at once from eight to ten per cent., and will go on increasing to 15 per cent. The company is held to put in permanent improvements to the amount of 16,000,000 marks (or about $3,500,000) on its existing lines. Besides it agrees to replace, gradually, all its horse car lines by electric lines within those 12 years, and to introduce a uniform superfenning rate and a complete system of transfers for the original fare.

From the three sources named above the city has an average annual income of 25 to 30 million marks. There is not in the whole length and width of the United States a single city which can show such a result of its street railway system or other public conveniences. But of course, as I pointed out before, the first requisite necessary to bring about similarly wholesome conditions in American cities is to have only honest and capable aldermen and mayors, men having the welfare of the community at heart, not only on the [illegible] occasions.

Dear, could the light come back again
That never was on land, nor sea
But only in youth's dreaming brain
As all life's pure ideals be,
Would you take willing hands, with me
To walk once more, through sun and dew,
By mead and meadow, tower and tree—
In that old world we loved—and knew?

Would you cross over months and years
By milestones long, long left behind,
Back to that time of April tears
And April smiles—the breathing wind
Warm with May's promise? Could you find
The leafy footway through the wood?
Would your white hands the branches bind,
Your glad eyes seek me, where I stood?

How fair it was, the sylvan scene!
Dim vistas through the forest space
Throbbing with light—translucent—green,
The young buds bursting from the sprays,
And the sweet vision of your grace!
Soft eyes, soft hair, half childhood's mirth,
Half woman's passion in your face—
Too warm for heaven—too pure for earth!

If, by some spell that poet hath,
If, by some fairy's magic chart,
We two might find that dear lost path,
Would you turn back from busy mart
And life's wild rush and whirl, apart,
To love's first kisses, dreams and sighs?
I would turn back with arm, sweetheart,
Yes, from the gates of Paradise!

CAMPAIGN BANNERS.

How the Most Elaborate Designs Are Hung Through at Railroad Speed—Its a Regular Business.

[COPYRIGHT, 1896.]

Already the campaign banner is swinging mid air across the avenues and shouting the various political headquarters. Very few people, as they pass on these works of art, have any idea of their manufacture — simply knowing that they appear after the selection of the candidates for presidential honors and overhanging them with fireworks, brass bands and oratory.

The making of campaign banners is, however, an extensive business—several firms devoting themselves exclusively to that manufacture. It is true that banners are sometimes gotten up by sign painters and the small shops that spring up for the occasion, but they are not to be classed with the banners turned out by the regular factories. A visit to one of these establishments reveals some interesting facts.

On the cheap banners only the names and sentiments of the candidates appear, but the large and costly ones have the portraits of both nominees painted in ovals, separated by fanciful designs. Shields, eagles and figures of liberty are the most popular. The emblems are wonderfully and fearlessly gotten up, the eagle performing feats that would fax a contortionist—airily balanced on a shield, his talons filled with enormous bundles of arrows, a pennant expressing his political opinions floating gracefully from his beak; or with a shield suspended from his neck he takes his wild flight across the rising sun. The Goddess of Liberty and other designs are executed in an equally striking manner.

The first-class campaign banner is the product of the combined efforts of three men—the portrait painter, the sign painter and the sailmaker. In making the banner the work is divided up. The painting, which is done on sized muslin, may be executed in two ways. If the man is an expert, he takes a piece of pasteboard, having the features cut out, and traces the general outline and size of the head, using a photograph to finish the portrait from.

But the usual method is by the use of stencils, each stencil being for a different color. The large pieces of muslin, tacked on boards, are ranged in a row around the room, and men with pots of paint pass from one to the other with great rapidity. Painter No. 1 lays in the hair, No. 2 follows with the flesh tint, No. 3 puts on the shirt and collar, and No. 4 the coat; thus the foundation is laid in for the artist, who comes along with his huge palette and completes the portrait.

Meanwhile, the sign painters, perched on stools and boxes, are putting on long series of muslin "The People's Choice" and other equally flattering sentiments. The sailmakers cut a roll of square measled net into the different banner sizes, binding them with a thick rope covered with canvas.

No scrolls are used for the emblems. They are spontaneous bursts of the artist's imagination. He can indulge his taste in eagles as fierce and warlike as he pleases, and Liberties as defiant. This is not all. A banner once painted is in a condition to be handled by the firm's hands. As the artist remarked, "putting on or taking off a mustache or beard, rearranging hair, an extra touch of fat or lean as the case requires is a matter of minutes, accomplished by a few strokes of the brush." The sign painter is equally handy at altering the political mottoes.

The banner takes some days to dry, and is sent to finish. A section is placed paint downward on the floor and the net put over it. The same design is arranged on top, and the sailmaker, sitting on the floor sailor fashion, sews it all together. Then it banner is ready to be raised with cheers and a flare of red fire of quail. The cats soon found that they could get a living by hunting, and they began absenting themselves from home. They returned at long intervals for a year or two, and then stayed away all the time. They multiplied rapidly, grew larger and fiercer and have become a nuisance. They have almost exterminated the quail, and other birds are becoming scarce. Efforts to destroy them by shooting or poison have failed and they continue to increase.

Dancing Skeletons Killed Him.

A remarkable cause of death from fright was the case of the Dutch painter Poutman. He was at work in his studio, when there was a number of devil's heads and skeletons, when he happened to fall asleep. During his sleep there was a slight shock of earthquake, and when he woke up suddenly he saw the skeletons and skulls dancing around in the greatest confusion. He at once became panic-stricken, and rushed across the room and threw himself out of the window on the pavement below. He died in a few days after, not from injuries received in the fall, but from the nervous shock given by the dancing skeletons, though the cause of the festivity was explained to him.

THE WIND'S MUSIC.

Ever about life's pathway floats
Strange music, thrilling and piercing notes,
Themes which, played by a master hand,
Surge through the length and breadth of the land.
Earth is the keyboard, each new day
Its keys are fingered in varied way,
And the master hand you may seek and find
With the wild, weird, wonderful, wanton wind.

Listen: at times there seem to swell
The dancing notes of a Tarantelle;
To-morrow perchance may the wind re-
But to-day—an air on mischief bent,
Whirling the cap from a schoolboy's head,
Stealing the ribbon and curl of a maid,
Maddest of pranks for all mankind,
Willful, worrying, witchlike wind!

Darkness falls, and there rolls a dirge
Over the sleeping land and the ocean's surge.
Great, wild chords in their agony
Burst out, till ever in minor key
The music sinks to a mournful wail,
Rises and falls like some plaintive scale,
A funeral chant, or a requiem kind,
Wailing, wuthering, warring wind!

Oftener still, from day to day,
A strange, monotonous fugue holds sway,
So familiar grown, that the ear
Seems scarce its wandering maze to hear—
Fitting type of man's daily life,
Notes in reflection the same strife,
Master product of master mind,
Wistful, wavering, weary wind!

Yet once more. As the summer's heat
Of the day is dying, a soothing sweet
Steals from the hills with a soft "good night,"
Rippling a lake in the sunset light,
Gently swaying a leafy bough,
Soft, cool touch for an aching brow,
Rest for a weary human kind,
Welcome, whispering, western wind!

Ever about life's pathway floats
Strange music, thrilling and piercing notes,
Themes which, played by a master hand,
Surge through the length and breadth of the land,
Glad or sorrowful, grave or gay,
Varying minstrelsy each new day,
And the master musician we seek and find
In the wild, weird, wonderful, wanton wind!

BEAUTIFUL MISS STARBIRD

BY CAROLINE L. FIELD.

Petticoat Lane is but a stone's throw from Gilbury Green. It is not very wide and not particularly straight, but it is wonderfully pretty of a June morning, say, when the rising sun streams in to awaken the huge elms that stand like staunch men-at-arms, holding up a fair green canopy for Queen Summer to walk under; or of an August evening when the same bright orb, a little flushed with his day's run, sends a golden flood into the very heart of Jem Peddock's Hill to the west river, and it finds the lane so pleasant a place that it runs beside it as far as it can—crossing from one side to the other, midway of its course, with a charming undershot movement, as if it were struggling to little ears as is the low, broad surface of the stone guard-wall to little feet. The wall is very old. All its cool, dark crevices are hung with ferns, and its coverings are veiled with moss. The lane itself is very old, and its houses date back to long ago.

Just where the narrow brown roadway makes its last curve to join the storm road, a little cluster of houses sit all. The long, shingled roof slopes down nearly to the grass behind. A tall, weather-worn well-sweep rises higher than the five fluted stone chimneys on one side, and on the other an ample stoop, with carved wooden benches at either end, gives entrance to the wide central hallway. At intervals along the lane stand other houses, old, also. This is the historic part of Gilbury. On other thoroughfares, diffused by the name of streets, there are dwellings which were built as recently as 50 years ago; on Petticoat Lane no house has seen fewer than 150 summers, and no summer of them all has opened upon the earth with fairer promise than that in which my story opens.

The story may be said to have begun when Grandmother Starbird received, one fair May morning some 30 years ago, a letter written on thin, foreign paper, and having a blue, a gray and a yellow stamp on the envelope. Postmaster Faxon looked at it twice, once through his spectacles and once over them, before he gave it to Grandmother Starbird herself, and old Joshua Plummer, who usually acted as mail-carrier for the "far end o' the lane," studied King Victor Emanuel's face all the way up town, until he would have recognized him anywhere. Grandmother Starbird ran over with eyes upon the letter than she flung the gray yarn stocking she was knitting across the room, and pushed Joshua Plummer into the nearest chair while she ran to fetch him a glass of her oldest currant wine as a reward of merit.

"There, drink that, Joshua, and wish me joy! Elinor is coming home."

Joshua eyed her askance. The currant wine was something else, had set his little old eyes a-twinkle.

"Do tell, Mis' Starbird, if you can read letters afore ye open on 'em. That's a terrible flimsy sruvelope, an' no mistake. I didn't know as your eyes was quite so keen."

"I don't need to read it, Joshua, except to find what day she'll be here. She was 21 years old a fortnit ago Tuesday. When her mother's letter took her away she told me she should come back as soon as she was her own mistress, and Elinor Starbird never breaks her word."

"H'm! That'll kinder rile Uncle Haynes, now, won't it?" remarked the old man in a tone that said Uncle Haynes' riling was a matter of small concern to either of the persons present.

Grandmother Starbird merely compressed her soft, puckered old lips and elevated her nose a little. She never discussed family affairs with outsiders, but her expressive face was not under so strict control.

Joshua Plummer chuckled.

"Well, I'll be goin' along. That wine is most excellent good! Ye ha'n't read yer letter yet, but as ye seem so plug sure of what's into it I s'pose there ain't no objections to my spreadin' the news a mite?"

"Spread away, Joshua! If I was to say 'don't' 'twould be all the same in the end, so you may as well be regularly delegated. I'm expecting my grandaughter some time within a fortnight, and I don't care who knows it. Now run along, and let me read my letter!"

So Joshua departed and the news spread. Gilbury was all agog. Six years before a slim, fair-haired girl, just out of short dresses, had set on all their doorsteps, and eaten apples from all their early apple trees, and they had regarded her as being like themselves, losing and lovable, but in nowise uncommon. Now, however, it was different. Fashion, fortune and foreign travel had all materialized to Gilbury in the person of Elinor Starbird—"the beautiful Miss Starbird," as she had come to be called out of reader in the great world. When Uncle Haynes, who was also "Guardeen" Haynes, had persisted in carrying his charge off to Europe—as he alleged, for the completion of her education, but as all Gilbury keenly realized, to wean her from her father's family and old associations—no one but Grandmother Starbird supposed she would ever return to dwell among her own people as her own. Now that her coming was imminent only the same old lady seemed able to await it with calmness. In this old New England village, peopled largely by the descendants of the original settlers, the long lane of friendship and neighborhood had grown to be second only to the bond of blood. Their old friend's grandchild had been like a grandchild to them all, and her taking away had been deeply resented by them all. Now that she was soon to come among them again no other subject could occupy thought or speech for the time being. Would she come alone, or would Uncle Haynes follow, since he could no longer lead? Would her mother be along? Would she still be the frank, open-hearted girl they had known, or would time and travel have changed, and worldly polish have hardened her? All these points could but be guessed at. But two things were plain. She would be a woman grown, and all her clothing would be fresh from Paris. There was not a girl in Gilbury, with any pretension to social standing, who did not spend the waking hours of those two expectant weeks in overhauling and retouching her summer wardrobe. There were few housekeepers who did not meditate certain fresh touches to their parlors and parlor bedrooms.

Meanwhile Grandmother Starbird knit quietly on her gray stockings, and once, at least, in every 24 hours took the thin sheet from its thin envelope and re-read the first three sentences:

"Dear Grandmother: I am 21 to-day. I sail for America, by the Castalia, on the 20th. Expect me at home by June first. * * *"

That was the one salient point of the whole letter to its recipient. She paid little heed to the rapture, the rhapsody of Roman ways and wonders that followed, beyond reading them through once, as in duty bound. What was the triumph of Titus, or the beauty of Queen Margherita, to her, by the Castalia, on the 20th, in last-over Uncle Haynes, and whose granddaughter was the acknowledged star of the American world abroad?

She bore her triumph calmly, however, as she had formerly borne defeat.

"I s'pose you'll be dreadful busy from now on," ventured little Mrs. Hibbard, whose housekeeping always racked her whole nervous system.

"Oh," said Grandmother Starbird, "my spring cleaning is always done by the middle of May. I'm resting now."

"But ain't you going to fix up Elinor's room, somehow, tasty and new? I've used to having things pretty stylish and tony, I guess, nowadays."

"She'll find the old house looking just as she left it, Mis' Hibbard, and she always liked it pretty well as it was."

"Of course," assented little Mrs. Hibbard, dubiously. She was fond of Gilbury always, 'an she'd ought to be. But she's seen the world since then, Mis' Starbird, an' she's come into property. She's an heiress, an' a belle, an'—well—dear Gilbury's stayed about the same. It always was, like the house, an' it won't be surprisin' if she finds it kind of narrer, an' old-fashioned, an' dingy, after Paris, an' Rome, an' them. I'd fix up a little, seems to me."

Grandmother Starbird drew out one of her bright, slender needles and stuck it in the knitting-sheath, which was fastened at her belt. There was a curiously unfriendly smile on her kindly old face.

"Fix away, Sarah Luella! Fix up all you like. We'll come and see how nice you can do things. But Rome's a good deal dingier than Gilbury, I guess; and you don't know Elinor Starbird very well yet, for all she's played in your dooryard so many times."

Sarah Luella fixed up. All Madison street fixed up. They were modern and stylish. But Petticoat lane was ancient and unchanged, and scorned to make vastly for anyone.

"Ef Ellerner Starbird ha'n't forgot us all she'll take us as we be," said old Mr. Carthcart, voicing in his blunt, ungrammatical way what many felt, but which those who were too well-bred to express it, felt. "An' ef she has forgot, what on airth should we put ourselves out for?"

So June came, the Castalia arrived, the depot hack rolled up after dark to the "far end o' the lane," and the Gilbury season had fairly opened.

The next day was Sunday. Everyone who went to the stone church, and who had a new bonnet, wore it. Glove and ribbons were very fresh and fine, and faces feminine were very eager. The men's faces all wore a strained, offhand expression, as if their owners had their curiosity stifled by original flirt, will, and were determined not to betray it. Nevertheless, most of them did look around out of the corner of one eye when Grandmother Starbird's soft black silk and gray lace shawl moved quietly up the aisle. As they might have spared themselves the trouble. No one followed the old lady; she let herself into the square pew, buttoned the door behind her, and sat serenely down, alone. There was a general turning of heads and exchange of wondering glances, a few sniffs and tosses of disapproval and chagrin, and then the bell ceased tolling, and the good old rector began to read the service.

Well, they got through it somehow. They confessed their sins and were forgiven; they read the psalter, they responded, they sat reasonably still through the sermon, and some of them recovered breath to join in the last hymn, led by the unseen choir behind and above them, whose music seemed sweeter and more rounded, somehow, than usual. They were blessed and dismissed, and trained to leave their pews, and then they saw her—saw her standing among the other singers, just as she used to stand, dressed simply and freshly in white, as she used to dress, but with a fuller, rounder grace in the tall, womanly form, and a happy light in the face that bent earnestly forward to find old friends among the groups below. Such a face! No wonder Europe called her "the beautiful American," for her pale rose color, her dark hair and her eyes like stars, and the clear tints of her skin, and the noble contour of her features were like nothing that Gilbury had ever seen before.

None of them ever quite realized—I think Elinor herself hardly knew—just how and when she ceased to lean from above and began to be down there among them all. They came about her like bees about their queen, and she knew them all and called them all by name. Grandmother thought of them again new bonnets or fine houses. In the 20 minutes that they stood there she had them all, New Englanders though they were, at her feet, and took up with ineffable tact the imperial sceptre such as few can wield. She was the same sweet girl they had known and loved always, but the subtle differences of growth, physical and mental, and the touch of travel had been held aloof from them, and from her home, by those in legal control, enveloped her in somewhat of distance and mystery, as if she had spent the time in Heaven, and a mightier flood than the Atlantic had rolled between them.

When gradually and reluctantly, one by one, they had all slipped away, and she stood alone with Grandmother Starbird and the rector, the old man turned to kiss her hand.

"My dear child," he said, in tones deeply stirred from their wonted quiet, "you left us a child under authority, you come back to us a woman, with great gifts, great wealth, and great beauty, and you have taken our hearts by storm. What will you do with all this power that is placed in your hands?"

He watched her keenly for the answer, but the face uplifted to him might have been that of the child he told her of, so free was it from any taint of consciousness or vain-glory, so clear and pure were the wonderful eyes that shone through unshed tears.

"It is not because of my wealth or my beauty that they welcomed me with such loyal affection," she said simply, "but because I have always loved these old friends in my heart and often them. It seems to me that now I have come back to spend my life among them I can do no better than just to keep on loving and remembering."

The rector's eyes grew suddenly dim, and all their keenness vanished. He raised the fair, firm hand to his lips as if it had been the hand of the little one whom Christ set in the midst.

"You are right, my child," he said gravely and reverently, "love and remember. There is no surer and no grander way."—Ladies' Home Journal

THE LIFE-CAR.

The First One Built Saved Two Hundred Lives from a Single Ship.

He' been planning for several years for a life-car, a closed vessel or covered boat, which could be sent out to a stranded vessel on a rope and pulled back and forth. It was to carry two or three people. He could not see his way clear to build it of wood; but now the iron problem was solved, he could carry out all his plans.

The car was built according to the plan made by him, an inclosed, torpedo-like affair, and along in the terrible winter of 1849-50 it was placed in the care of some untrained fishermen on the New Jersey coast, at Squan beach. An English ship, the Ayrshire, was wrecked here, one night in a storm of a blinding, sleet. The men on the beach could do nothing with their ordinary boats. The life-car was brought out. A small cannon, or mortar, was loaded with a piece of smooth iron, several inches long, attached to a small coil of cord. This was shot out over the spars of the ship. The people on board hauled in the cord and drew along through the surf a stronger rope. This was fastened to the mast head of the ship, and carried to the land beach, with the rope running through the two rings at each end, and pulled out to the vessel.

There were 201 people on board, and all but one of that number were saved.

The story of this rescue went round the world. All that had been said in praise of the inventor's powers was now justified. All Europe was interested. He was recognized by the nations of the world as one who had done a marvelous work for humanity—who had, as some one said, robbed the ocean voyage of its terrors.

The making of these boats followed, but the original boat Mr. Francis preserved. Its home is now in the National museum at Washington. It has been sent to many places for exhibition, to London among others, and it was an interesting feature of the life-saving exhibit at the government building at the world's fair.—W. G. Harwood, in St. Nicholas.

FASHION NOTES.

A Costume Made of Velvet and Brocade —Stylish Dressing Sacques.

A costume that has been greatly admired and has been extensively copied is made of velvet and brocade. The skirt is of velvet, and is cut after the rather contracted fashion of the new style five-gored skirts. It is entirely plain and just comfortable walking length. The fullness is gathered into the back, and there are a few small gathers at the sides. The waist is of striped brocade. It has a full front and French back, and there are Eton-jacket fronts of the velvet with elaborately embroidered edges. The sleeves are the leg-o'-mutton shape, but the fullnes is drawn in by a fancy buckle and bow of fancy ribbon. The collar is of plain velvet, and a wide plait of velvet extends from collar to waist line, and disappears under a belt. The hat worn with this dress is of black fancy braid. It is faced with shirred lace and trimmed with fans and ruchings of lace and veiling and a cluster of ostrich tips.

Every lady has occasion for stylish and dainty dressing sacques. An attractive model is made with a full, long basque, back and fronts extending from the shoulder seams straight down. The space between these fronts is filled in with a shirred vest made with alternate strips of lace insertion and muslin. The sides of the fronts are trimmed with insertion, and the edges are finished with a very narrow lace; the sleeves are made of alternate strips of muslin and lace, and a full of lace over the wrists is headed by ribbons with bows.

With the present fashionable sleeves, long gloves are worn. The most approved gloves are quite plain, and either in the buttoned wrist or the all-of-the-way buttoned, as one may fancy. Elaborately embroidered or very heavily stitched gloves are not so much favored by the best trade as the severely plain styles.

A stylish bonnet is made of closely puffed chiffon, over a frame covered with fine jet beads. The brim is covered with very closely gathered rosettes of the chiffon, with a tiny rhinestone buckle in the middle of each. A thick cluster of bird-of-paradise feathers, with fans of the chiffon, are the trimmings.

A novelty garden hat is made of shirred mull, and trimmed with loops and puffs of the fabric and sprays of white and purple lilac, with a border of violets below the edge of the brim at the back.

Princesse dresses are very handsome when made of appropriate materials, and these should always have consistency enough to stay in place and not dry in the seams.—N. Y. Ledger.

THE FAT CAPTAIN.

Would Give Them "Double Time," Then Lose His Breath.

"Joli the militis, if you wish to, my boy," said the old man in his kindly way, "you can enroll in a company that has a fat captain."

"I don't see what difference that can make," returned the boy. "Do you mean to contend that a fat man can't be a good soldier?"

"Well, not exactly that, my boy," explained the old man; "but in some ways you will find the thin man or the man of medium build preferable. Didn't I ever tell you of my experience?"

"Never."

"Ah, that explains your doubts, then. You see, I once had an ambition to wear the uniform myself, and I joined, just like you, and I joined a company that unfortunately had a fat captain. No one thought of the captain particularly at the time the company was organized, but one day I called it out for such trifles later. While we were in the armory it was all right and everything always passed off satisfactorily, but when we began to drill out of doors on the field we found how serious a matter drilling with a fat captain was.

"But why?" asked the boy. "You haven't told me that yet."

"He'd lose his breath just at critical moments. He'd start us out at double time and then get so winded himself that he couldn't stop us. Of course we would have to go on. We were too well drilled to stop until we received the order to do so. I remember once he started us out, lost his breath, was unable to order a halt or keep up with the column, and we ran three miles before we stopped."

"What made you stop then?" inquired the boy.

"We ran into a stone wall," replied the old man promptly.

"Pooh! Why didn't you scale it? You were a nice kind of soldiers, you were. If I'd been your captain I'd have court-martialed the whole lot of you for disobedience of orders."

Then the old man looked at the boy, and the boy looked at the man, and a beam seemed to open up between them. They were no longer friends.—Chicago Post.

For Sunburn.

When the skin has become sunburnt to excess there is nothing else to be done but to apply cooling, evaporating lotions, putting them on with an old piece of linen or soft cotton rag, and changing these cloths as soon as they get warm. At night a little sweet cream should be gently applied, or, if this is not procurable, a simple cold cream can be made by taking a teaspoonful converted into almost (not quite) a quarter of a pint of milk, or, still better, a little cream, if that is not considered too great a luxury, is an excellent thing for keeping the skin soft and white; it should be used immediately after the face has been washed. If there is any roughened feeling of the skin afterward there must be either less lemon used or more milk or cream added to it. —Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Black and White.

It has often been said that the best-dressed women almost invariably wear black and white, and it cannot be gainsaid that these two colors have an individuality and tone that more glaring colors do not possess.—Chicago Record.

THE SCENIC BEAUTIES.

ferny, mossy glens, and slopes very much like those of the Hudson Highlands at Garrisons—only, instead of the fair river at the bottom, there is the sea roaring over rocks at the foot of the cliffs—and then, mile upon mile of heather and rusty bracken-carpenting, bare round hill-tops with never a tree or bush; and, after that, rolling stretches of the greenest pasture land, marked out in quaint shapes by the hedgerows, and full of cattle and sheep, grazing. There, on top of the coach we could see well over the country; and when one's imagination seemed most inland, a sudden turn on a high bit of road would bring us in sight of the sea again, stretching away to the north.

We reached Lynton about dusk, and found it a pretty old village on the very top of a steep wooded mountain. We went to a hotel mentioned by Baedeker, and found it delightful; small, but with all possible comforts. There we ate a good dinner, after our three hour's ride, and slept a long night. Next morning we got a light "trap," with a strong, homely horse and a good driver, and started off on a pipe-mile drive to Malmsmead, a hamlet of four houses at the entrance to the valley where the famous robber Doones lived two centuries ago, and which Blackmore romanced about in his quaint "Lorna Doone." That drive was lovelier than the coach ride, if possible. We followed a stream called the East Lyn, in its windings around the hills, to the place where another stream joins it in a most picturesque glen, with much cascading and foam and spray. That they call "Watersmeet." From there we followed the other stream—the "Brendon Water," leaving it sometime to cross a hill, but finding it again. At Malmsmead we left the "trap," and took a rug, a basket of sandwiches and a couple of copies of Lorne Doone, and marched away for three miles along the "Bagworthy Water," through a delightful valley. We found the ruins of the house where a daughter of the Doones really did live, and where Blackmore put Lorna, and there we sat and ate our luncheon, and then read for two hours in the warm sunshine with heather covered hills all around shutting off the wind. We were quite alone. I had my doubts about our going off so—and the valley was the most deserted place I have ever seen—but all the natives laughed, and said that they had no railroads to bring rough characters, and that a tramp had never been seen in the country, and so sure enough, quite safe we were. We reached Malmsmead again between four and five, and found that one of the farmer's daughters had spread out tea for us—bread and butter, jam, cream, and tea itself—and very delicious at that. Then we drove home by another way, past Plovers' Barrows farm where John Ridd lived, and past Oare Church, where he married Lorna, and past Nicholas Snowe's farm—all the names are just as Blackmore wrote them, and much of his novel is history—and so, suddenly back to the sea, which we followed to Lynton. It was the most beautiful day that I have had in the whole year, and I think it will take a long time to jog it out of my memory.

This morning we came in the coach back to Ilfracombe and music work. Tomorrow, if it is clear, (which doesn't seem too probable) we want to go on an hour's journey with the little steamer toward the west, to Clovelly, which is an old fishing village, and very quaint, according to all accounts. Charles Kingsley has to do with it in "Westward Ho!"

Extend the Trolley By All Means.

The more the trolley extension is advocated between this city and Scotch Plains the more the people of the latter place are in favor of it. There is, however, some little objection to the enterprise and there is likely to be unless the railroad company buys off the objectors or else has a commission appointed for the purpose of adjudication. One thing is certain and sure, the extension would in a large degree help the Plainfield merchants, while the Scotch Plains merchants would not suffer to any noticeable extent.

agreed with John Sherman that the source of all the troubles and difficulties is deficiency in the revenue. Under Harrison and Morton, with a protective tariff, the country became the richest in the world and paid off a large portion of the National debt. Under Cleveland and the Wilson bill, he continued, the debt was greatly increased, the factories closed, and riots caused.

He then took up the topics of free silver and bimetalism and free silver, and said that every Nation that had tried free silver had failed. Even the United States has tried it with disastrous consequences. To make 53 cents of bullion into $1 means profit for somebody. "Who gets it?" he asked, and he answered, the western mine owners and the English syndicates that own mines there.

He then sketched the situation, as he imagined it, should Bryan be elected and drew a lurid picture. Such a situation, he was sure, would not happen, as all the right-minded men will vote for McKinley. He closed with an eloquent appeal to the voters which, when finished, brought forth tremendous applause.

That ended the meeting and the crowd soon dispersed.

BOOT WAS ON THE OTHER LEG.

McCauley, Who Prosecuted a Neighbor, Gets a Taste of His Own Medicine.

Alexander McCauley, of Scotch Plains, who gained so much unenviable notoriety among his neighbors for his prosecution of his old neighbor, Carl Bierstetter, whose chickens had eaten some of McCauley's corn, was himself brought before Judge Clark Saturday in a suit for damages brought by Philip Radin, a neighbor.

From the evidence presented it appeared that the young sons of McCauley had frequently walked over the grounds of Radin, as a short cut to their house, and in so doing had destroyed a tomato vine. Radin had afterward said that he would give McCauley a taste of his own sauce, served out on the old German, and hence the suit.

Judge Clark said he believed that the suit was brought solely to annoy McCauley, but the latter's own admissions left the Court no other course to pursue than to render a verdict for Radin, which he did for the sum of six cents and costs, which were paid by McCauley, who was loud in his criticisms.

EASY ANGLING, BUT COSTLY.

Two New Market Men Fined for Illegally Taken Bass From the Pond.

John Otto, the mill owner at New Market, drew off the water from his mill pond Monday morning and Theodore Boantree and Joseph Winckler, who live nearby, concluded that it would be a splendid opportunity to capture a catch of fish without much patience or expense. After the water had been drawn off it was not much trouble for them to spear a half bushel of bass and a few carp, and this they did with dexterity and rapidity. The fish were taken to the home of the former.

Game Warden Schuring heard of the instance and yesterday afternoon went to New Market with a search warrant and found the coveted fish in possession of Boantree. He immediately put the two fisherman under arrest and took them before Justice Storms on the charge of fishing in violation of the game laws. The justice found them guilty and fined them $20 and costs, which they paid. Boantree is employed as a barkeeper in the lake house.

MAY RUN MARSH FOR SENATOR.

The Democrats Seem to Think He Would Pacify Gold Men.

The Union County Democratic Executive Committee intends to make a vigorous effort to carry the county. They are casting about for a candidate for State Senator who will not be objectionable to the gold Democrats.

Prosecutor Fred C. Marsh, who made a gallant campaign last spring for the Mayoralty of Elizabeth, seems to the committee to be the strongest man who could be named for Senator. Up to last spring he had never been beaten in a political contest. Before he consented to run the Democrats were demoralized, but through the vigorous campaign he inaugurated they were placed in control of the City Council and Board of Education.

SENATORIAL SHADOWS.

BEARING OF LOCAL CONTESTS ON CHOICE OF SMITH'S SUCCESSOR.

Senators and Sheriffs to be Elected Next Month Will be an Important Factor —How W. E. Sackett Looks at It.

William E. Sackett, the well-known political writer, had the following in The Herald Monday morning concerning the situation in this State:

The contest for the Republican nomination of Senator in Monmouth revealed a rivalry between John Kean, of Elizabeth, and Governor John W. Griggs for the next vacancy in the United States Senate, and it is likely that all of the contests for the nominations will be tinctured by the same rivalry. The State Senatorial conventions have a direct relation to the struggle of 1899 for the chair at Washington which Senator James Smith now occupies. The Senator to be elected this fall will hold over into the Senate of 1899, and help to name the man. It is not to be assumed that Senator Smith is looking upon the Senatorial counties with an indifferent eye, safe as most of them may seem to be for the Republicans. He will doubtless throw his influence in behalf of favorable candidates on the Democratic side, and in the strife at the ballot boxes next month he will probably exert himself to pull as many of them as he can successfully through.

Which, by the way, is a very proper kind of an enterprise for Senator Smith to engage in. He has a perfect right to desire to succeed himself, and to employ all approved opportunities for the gratification of the desire.

It would scarcely be suspected that the Shrievalty contests could have any bearing, direct or indirect, upon the big Senatorial contest. But they will. The Sheriff, with the grand and petty jurors at his beck and call, and the property of luckless debtors at his mercy, is a big power in this county. He exerts an enormous influence. Like the State Senator, he who is elected to be a Sheriff this fall, will still be Sheriff in 1899, and no man seeking the support of a county forgets to pay his respects to this big dignitary of the Court House. His work and influence are always a big factor in determining the choice of the Assemblymen to be elected during his term to represent his county in the lower House, and every aspirant for Senatorial honors may be expected to do his level best to have the several conventions name and the several counties elect a sheriff who would prefer him above all competitors for the shining distinction.

The notable contests between Tice and Church in the recent Middlesex County Convention for its Shrievalty nomination is known now to have had a Senatorial end to it; and each of the rivalries for this particular county nomination will be sure to have its Senatorial sequel.

The imminence of this great struggle of 1896 will serve to lend a dignity and importance to these local contests that otherwise would attract no attention anywhere. The Union County convention especially will be watched with curious eyes by all the practical politicians. That happens to be Mr. Kean's own county, and it was Foster Voorhees's gubernatorial boom that took Union county from Mr. Kean in the gubernatorial convention of last fall and contributed so essentially to Governor Griggs's triumph there. It would be idle to say that Mr. Kean looks with favoring eye upon the apparent certainty of this fair-haired Senator's renomination. He may be presumed to see the advisability of having the Senator from his own county with him at the supreme moment. It might be a fatal weakness in his own campaign to have an unsympathetic statesman in that particular chair in the State Senate.

Those of the eight counties in which new Senators are to be chosen that will be the scenes of the severest strife between the parties are Somerset and Monmouth, Camden, Essex, Gloucester, Salem and Union are assured to the Republicans. Warren cannot be wrested from the Democrats, but there is sure to be a battle royal between the two political armies for the mastery in Monmouth and Somerset.

RAIN DROPS AND REPUBLICANISM.

Stormy Weather Interferes With the G. O. P. Meetings.

COL. POPE ELOQUENT AND FORCIBLE.

The Tenor of His Remarks Were Such as to Strike the Popular Fancy of His Audience, and He Was Frequently Greeted With Enthusiastic Applause.

"This campaign will be a stormy one," predicted a well known politician, but he didn't mean it in the same sense as the Republicans of this city have experienced. Rain has been the steady accompaniment for every move they have made. The mass meeting, which was held at Music Hall, Tuesday, was no exception, and rain fell almost all the evening.

No one can expect to get a big crowd out in a storm, but the Republicans took extra pains to inform the people that there was to be a meeting. The Independent Fife and Drum Corps was placed in a special car and a circuit made of the city, while colored fire and fireworks aided in stirring up the general excitement. The trolley parade finally ended in front of Music Hall, the band marched in and the crowd gathered. The hall was fairly well filled, not only with the recognized McKinley faces, but some of the Bryan supporters were visible here and there, coming to hear what the Republicans had to say for themselves.

The campaign glee club made its first appearance under the direction of William N. Runyon before the meeting opened and gave several selections that were loudly applauded. Assemblyman W. B. Codington called the meeting to order and introduced the chairman, Col. Mason W. Tyler.

The usual chairman's remarks followed. Col. Tyler spoke of the importance of the standard, something which, he said, was fundamental and could be relied upon. The list of the other officers of the meeting was read. They were as follows:

Vice-Presidents, William Rockwell, C. H. Bugg, Isaiah L. McVoy, D. S. Roberts, Israel C. Pierson, H. E. Bowen, H. S. Thatcher, J. Frank Wallace, Jacob Kirkner, Spencer Conway, William Mayhew, S. C. Peck, E. E. Anthony, James Clawson, Hon. Charles D. Reed, Charles Matthews and Charles Hart; secretaries, Walter F. Murray, Eugene Moore, H. E. Clark and Robert Guttridge.

Then Col. Charles H. Pope, of Missouri, was introduced as the speaker of the evening. His speech was one of oratory and argument, and he seemed to catch the popular fancy so that his remarks were frequently interrupted by loud and continued applause. After the glee club was heard again the platform was reassigned to Col. Pope

He told of a recent visit to Philadelphia and of there going to Independence Hall and seeing the original of the Constitution, which is on exhibition. The platform which was made at Chicago assailed this Constitution, so he declared, and he was glad to be with a party that stood by it.

This country is at a crisis, he said, where only careful thought can preserve the honor and integrity of the Nation. They would be dragged in the dust if the infamous Chicago platform is carried out. He referred to the great conspiracy at the time of the Civil War, which was foiled by Lincoln and the other patriotic men of the country, and then declared that a new conspiracy for power and plunder was being started to build up a new Confederacy. The true heart of all patriots are standing together, he said, to preserve the honor and integrity of the Nation. It is cheering to find, he went on, that the brains and intelligence of the old Democracy are lined up against this revolution. "All honor to the old Democracy," he exclaimed. "All honor to the fearless old Democratic journalists and the Democratic journals, for they are nearly all with us. On their shields shall be engraved in golden letters, 'Principle above party.'"

He then discussed the character of the two men who have been nominated for the Presidency. William McKinley, he declared, was mentally, morally and politically great enough for the American people. McKinley, he said, shouldered a musket and went to the defence of his country at seventeen years when the Popocratic candidate was in his swaddling clothes, cutting his teeth on a 16 to 1 silver rattle.

Of Bryan, he admitted that he is clean in mind and morals, but he criticised him politically. Bryan was, he stated, everything by turns and nothing long. He was inconsistent. He next spoke of the issues. He

COUNTY SOLONS AT ODDS

MIDDLESEX AND SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS DISPUTE OVER A BRIDGE.

Each County Claims that the Other Should Pay for the Construction—Litigation Likely to Grow Out of It.

There is likely to be litigation between Middlesex and Somerset counties, growing out of the construction of a bridge over Green Brook, at Bound Brook. The Freeholders of Middlesex County have already considered the matter, but as yet have taken no decisive action. The bridge to be rebuilt has long been out of repair, and to reconstruct it the county will be put to an expense of about $1,000. The question was raised as to whether the bridge was a line one between Somerset and Middlesex counties. The bridge is over an artificial waterway that enters the Raritan river below Bound Brook at right angles to the course of that stream. This artificial water way was constructed by the Central Railroad of New Jersey several years ago, and took the place of the old Green Brook, which extended in a diagonal course from the the river. The old Green Brook marked the boundary between the two counties, but the latest surveying and investigation shows that the waterway does not mark the line, and the new bridge to be constructed will be wholly within Middlesex county, thus throwing the entire expense upon Middlesex.

Two years ago the two counties joined in the construction of another bridge over another portion of the artificial waterway. At that time Somerset county claimed this artificial waterway as the boundary line between the two counties, and the bridge erected was accordingly regarded as a line bridge, and Middlesex county, without hesitation, paid one half of the cost of the construction.

This former claim of Somerset county has now been proven incorrect. The bridge was not a line bridge, but was wholly within Somerset county. Middlesex county should not have paid one cent of the cost of construction. Middlesex will, therefore, demand of Somerset county that the latter repay one half of the cost of the former bridge. If the demand is not acceded to a suit will be instituted in the courts to compel Somerset county to return the money.

A Misstatement of Facts.

The item published in The News Tuesday stating that the condition of Harrison street to be in a bad way and fast going to rack and ruin, is entirely contradictory to the facts, and an unjust reflection on the borough administration. Last year, Harrison street was partially macadamized, but the funds for this purpose were exhausted before the last two hundred feet of the street, between Greenbrook road and the bridge over Stony brook, was completed, and it was necessary to stop work. Now, however, the street commissioner has a gang of men at work finishing up the work on the street, and in a few days it will be in fine shape. A large culvert is also being built to drain off the surplus water which has always gathered at the corner of Greenbrook road and Harrison street, and when all the work is finished the thoroughfare will need no further repairs for a long time.

Borough Republican Delegates.

The Republicans of North Plainfield held their primary in the public school building Tuesday night for the purpose of selecting five delegates to go to Somerville to nominate candidates for Senate and Assembly. Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., called the meeting to order. Ex-Mayor Charles Place was chosen chairman and H. B. Reed, secretary. The delegates selected were W. W. Howland, B. A. Hegeman, Jr., N. B. Smalley, P. A. Emmons, from the borough, and J. Worth Coddington from the township. The delegates were empowered to fill vacancies.

Small Damage For a Life.

The jury in the $10,000 suit for damages brought by Daisy L. Bogart against the Pennsylvania Railroad for the killing of her brother, Harry, by a train at Wood avenue crossing, Linden, October 31, 1895, came into court yesterday morning after being out all night with a verdict of $1,825 for the plaintiff. The family of Gustave Haefner, who was also killed, settled with the railroad company for $5,000, while the coachman, who was severely hurt, received $1,500.

Death of an Estimable Woman.

All that was mortal of Mrs. Phoebe E. King, a resident for many years at 57 Clark street, Jersey City, was committed to mother earth yesterday afternoon. The late Mrs. King was the mother of Frank King, well-known in this city, and leaves besides him, a husband, and a daughter, to mourn the loss of a christian wife and mother. Her death occurred on Sunday, and was the result of paralysis.

WISDOM IS THE GOAL SOUGHT FOR

Organization of Educational Department of the Y. M. C. A.

DR. RICHARDS HOLDS UP EXAMPLES.

All Men of Lasting Greatness are Those Who Were Filled With Intelligence—The Y. M. C. A. Doing Their Part for Obtaining Education

Politics and rain combined to keep many away from the opening of the educational department of the Y. M. C. A. Tuesday, but there was a good attendance, nevertheless. Stephen Cahoone, chairman of the educational committee, presided. Opening prayer was offered by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell. An interesting address was delivered by Rev. W. R. Richards, D. D., who spoke in part as follows:

"One of the first questions that one of us would have been able to answer if we were asked was who was the wisest man? We would have answered, Solomon. It is interesting to take the books of the Bible which come to us with the name of that man, either written by him or under the inspiration of his example and influence in Israel and see what they have to say about wisdom—the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and Job. The one thing to be had more precious than rubies is a good education.

"The forefathers in our own land made it their principle in every little hamlet, before they had comfortable homes for themselves, almost as soon as they la'd foundations for the church of God, to select a place for a school. That great ruler, Alfred the Great, was not only a learned man himself, but he also appreciated intelligence in his people, and he took great pains to afford facilities for learning to his people.

"Wisdom should be sought for itself. It is true that Solomon said that riches and honors were in his hands, but that was not all that we should seek her for. Man glories in exercising the strength of his body, and in the same way one rejoices in exercising his mind. Every artist and artisan should rejoice in his work. Stradivarius delighted in making violins, which have been surpassed for years. Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' though not rewarded in money, was a delight to its author. Everyone should make his life work not a mere drudge for the pay that is given for it, but rather a constant source of delight to himself and others."

The first sessions of the classes will be held as follows: Mechanical course, Monday, October 19th; bookkeeping, Wednesday, October 21st; stenography, Monday, October 19th; Spanish, Tuesday, October 20th; German, Friday, October 23d.

Time-Saving Invention.

Labor-saving machines are constantly being invented, but many of them do not accomplish their purpose. Manning & Son, the enterprising West Front street monument dealers, have just introduced something new in their workshop that does the work much more rapidly and with greater skill than by the old hand method of hammer and chisel. It is a rapid, vibrating hammer, the power for which is furnished by air an compressor. Any chisel may be used. With this machine, the operator is able to do the work of three men and with more precision. Messrs. Manning have a large selection of granite and marble monuments, which they are selling at low figures. This new machine will enable them to do more and better work at a less charge. They have not only a large local trade, but control much of that in the outlying districts.

Yale Club Officers.

The annual meeting of the Plainfield Yale Club was held Tuesday night at the Y. M. C. A. building. It was decided to hold the regular alumni dinner this year and the president was instructed to take charge of it. It will probably be held in December. Henry L. McGee and Henry B. Lovell were elected to membership, making forty-three members in all. Officers were then elected as follows: President, A. H. Atterbury; vice-president, Herbert L. Moody; secretary and treasurer, Arthur Lovell; executive committee, John Leal, Rev. W. R. Richards and S. St. John McCutchen.

Struck Quicksand.

The Board of Freeholders of Union county are having trouble in building a culvert on South avenue near Clinton avenue. The culvert is over 80 feet long, and the presence of quicksand in large quantities makes it difficult to get a foundation to work on. The culvert on Clinton avenue has been completed.

Puzzle With a Cold Name.

George Ulrich, of East Fifth street, has just secured a copyright on a new puzzle of his own invention. It is called the "North Pole" puzzle.

NO SILVER LINING IN THEIR CLOUD.

Palmer and Buckner Democrats Argue For Gold.

A. H. ATTERBURY PRINCIPAL SPEAKER

He Says the Free Silver Advocates Fail to Tell How the Price of Silver Will be Increased or How Workingman Will Get Better Wages.

The National Democratic Club re-assumed their meetings Tuesday night, and a fairly good-sized audience was in attendance in the rooms on Muhlenberg place. The meeting was addressed by the club's president, A. H. Atterbury. Many arguments, he said, had been advanced recently showing the fallacy of the free silver policy which would cause a depression generally in business and would affect wages. Continuing, Mr. Atterbury spoke in part as follows:

"Facts prove to us that tampering with the currency makes business poor and creates an uncertainty. Bryan and his followers tell us that the greater number of silver dollars we have the better it is. But you cannot clothe yourself with dollars, neither can you eat dollars. It is when you can exchange them that you get the advantage of the money. Allowing that wages were increased in Plainfield, you would not be able to buy any more flour than there is in this city. Silver is now worth one-half what it was twenty years ago. Bryan tells you that under his plan 'the price of silver will go up, but he doesn't tell you how it will go up. He also tells you it will make higher prices, and in that respect he tells the truth. However, he doesn't tell you that wages will be higher. I read carefully the account given in The Daily Press of the silver meeting held Saturday evening, and I failed to see one argument in favor of free silver. The speakers declared against monopolies, but do you know that the silver trust is the worst of all. It is controlled absolutely by a dozen or fifteen men, who secured the passage of the Bland act, which saddled on the country an immense amount of silver."

Mr. Atterbury then read extracts from Macauley's works, showing the condition of affairs many years ago under the rule of free coinage of silver, showing how business was depressed and people were driven to desperation. The speaker cited England, Austria and several other gold standard countries as being among the strongest nations of the world.

The last part of the hour was de-voted to a discussion of various questions asked by those present. Dexter O. Tiffany and C. P. Bull were among the sound money men present who spoke regarding the present great issues, and they as well as Mr. Atterbury answered several questions on the money question. It was announced that Dexter O Tiffany would be the speaker on Thursday evening. The meeting then adjourned.

Serious Charges Being Investigated.

The Grand Jury at the Union County Court, Elizabeth, will have two Plainfield cases to consider. One is that against Ernest Liecht for the abduction of Louise Giles, which comes up today. The other is against Lawrence Wallace, better known as "Larry" Wallace for attempting to wreck a train on the Jersey Central. As will be remembered, a pile of ties was discovered on the tracks near Terrill road, and the evidence pointed toward Wallace as the would be train wrecker. The crime is a serious one and should he be convicted he may have to serve a long term. The extreme penalty is forty years. This case will be considered by the grand jury in a few days.

Praise and Song.

A praise service will be held at the Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel, Washingtonville, Sunday evening. A chorus of sixteen voices, under the leadership of H. O. Newman, will assist in the musical portion of the exercises. Rev. Dr. Gibbs, of Millington, is expected to preach.

Plainfield Man Got the Contract.

On Monday evening last a contract for grading, macadamizing, curbing and guttering on one of the public streets of the borough of Hasbrouck Heights, Bergen county, was awarded to David Bowden, of this city, the work to be under the supervision of F. A. Dunham, C. E.

UNABLE TO CONVERSE

A. M. RUNYON SUFFERS A PARALYTIC STROKE OF HIS VOCAL ORGANS.

It Will be Several Days Before the Attending Physician Can Tell Whether or Not He Will Recover His Health.

A. M. Runyon, the undertaker, was taken with a light stroke of paralysis while in his office Tuesday afternoon. He was taken to his home on Madison avenue and Dr. T. H. Tomlinson was summoned. Upon examination it was discovered that only the nerves governing the vocal organs were effected. Prompt remedies were applied and by nightfall Mr. Runyon was somewhat more comfortable.

Today, Dr. Tomlinson says the only noticeable change is a very slight one for the better and that it will be several days before it can be determined whether he will recover or whether the paralysis will extend. Last July, while at Poland Springs, Mr. Runyon noticed the first premonitions of the *trouble which came upon him so sud*denly yesterday. On Monday, August 31, the symptoms again appeared and Dr. Tomlinson was consulted. He prescribed and the paralytic symptoms disappeared, only to manifest themselves decidedly and threatningly yesterday. It is the physician's belief that the trouble is the result of the severe nervous shock which Mr. Runyon suffered in the railroad collision three years ago near Greenville, when a Long Branch express ran into the 11:30 Somerville train in which he and his son, E. E. Runyon, were passengers.

REGISTRATION FIGURES.

Indications Are That There Will be a Heavy Vote This Year.

Tuesday was the first day of registration and a few names were added to the lists which the Boards of Election had not already secured in their house-to-house canvass. There is still one day more for registering Tuesday, Oct. 27, from 1 to 9 o'clock p. m. The 1895 registration, published in the table below, is the total number of names on the poll lists, and it is probable that the last day of registration this year will bring the total up to a number greater than that of a year ago. The registration by wards was as follows:

First ward, First district	1006	1006
First ward, Second district	197	197
Second ward, First district	574	574
Second ward, Second district	336	336

LINER HITS FERRYBOAT.

A Sharp Knock in the Fog on North River With No Great Damage.

The New Jersey Central ferryboat Central, which left Jersey City in the fog at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning, was hit in midstream by the Atlantic transport steamship Europe bound out for London The Europe struck the Central on the port side. Engines had been reversed on both vessels, and the impact was not severe.

The heavy guard of the ferryboat and a part of her upper rail were broken. About 150 passengers were jarred a good deal and somewhat startled, but nobody was hurt. A number of Plainfield commuters were on the ferryboat.

Millman on a Rampage.

A millman came over the mountain Wednesday to serve his customers as usual. When he completed his duties he visited several saloons until finally he reached Park avenue in a sad state of inebriation. Patrolman McCue landed him in the lockup and this afternoon he was taken before City Judge DeMeza. He had not quite recovered from the effects of his overindulgence and was profuse in his promise to behave in the future. He appeared quite harmless and the Judge suspended sentence. After he departed he thanked everybody for their kindness and promised, should they ever come where he was, that he would make things square. He gave his name as Daniel Moore and said he was fifty-three years of age.

Discussion in the Republican Caucus.

The Republicans of Warren township met in the Mt. Bethel Hall Tues*day afternoon at 2 o'clock to elect* delegates to the County convention which is to be held at Somerville on Saturday next. George Sage was the chairman and some 300 persons were present. From the start it was evident that there would be some dissensions from what is known as the old Republican regime. Two sets of tickets were placed in the field and the following were elected: John Wendell, Isiah Coriell, Reuben Codington, Andrew Flammer and A. D. Martin.

Alex. Bass, of West Eighth street, who has been seriously ill for some time past, is no better and there is much anxiety felt concerning his recovery.

SCENIC BEAUTIES OF DEVONSHIRE.

Miss Caroline Fitz Randolph Describes a Pleasure Trip.

SEEN FROM THE TOP OF A COACH.

A Bracing Air and a Clear Sky Made a Strong Impression of the Thanksgiving Season of This Country—First a View of the Tweed, Then and Then the Mountains.

The many friends of Miss Caroline Fitz Randolph will be interested to learn through this paper that she has returned to Berlin, for a second year of study. She went thither a year ago with a Wellesley chum and co-graduate, and with another young lady (whose home is also in this State) and worked on until July last on special courses of music and German language and literature. She spent the month of July in the Isle of Wight, and during August and September she sojourned at Oxford and visited in London, in Devonshire and in Nottinghamshire—the last named county having been, three centuries ago and more, the home of the Fitz-Randolph family. From a letter descriptive of her trip to Devon we are permitted to copy the following passages:

Collingwood Villa,
Ilfracombe, Devonshire.

The which same high-sounding name of a place stands for a lodging house, which has, however, the great advantage of being perched on a hillside opposite a beautiful bay and commanding a wide view of the Bristol channel. The channel is a good broad arm of the sea, salt and strong, and full of great waves and whitecaps. Across it on a clear day, one sees dimly the Welsh hills—a faint line on the horizon.

We came down here from Oxford, and find clean rooms, plenty of good wild and romantic surroundings. The Devonshire Coast is many times as beautiful as its reputation has led us to believe it; and very heartily glad I am that we came, and that I have seen this most charming part of England.

Besides its beauty, Devonshire is famous for its fine cattle, its delicious cream and its equally delicious cider. The weather has been rainy, as it was of late in Oxford, except for two grand days of which I am about to tell you; but all the time you must imagine an air like our late October, with very bracing, strong winds. Indeed, the cider and some roast goose we had at Lynton, and the "feel of the air" made a strong impression of Thanksgiving season on our American senses.

To give you an account of our expedition and of the finest two days I have had in England, I may premise that on Saturday afternoon, after I had "done" my two hours of music, we sallied forth and boarded the coach for Lynton—twenty miles distant to the east, along the coast. No railroad is within a score of miles of that charming village, and so the coaches are not gilded and ornamental but plain, mail-carrying, freight laiden affairs, with four strapping horses and one "relay" on the road. Therefore, being sensible turnouts, they are reasonably cheap; and we paid nine shillings for our return tickets, good for forty miles of riding up and down three hundred feet Devonshire hills, and along the ruggedest coast. The weather was perfect, with a bright sun shining, and plenty of fleecy clouds hurrying across the blue. The hills are higher than our Plainfield mountains, in the main running from five hundred to a thousand feet above the sea; and they rise steeply from the narrow valleys, being cut into single peaks, and have many rapid streams which hurry down rocky glens and gorges to the channels. The roads—which are centuries old, and perfectly kept—lead straight up the sides and over the tops of the hills, and then drop down to the valleys again. They seem often to be inclined across the forty-five degrees-angle; and the grades are so long and so steep that they seemed to us inexperienced people quite impossible for any horses. And there is never a "thank-you-man" obstruction in all England, so far as I can make out. But the horses are used to it, and pluck, and strong of lung, and they go at the hills with a will, galloping up the first twenty or thirty yards of the steepest, and then settling down to work, with heads well bent and great muscles standing out. Going down the hills was rather scary at first; but they have all manner of break and-boot contrivances, and the horses are sure footed. That was a grand ride! The country changes with every hill you cross and with every curve in the road. There are thickly-wooded,

THE JUNIOR ENDEAVORERS PARADE 983 STRONG

A NOVEL AND IMPOSING DEMONSTRATION OF HOW THE LITTLE PEOPLE ARE INTERESTED.

Boys and Girls Hardly Out of Their Babyhood or Just in Their Teens Trudged About to Show Their Forces—Afterward They Had a Meeting All to Themselves at Convention Hall—What Was Said and Done.

Never did Plainfield see such an army of invaders as marched through her streets last Friday afternoon and finally took possession of Convention Hall. It was a wonderful army and what was most noticeable of all was the size of its soldiers. They were children, bright happy-faced children, and they all wore the orange and black convention badge, and every child carried a little American flag. 'Twas the Junior Endeavorers. There were hundreds of them; some little tots of barely four years whose baby eyes looked innocently about, and others who had just entered their teens, sturdy little lads and pretty little lassies. It was a sight well worth seeing, this great army of children, and then to realize that here were the future rulers of our country, the Christian Endeavor Society of the next century, all thus testifying their allegiance to the King of Kings. Curly haired little misses of wealthy families marched contentedly by the side of their bright-eyed companion of less fortunate circumstances. Here was equality for all. How proud they all were, too, of being Juniors.

The senior societies have been in the majority at the other sessions of the Christian Endeavor convention but the juniors were not forgotten and last Friday afternoon they held their service at Convention Hall.

The service was preceeded by a grand parade of juniors and truly it was a great sight. The Juniors began to assemble soon after two o'clock and from that time until the parade started soon after three o'clock, the streets in the vicinity of the Crescent Avenue church were crowded with the bands of expected Juniors and the many spectators who came to see this wonderful juvenile army.

The chief marshal of the parade was Rev. Charles L. Goodrich and the three divisions were under the charge of David E. Titsworth, Walter Harris and Rev. W. C. Donnell. After the excitement attendant on the distribution of the flags and badges, the little Endeavors were, at last, arranged in line and headed by Sergeant Isley in command of a squad of police, and the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, the long procession started. The tiny feet could not tramp in the dust and mud of the streets and so along the sidewalk they marched out Crescent avenue, to Park avenue, to West Seventh street, to Madison avenue, to West Fifth street, to East Fifth street, to Watchung avenue, to the Convention Hall, into which they marched.

The Junior societies in line were the following churches and under the charge of the following: Trinity Reformed of Plainfield, seventy children, Mrs. Cornelius Schenck; First Presbyterian of Plainfield, forty children, Miss Pruden; Warren Chapel of Plainfield, fifty-five children, Mrs. J. O. McKelvey; Seventh-Day Baptist of Plainfield, thirty-two children, Mrs. H. M. Maxson; Congregational of Plainfield, twenty children, Rev. C. L. Goodrich; Crescent Avenue of Plainfield, eleven children, Miss Carrie Dewey; East Third Street Mission of Plainfield, six children; Washingtonville Chapel, twenty-one children, Miss Nettie Beeching; Park Avenue Baptist of Plainfield, twenty six children, Mrs. W. S. Lowry; First Presbyterian of Westfield, thirty children, Miss Clark; First Baptist of Westfield, thirty-two children, Mrs. C. F. Conant; First Presbyterian of Cranford, fifty children, James Mason; First Presbyterian of Roselle, twenty children, Miss Tenney; First Baptist of Roselle, eleven children, Miss Bogert; Third Reformed of Raritan four children, Miss Coleman; Baptist of South Plainfield, thirty two children, Walter L. Harris; Monroe Avenue chapel, of Plainfield, seventy-six children, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell; First M. E., of Plainfield, fifty-two children, Rev. C. B. Barnes, D. D.; First Presbyterian of Dunellen, forty-seven children, Miss Lowe; Bound Brook Juniors, thirty-six children, Rev. T. I. Davis; Willow Grove Junior Union, thirteen children, Miss Lee; Elizabeth Junior Union, twenty-eight children, Mrs. Louis Williams; First Baptist of Scotch Plains, thirty-two children, Rev. J. S. Bralser; Grace M. E., of Plainfield, seventy-six children, Rev. H. J. Johnston; Reformed of Lebanon, four children.

In they marched, singing as they came, while the chorus choir on the platform, led by D. E. Titsworth, sent back the song, "Our Junior Band." Just 983 Juniors entered the hall and filled the center sections of seats. When they had settled themselves the tiny American flags began to flutter in welcome. Rev. A. W. Spooner, State superintendent of Junior work, who presided, waved a response with his handkerchief, in which the choir joined, while a perfect sea of moving flags re-echoed the welcome. A silent prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer, followed. Then all united in the hymn, "Sunshine in the Soul." The twenty-fourth Psalm was read responsively and then, while the Juniors offered up their mites, the instrumental trio gave several well-rendered selections.

When the last penny had been deposited in the collection baskets, Rev. Dr. Spooner introduced Miss Rita Pond, a Plainfield Junior, who made the address of welcome. And right well did she do it, for her clear voice rang through that entire hall and she spoke and acted so unaffectedly and sincerely that the hearts of her hearers went out to her on the spot. The remarks were short but well chosen and the welcome made as general and hearty as could be wished. Dr. Spooner was greatly surprised but highly pleased and as he replied to the welcome he said so.

"I didn't know," he exclaimed, "that we had a girl orator of the east that is a peer of the Boy Orator of the West. That's a compliment to the Boy Orator." And really his praise was well deserved.

He then told of his reception at the depot by Juniors and told of his delight in the city and its Endeavorers. Another hymn followed his response.

Then Rev. C. H. Tyndall, Ph. D., of New York, preached an illustrated sermon to the Juniors on "God's Contract Between the Righteous and the Wicked." His text was from the first Psalm. His remarks were very simple, so that the youngest might easily understand. He showed his comparison with examples of goodly and stunted apples and the dead branch and the branch of an evergreen tree. It was like the latter, he said, that God wished his Juniors to be.

After another hymn the Consecration service was held, with Rev. W. R. Ackert, of Hoboken, leader. A few words of counsel and cheer and then he called the roll of the different societies, each responding with a verse of Scripture or a song.

The junior societies from the M. E. churches were not Junior Endeavor societies, but Junior Epworth Leagues. They were in line with the rest, however, and took their share in the services at the hall.

Then all united in singing the hymn "Onward Christian Endeavorers" and the great assemblage of youthful Endeavorers was dismissed with the Mizpah benediction.

DENOMINATIONAL RALLIES.

They Were Held in the Different Churches Last Friday Afternoon.

The denominational rallies were held in the different churches last Friday afternoon beginning at 4:15 o'clock and all were well attended.

The Presbyterian rally in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church was well attended. Rev. Samuel M. Studdiford, D. D., presided. Miss Catherine Jones spoke in behalf of the Board of Home Missions. Rev. William Dulles, Jr., treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions spoke briefly in behalf of the work of that Board Rev. John Dixon, D. D., chairman of the committee on Synodical Home Missions briefly presented the work of the committee. President French spoke on the resolutions of the Presbyterian church and our young people, making special mention of the action taken at the last General Assembly. All in all the meeting was a most interesting and profitable one. The congregational rally was held in the Congregational church. Dr. Amory H. Bradford, of Montclair, New Jersey, presided. In his opening remarks he emphasized the fact that their must be intelligent faith and loyal service in the church. The meeting was then thrown open and a number of short and pointed speeches made. It was brought out that the Endeavor movement was founded in the Congregational denomination and they were proud of it.

Between 200 and 300 enthusiastic Baptists gathered in the First Baptist church for their rally. A spirited address was made by the leader Rev. J. A. Francis, and he was followed by Rev. Judson Conklin, M. T. S. Lumbor, T. J. Cross and Dr. Yerkes, who all spoke along the line of denominational fellowship. A delightful spirit of prayer also pervaded the meeting.

The other rallies were held as follows: Methodist, Rev. N. D. Aspinwall, of Hancocks Bridge, leader, at Methodist (Vincent) Chapel. Methodist Protestant, Rev. W. D. Stultz, of Bridgeton, leader, at First Presbyterian Chapel. Seventh Day Baptist, Rev. L. E. Livermore, of Plainfield, leader, at Seventh Day Baptist Church. Church of Christ (Disciples,) Elder B. W. Hand, of Plainfield, leader, at Liberty Street Mission. Lutheran, Rev. J. F. Krechting, of New Germantown, leader, at Y. M. C. A. Building.

Bert Mundy, of Park avenue, is suffering from an attack of exzema in the eye.

DEPRAVED CONFFSSIONS OF YOUNG ELMER CLAWSON.

Admits That He Killed Harry Hodgetts and Says He Intended to Shoot Reuben Abel—Expert Testimony Offered.

The defence in the trial of Elmer Clawson, the youthful murderer of Harry Hodgett, completed their case in the Somerset court last Friday morning.

Clawson was placed on the stand and told a startling story. He admitted that he planned to shoot Hodgetts and accomplished his purpose. He then hurried to Bernardsville to "get the other man." The second man was Reuben Abel, ticket agent at Bernardsville. Clawson said the reason he wanted to shoot Abel was because he helped Hodgetts. The witness said he was whipped by Hodgetts when he lived with him, and did not like him much for it.

The witness was wary in answering questions. He said he gave himself up because he knew the men were after him. His mother had told him they would be after him if he shot Hodgetts, and that he would then be hung.

In reply to a question as to whether he thought he did wrong, he answered: "No, sir!" He said the reason he shot Hodgetts was because he had to.

The State began rebuttal evidence, showing that Clawson always acted like a boy with sound mind, and Dr. John Ward, of the Trenton Asylum, will be the expert witness for the State.

Thursday, Mrs. Phillips, of Bernardsville, testified that while Clawson was staying in her family last July she had occasion to reprimand him for staying out too late at night. The next night she saw Clawson mixing some green stuff with apple sauce. The following morning she saw him at the barn vomiting, and some of the green apple sauce was near him. He admitted that he had taken Paris green and said that he had to do it.

When Dr. Gray was on the stand the counsel for the defence put hypothetical questions to him. He was asked what would be his opinion of a boy who had not walked until two years old, nor talked until three years old, had scarlet fever and diphtheria at six, injured on the head between nine and ten, had another blow between ten and twelve years, attempted suicide, and had occasional hallucinations until seventeen years old. The doctor replied that such a boy must have been born an imbecile.

GOLD MEN NOMINATE IN SOMERSET.

Sound Money Democrats Form a Permanent Organization.

The Sound Money Democrats of Somerset county met at Somerville, last Friday for organization. E. M. Wright, Esq., was elected as Chairman and George M. LaMonte as secretary.

A central committee was appointed, who will appoint a committee from every polling place in the county to look after the sound money Democratic vote. The following gentlemen compose the central committee: Wm. V. Steele, chairman, Hon. George W. Pace, Joseph W. Ballantine, of Somerville, Calvin Corle, of Bedminster, Geo M. LaMonte, of Bound Brook.

Geo. V. Vanderveer was nominated for State Senator and Charles A. Moran for the Assembly. The meeting was a very enthusiastic one.

Geo. V. Vanderveer, the nominee for Senator, is a very popular man. He is vice-president of the Second National Bank, in Somerville, Treasurer of the Somerville Building Loan, of the Somerville Publishing Company, and of the Central Hook and Ladder Co. He is a brother in law of Judge J. D. Bartine.

AT A RIPE OLD AGE.

Miss Margaret Ewing Dies at the Age of 99 Years—Conscious to the Last.

In connection with the death of Miss Margaret Ewing who died at her home in Fanwood Township last Thursday night, at the age of ninety nine years, there is quite a little history. Her death was quiet and peaceful. Last Thursday night she went to bed as usual, suffering from a two days illness but the next morning she was dead. She was the daughter of John Ewing, and she was one of eleven children, and the last of the family in the country. She had been a resident in this neighborhood for the past fifty years, living alternately with her nephews, Charles and William Thoms. She came here from Johnstone, Scotland, about fifty years ago.

In Scotland she was a member of the Presbyterian church, and to the faith she strictly adhered during her long residence here. She was one of God's chosen people, inasmuch as she had led a pure Christian life.

Prominent Elizabethian Dies Suddenly.

Moses W. Mulford, a prominent lumber dealer of Elizabeth, dropped dead in his office this morning. His death was caused by heart failure. He was a prominent Democrat and was well known in this city and, during its existence, was one of the directors of the Middlesex Gun Club. He was about forty years of age.

SEVEN YEARS' GROWTH

MIANTONOMAH TRIBE OF RED MEN CELEBRATE THEIR ANNIVERSARY.

All the Great Chiefs and Several Visiting Tribes Were There—Speech s by Many of Them—Names of Some of the Visitors.

Anniversaries are always pleasant events, and when the Miantonomah Tribe, No. 118, I. O. R. M., celebrated its 7th year of existence Friday evening, the celebration was in no wise an exception to the rule. All the great chiefs were present, and a number of visiting tribes who entered into the festivities with a will. It was seven years ago than Miantonomah Tribe was instituted, with eighty-five charter members, by Norman C. Magué. Since then the tribe has grown steadily. At the present time there are 120 members. The lodge is in a healthy, prosperous condition and bids fair to be one of the best in the State.

William Newcorn was master of ceremonies last evening, and his peculiar, happy style, mingled with the speeches by the great chiefs and visiting Indians, made the event one of pleasure to all. After the speeches a bountiful collation was served, followed by a smoker. The State officers present were:

Great Prophet, W. J. Forsyth, of Jersey City; Great Sachem, John Russell, of Washington; Great Senior Sagamore, D. B. Peterson, of Camden; Great Junior Sagamore, W. J. Smyth, of Asbury Park; Great Chief of Records, D. M. Stevens, of Camden; Great Sanap, G. C. Magué, of Plainfield.

Tribe delegations were present from Perth Amboy, Cartaret, Somerville, Raritan and Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe, of Plainfield. The committee in charge of the anniversary consisted of D. C. Allen, William Newcorn, William Westphal, C. L. Holstein and George Houseman.

SALVATIONISTS AWHEEL.

The Cycle Brigade and Band Parade Saturday Night.

The cycle brigade and band from the New York headquarters of the Salvation Army visited the local corps Saturday afternoon and remained until this morning. Ensign Gooding, the captain of the brigade, was in command. Brigadier George French, chief divisional officer, Adjutant Rhinhardson, national cashier, and Ensign Cherrington, private secretary to Mrs. Booth-Tucker, were also present and assisted at the meetings here.

The bicycle band rode out on their wheels and expected to arrive in time for a parade at 4:30 o'clock. Several punctures had to be repaired and so they did not arrive until an hour after that time. A parade was held in the evening and a large number attended the meeting that followed. Good meetings were held yesterday and largely attended, despite the heavy rain in the evening.

Can Be Used by Both.

Mayor Gilbert recently announced his decision in reference to the dispute between the American Volunteers and the Salvation Army as to whether or not the former should have exclusive use of the vacant lot near the Babcock building for open air meetings. The Mayor decided that the same plan which has been in vogue since the Volunteers were formed should be continued, which is the use of the round on alternate nights by the two organizations.

Anniversary of the Turn Verein.

The tenth anniversary of the Plainfield Gesang und Turn Verein will be celebrated on October 19th with appropriate exercises. The committee have been tireless in their efforts to arrange an entertainment that promises to make this event one of the greatest in the history of the society. Societies from different parts of the State, including the Arion Singing Society and National Turn Verein, of Newark, will attend.

A Pleasant Surprise.

A birthday surprise party was tendered to Louis Bimble, at his home on Harrison street, North Plainfield, last Friday. About twenty couples were present and danced to music furnished by Messrs Blake and Keller. The guests met at J. Keller's home nearby, and went over in a body, where they surprised Mr. Bimble completely. The festivites continued until two o'clock next morning.

Looking After the Game Laws.

It has been said, and truthfully, too, that there's no use in making laws unless they are enforced. Thursday, Game Wardens Sisty and Sebring detected two Italians shooting highbirders on the mountain back of Dunellen, and they were forthwith arrested, arraigned and fined $20 and costs.

Plenty of Political Talk.

Lee Fairchild, of California, will address a Republican mass meeting in Music Hall, Tuesday evening, October 27th, and it is possible that ex-Congressman Roswell G. Horr will speak at a meeting to be held in the same hall October 31st. The meeting to be held in Music Hall next Tuesday evening will be in charge of the Young Men's Republican Club and there will be music by a glee club.

END OF THE ENDEAVORERS GREAT CONVENTION

IMPRESSIVE SERVICES MARKED THE FINAL GATHERINGS IN HALL AND CHURCHES LAST NIGHT.

An Elevating and Helpful Spirit Dominated the Consecration Service—Moody Made a Passionate Appeal for the Saving of Souls—Nearly 200 Old Officers Were Re-elected to Serve for the Ensuing Year.

Who that was present will ever forget the last service of the '96 convention, the consecration meeting? The other meetings were impressive, they were crowded, but in none was the spirit of intense earnestness so great. The delegates seemed to realize that they met for the last time and they came determined to obtain as much spiritual strength as they could to keep them during the days of trial in the future. It was, indeed, a fitting close for one of the grandest Christian Endeavor conventions ever held in the State, yes, even in the United States. Long before the doors were unlocked the crowd began to gather outside of Convention Hall. Fifteen minutes before the meeting was to open, the hall was filled while the crowd outside extended far out into the street. Even the fact that there were two other meetings to be held during the evening did not seem to lessen the number, although both overflow meetings were crowded. Three sturdy policemen were hardly able to prevent a general rush into the hall. Every seat was filled while many delegates had to stand. Then the doors were closed, while several hundred delegates had to go away disappointed.

Those who were fortunate to be admitted found the hall divided by counties, the delegates gathering around a banner carrying the name of their county. That grand white-capped choir crowded the platform and sang as it never sang before, for the Endeavorers there had caught the consecration spirit, and they too were anxious for spiritual benefit. It was the culmination of the events of the three days.

While waiting for the service to open, the Endeavorers started some of their rousing songs and soon the vast hall was filled with a volume of song. At last, F. H. Burke started the song service, and what a song service it was! Everybody sang with their whole soul, and the leader seemed to possess more than his usual power, Wm. E. MacClymont is an inspiring accompanist at any time, but his fingers seemed to fly with greater skill than ever. Whitney Frazee assisted with his cornet, while the instrumental trio did their part.

The Scriptural selection was read by Rev. J. W. Richardson with great feeling, and then he prayed very earnestly.

State President French then announced that the Union County Junior Union had been awarded a banner for their efficient work of the past year. Mrs. Wheaton S. Lowry, the superintendent of the union, received it amid loud applause.

Dr. French then called for the reports of committees.

The report of the nominating committee was first made by its chairman, Rev. C. Rudolph Knebler. The report report was as follows:

President—Rev. J. Clement French, D. D., Newark.

First Vice-President—Rev. Cornelius Brett, D. D., Jersey City.

Third Vice-President—Rev. Titus E. Davis, Bound Brook.

Secretary—Miss Ida B. Stephens, Hackettstown.

Treasurer—E. E. Anthony, Plainfield.

Executive Committee—Rev. Lewis W. Mudge, D. D., Princeton; A. S. Johnson, Orange Valley; Rev. E. W. Thompson, Paterson; J. L. Connet, Flemington; Rev. C. C. Tilly, Bridgeton; Hamilton Turner, Wenonah; Rev. Edward Mason, Basking Ridge.

Dr. French was also nominated as a vice-president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union.

Rev. Mr. Knebler then moved that the report be approved, and it was unanimously carried. The officers were then announced elected.

The report of the committee on resolutions was made by its chairman, Rev. E. W. Thompson, of Paterson.

The committee on resolutions presented the following report:

First, That the hearty thanks of the Endeavorers of New Jersey are due to the city of Plainfield for entertaining this convention, to the faithful committee who have made arrangements, to E. E. Anthony and his corps of assistants, to the reception committee who met us at the railway station, to the pages who guided us to our destinations, to the firemen for the services they voluntarily offered to the ushers, to the press for the complete and accurate accounts of the addresses and doings of the convention, and to the choir for leading in the singing.

Second, That we heartily recommend to the society and the local union conventions the deputation work in behalf of missions by the students of the Theological Seminaries and Colleges at Princeton and New Brunswick.

Third, That the suggestion of President Clark and Secretary Baer, to the effect that the Endeavorers of America join in universal prayer for Armenia the second week of November, and spend that week in special prayer and holding of special prayer-meetings, that God will stay the hand of the great assassin in that afflicted country.

—Fourth, That the formation of the World's Christian Endeavor union, which was inaugurated at the convention in Boston and which held its first regular meeting in connection with the Washington convention, meets the consideration of the Endeavor societies of New Jersey, and that the constitutions and circulars issued by the World's Endeavor union be secured by all, in order that the matter may be brought clearly before them.

Fifth, That the recommendation of the evangelistic department, advising the local unions and societies of the local churches to take up the work of evangelism in their several communities, be heartily endorsed by this committee.

Sixth, That suggestions made by all departments receive the attention of the delegates and be reported to the societies on the return from the convention.

This report was unanimously adopted. Mr. Dunham, chairman of the auditing committee, reported that the committee had examined and approved the accounts and found them correct in every detail. This report was accepted.

The last announcements of the convention were made by President E. E. Anthony of the local union. Dr. French now stated that the department meets were appointed the same as last year as follows:

Missionary Department—Miss Alice B. Spangenberg, Plainfield, N. J., superintendent.

Junior Department—Rev. A. W. Spooner, D. D., Camden, N. J., superintendent.

Evangelistic Department—Rev. J. B. Everitt, Trenton, N. J., superintendent.

Press Department—Rev. George R. Ingram, Trenton, N. J., superintendent.

Correspondence Department—Dr. William B. Ward, Jr., Lyons Farms, N. J., superintendent.

Christian Citizenship Department—Rev. W. E. Davis, Lebanon, N. J., superintendent.

The report of the committee on greetings, of which Rev. D. J. Yerkes, D. D., is chairman, was as follows:

To the Pennsylvania State convention in session at Scranton, the following greeting was sent: "The New Jersey Christian Endeavorers now in session in Plainfield, greet our brothers and sisters of the Keystone State. II Corinthians 6: 1, 'We then as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain.'"

To the United Society the following was sent to John Willis Baer, at Boston, Mass.: "The New Jersey Christian Endeavor convention 4,000 strong, send cordial responsive greetings to you and President Clark. Psalms 134: 2, 'The Lord that made Heaven and earth bless thee out of Zion.'"

To Dr. Talmage's Society in Washington, D. C., where the New Jersey Endeavorers were entertained during the last National convention, the following was sent: "The Endeavorers of New Jersey assemble in convention at Plainfield, most heartily greet you with pleasant memories of Washington hospitality. III John 8, 'We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow helpers to the truth.'"

To the Christian Endeavor convention of California, the following was sent: "The Christian Endeavor convention of New Jersey respond to your welcome greeting. Brotherly love reaches from ocean to ocean. Phil. 4: 8, 'Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.'"

To Rebuild the Terrill Road Bridge.

Superintendent R. A. McCarthy and George Look, C. A. McCarthy, G. E. Stees, Geary Clemson, James Kelly, William Wpodring, John Gorman, Wilson Ritter and Charles Wade, are all new arrivals at "Philly!" Lee's West Side Hotel, Scotch Plains. They are railroad employes, and came from Pennsylvania to erect the new wagon road bridge over the Jersey Central tracks at Terrill road, to replace the one destroyed by fire several months ago. The bridge is to be of steel frame and girder, 30 feet wide and 100 feet long. The material is to be furnished by the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and it is expected that the new bridge will be completed with a month.

ECHO OF THE CONVENTION

CHRISTIANS GATHER TO ENJOY THE AFTERMATH OF THE BIG EVENT.

The Immense Audience Rose Up Almost Solidly When Asked if They Had Been Benefited Spiritually by the Meetings.

The lowering sky of yesterday afternoon, with its foreboding of storm, had no effect on the earnestness and enthusiasm of the large number of Endeavorers who gathered in the Convention Hall, at 4:15 o'clock, to hold a convention echo meeting. The chorus choir crowded the platform and front seats, while the congregation filled almost the entire building. President E. E. Anthony presided over the meeting. Horace J. Martin led the singing, while William E. MacClymont acted as pianist, assisted by Whitney Frasse with the cornet.

The meeting began with the usual song service, the stirring Endeavor hymns ringing out with the old convention fervor. Scripture reading and prayer followed, then came a few very earnest words from President Anthony. He said that if any city in New Jersey had cause for thankfulness and self-congratulation, it was Plainfield. It had just witnessed one of the grandest conventions ever held, and listened to the finest speakers that could be found. And now what would be the result of all these grand opportunities for spiritual uplift and increased consecration? Would all these young people merely say to one another, "What a splendid time we have had! Wasn't Brady fine? Wasn't Cortland Myers inspiring?" and then go back into inactivity and uselessness in their churches.

He then asked all those who felt that as a result of the past week's experience their lives this coming winter ought to be better and more fruitful than ever in the past, to rise. Almost every one present responded. Then he said that it was not enough to feel that one ought to do these things; how many would promise to actually go forth and do them? Once more the greater part of the audience rose, the leader thanking them for this proof that the great convention should have lasting results, in the increased usefulness and beauty of character of those who attended it.

Ten minutes were now given to short, earnest testimonies, many Endeavorers telling how they had been helped by the convention, and of their desire for a more consecrated and helpful Christian life. Then each of the pastors present, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., Rev. J. W. Richardson, Rev. C. E. Herring, Rev. W. R. Richards, D. D., and Rev. D. J. Tercica, D. D., spoke briefly and earnestly to the young people, emphasizing the increased responsibilities which the great privileges of the past week had laid upon them, and urging that they press onward with new energy in their service for Christ and his church. Ten minutes of prayer followed, many prayers being offered from all parts of the house.

One final hymn and Dr. Yerkes' benediction closed the meeting with which ended such a week as Plainfield Christians Endeavorers have never known.

NOMINATED A MINISTER.

Rev. J. W. Wells the Free Silver Representative in the Third District.

Rev. J. W. Wells, the Presbyterian minister of Liberty Corner, captured the Congressional nomination at the convention of Democrats held at Somerville Saturday afternoon. Neither Monmouth nor Middlesex had a candidate for the honor, and in a caucus before the convention convened the Somerset county decided to abide by the unit rule. Rev. Mr. Wells had the support of the delegates from the agricultural districts and thus crowded Hiram O. Hance out of the race. The delegates from the farming communities said they had too many lawyers already in Congress and they were opposed to electing any more.

The convention passed resolutions endorsing the Chicago platform and candidates, and Rev. Mr. Wells addressed the delegates. He is well posted on the currency question and will doubtless make a strong canvass for election.

Recognized at Yale.

Plainfield is being well represented at Yale College this year by the party of young men who entered there from this city. Raymond A. McGee and Wm. M. McCutchen were both candidates for the freshmen team and the former secured a place on it which he kept until an accident, resulting in water on the knee, forced him to stop practice. McGee was one of two freshmen that were taken into the Yale Glee Club, where he sings second bass. The manager of the club was so pleased with McGee's voice that he suggested private lessons to him with a view that McGee should become a soloist of the club.

Another Bicycle Stolen.

Miss Eleanor Williams, of West Seventh street, is mourning the loss of her wheel. Last Thursday night the wheel was left outdoors all night and the next morning there was no wheel to be found. It was a ladies' Crescent Special. There is no trace of the thief

JUNIOR WORK.

What is Being Accomplished Among the Little Ones.

A Junior Worker's session was held Friday afternoon in Convention Hall begining at two o'clock. State President French presided. Rev. J. O. McKelvey read a selection of Scripture and then made an earnest prayer. Rev. W. Spooner, D. D., of Camden, made his report as superintendent of the Department of Junior Work. It was as follows:

Dear Endeavor Friends—There is much more to be said today about the Juniors of New Jersey than when you called me to the office of superintendent three years ago. Steadily their numbers have kept increasing, their service for Christ and the church becoming with each passing year more efficient, until, today, this "Junior band," a great army of little folks, with big banners and big, warm hearts, is recognized as one of the potential factors in the church, helping to hasten the conquest of the world for Christ, and the dawning of the blessed millennium for which we wait and hopefully pray. It is a record of history that one of the pagan emperors of Rome testified to the numbers and influence of the Christians of his time by exclaiming "If they were all removed what a silence would ensue." Surely the pastors of our churches and the more advanced Christian workers can but feel that the removal from the ranks of toilers of the earnest-hearted, devoted children, would entail a heavier burden which she could scarcely surmount. And yet it is but a few years since we awoke to the importance of organized child laborers in the Master's vineyard.

Somehow there seemed to be a deep-seated conviction that little hands could not sow and plow and prune and reap; that this was reserved for men and women of mature years and fully developed brawn and brain. How strangely have our old-fashioned notions been controverted by the triumphs of our little brothers and sisters. There are still many churches that fail to "know a good thing when they see it," and stand yet in a doubtful attitude with reference to this new department of Christian Endeavor. We can only pray that ere long they may "awake from sleep" so that God shall be enabled to give them light on this question of vast moment to themselves and the lambs of the flock. The work among the Juniors of New Jersey during the past year has been marked by

INTENSE EARNESTNESS.

This is testified to by the character of the reports received, and corroborated by facts gleaned by your superintendent from his contact and personal acquaintance with many societies all over the State.

Among the older societies the novelty of the organization has worn off, and the members are held together simply by their love for the society, and their passion for actual service in the Dear Master's name.

The little people are themselves surprised at what they can accomplish under sympathetic and skillful leadership. The sweet ministration of "sunshine committees" in sick rooms, at hospitals, and among the aged and infirm, is one of the forms of Christian service upon which the Master must look with a smile of approval. This is "inasmuch endeavor" for which God's "well done" waits. Could we but hear the prayers, and listen to the songs, and mark the activities of these "busy little bees," we should discover in the society of the Junior Christian Endeavor a prophecy full of promise of a glorious triumph in the immediate for Christ and the church.

The reports which have come to us from the faithful superintendents, are so many polished mirrors, from whose surface we see the heart of the society reflected.

I wish you could look into them all as I have done, and see how beautiful is the image reflected therefrom.

Take for example a report which declares that the lookout, prayer meeting, missionary, music and sunshine committees, are organized and doing faithful work—that fifty, or a hundred, or as in one instance two hundred dollars had been contributed to missions—and best of all five, ten, or fifteen had been led to the Saviour and into the church during the year—and who can fail to perceive that beneath the surface, and back of the figures there has been constancy of prayer and effort upon which the seal of divine approval has been set by the Holy Ghost.

The entire church of Christiandom is experiencing a spiritual quickening in view of her enlarged conceptions of her mission, which finds expression in this rallying cry—

"THE WORLD FOR CHRIST!"

The Juniors have caught the Spirit of conquest which breathes from the battle hymn of the church:

The morning light is breaking
The darkness disappears
The sons of earth are waking
To penitential tears.
Each breeze that sweeps the ocean
Brings tidings from afar,
Of nations in commotion
Prepared for Zion's war.

If one's confidence in an enterprise is shown by what he is willing to invest in it, then, judging from the amount of money contributed to that cause during the year, Jersey Juniors believe in missions.

LOOK AT THE FIGURES!

Undoubted these figures fall but a part of the truth. Had all our societies reported, the sum would have been increased by hundreds of dollars

Two years ago we reported $1,333 67 for missions. Last year the contributions were somewhat larger while this present year the contributions actually reported aggregate $2,906.91 an increase of over one hundred per cent. in two years.

The gifts from many of the junior societies are larger than were ones expected from the entire church. One society in Essex county reports $200 contributed to missions alone.

HOW IT WAS GIVEN.

One year ago, as an incentive to strive for larger things for Christ, it was decided to prepare a "roll of honor, upon which should be written the name of all the societies contributing during the year, through the channel of their own church boards not less than five dollars for missions and to prepare a "badge banner" upon which should be placed the badges of these societies contributing not less than $10.00 this there own boards

We believe that the societies have felt the influence of this anticipated honor and that the large increase in gifts is due, in part, at least to this fact. The following figures will be of interest to all: Forty-five societies gave $5 00 or more through the church boards; 8 societies gave $5.00 or more not through the church boards; 65 societies gave $10.00 or more through the church boards; 10 societies gave $10.00 not through the church boards; 45 societies gave less than $5.00 to missions; 89 societies gave nothing.

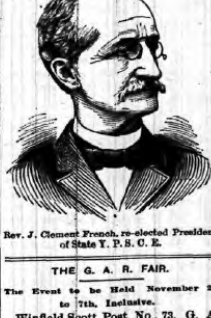
One society reported having given seventy six cents, "and all through the boards." The superintendent making that report is to be most highly commended for having given the little society credit for all that it did, though it seems to be small.

All honor to the society great or small that does its best!

What higher compliment, what names praise were fell from the blessed lips of the Son of God, than that which was spoken with reference to a poor thinking woman eager to render some service of love.

"She hath done what she could"! In summarizing the work of the year, I have endeavored to group it by counties so that all may in the conditions of the work in different parts of the state. Let it be home in mind that this is not strictly accurate, for in all the counties there are some societies whose superintendents failed to report the work of last year.

Listen, Endeavorers, and you will hear
Where our class will gather another year:
To the city where gates have stood open so long,
Will we go with our banners and jubilant song.
We go to join you our word, and truer there's none.
That next year we'll meet you in fair Paterson.



Rev. J. Clement French, re-elected President of State Y. P. S. C. E.

THE G. A. R. FAIR.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., have decided to hold their fair the first week in November. It will open Monday evening, the 2d, and close Saturday evening, the 7th. The place has not yet been decided upon, but probably will be in a few days. The committee in charge is composed of the following: Chairman, W. C. Suith; treasurer, W. W. Gorieli; secretary, Andrew Cox, Charles Stephens, E. G. Morse and Charles Westphal. The committee is well organized and doing splendid work in each department.

The Best Yet Held.

E. E. Anthony, president of the Christian Endeavor Local Union and chairman of the '96 committee of arrangements for the State convention, is in receipt of a letter from Rev. J. Clement French, president of the State society, stating that the convention held here last week was the best yet held by the society.

E. E. Anthony, the new Treasurer of the State Y. P. S. C. E.

The Convention Song.

The following are the verses of the convention song written by Miss Minnie G. Morse, a valued member of The Press staff:

As we meet together,
Soldiers of the Lord,
With a single purpose,
Hearts in sweet accord
Let us lift the watchword,
One in Christ are we,
Thanking Him who brought us
To such unity,
Join then, hearts and voices,
Loud His praise to sing:
Jesus, our Redeemer,
Prophet, Priest and King.
Draw us, O Christ our Savior,
Closer still to Thee:
May this great Convention
Be Thy glory be.

From the whole State over
North and west and east,
Gather we rejoicing
To th' Endeavor feast.
Waiting, watching, hoping,
Father of us all;
May Thy Holy Spirit
On our gathering fall.
Join then, hearts and voices,
Loud His praise to sing:
Jesus, our Redeemer,
Prophet, Priest and King.
Draw us, O our Savior,
Closer still to Thee:
May this great Convention
Be Thy glory be.

WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Dwight L. Moody Addresses Another Large Audience.

The seating capacity of the First Baptist church was taxed to its utmost last Thursday night, when D. L. Moody conducted the service and Rev. F. H. Burke led the Christian Endeavor choir. After the devotional exercises and a twenty-minute song service, Mr. Moody spoke from the text, "Work of the Holy Spirit."

During his discourse Mr. Moody stated that he was in the church fully ten years before he actually knew the meaning of it, and now his work is to convince others in church work. It requires the Holy Spirit, said the speaker, to convince the man or woman of the fallacy of unbelief. My work is to preach Christ and not to convict of sin; the power of God takes hold and cuts deep. Some people never go to church because the pastors don't preach politics, but what we want to do is to get the young idea and the unconverted into the fold; after we're convinced of our sins and acknowledge them, then the rays of light and true Christianity come into the heart. It has been said that ministers are overworked, but it's not so; they only need oiling like the wheels of machinery.

"A man may be a good lawyer, merchant and business man, yet have no love for his customers, but to be successful, one must have the love of God in his heart. If you want power, it requires the love of God in your heart; if it's dark where you are, there is light 'round the throne of God. Preach hope and see how things brighten up. People, Christians, and others, talk politics by the hour and never stir, yet they haven't the time to talk of the church and its good deeds. Some people spend hours depicting a sermon and getting at the cold points, but they forget to mention the many good points. Some criticise and say Moody's doing much, but just try it yourself."

Continuing his discourse, Mr. Moody said, "It was highly essential to get out of the spirit of grumbling. Young ministers oftentimes become discouraged on account of unjust criticisms. Hold up Jesus; they say, but don't preach theury and theology; but the world can't get along without the true spirit of Jesus Christ. Teaching spiritual manifestations is the light of God, and having that, He will teach us all things and guide us into the truths. Newspapers tell of things that have been, but the Bible tells of the things which are to come. The man or woman who is filled with the spirit of the Holy Ghost is filled with the Scriptures.

Resuming his discourse Mr. Moody said: "If believe Christ would have died as soon as he was born, had it not been for the Holy Spirit coming down and holding up His faith. Christ calls with every believer on the face of the earth. We can't care for our souls, but we can for the body—the temple in which the soul dwells. Many of the church members haven't got the Holy Spirit to build them up. God grant that all these Christian Endeavor delegates be filled with the spirit and power of God.

Mr. Moody concluded with prayer and with the benediction the assemblage dispersed.

FOR THE MISSIONS.

Yesterday Afternoon's Session Devoted to This Department.

Again was Convention Hall crowded when the missionary session was held last Thursday afternoon, State President J. Clement French, D. D., presided, and Horace J. Martin and Prof. Wm. E. MacClymont acted as musical directors. Before the service, the waiting Endeavorers sang with their well-known vigor until Mr. Martin opened the regular song service. Rev. E. M. Bodman, D. D., read a portion of the nineteenth chapter of St. Luke and then led in prayer.

President Anthony, of the local union, made his usual announcements. He requested the ladies to take off their hats, remarking that those over seventy years of age or without hair would be excused. After this little pleasantry there was a sudden movement in the audience and most of the hats disappeared.

Miss Anna B. Spangenberg, of Plainfield, next read her report as superintendent of the missionary department as follows:

At the close of this, the second year of the existence of the missionary department of our State Union, I feel that I should acquaint with our societies than ever before and better able to report what has been accomplished, so safely say that during the past year there has been a greater development of missionary intelligence and zeal in relation to the cause than we have previously been able to report.

It is the purpose of the State missionary department to keep in close touch in every way to interest the societies of New Jersey in the cause of missions and to assist in systematic and practical effort where the interest already exists. This work is undertaken and successfully carried on by the local missionary superintendents, who are appointed by the city and county unions.

The State superintendent has at the present time fifteen local missionary superintendents. It has been made to double the number so that every union may have its representative in the department. It is earnestly hoped that the time is not long distant when the efficient will be connected with each and each union will have its missionary superintendent, who shall act as co-worker with the State officer. It has been the custom for your State superintendent to send a monthly circular letter to her assistants and to the secretaries of the unions where there is no missionary superintendent. These receiving the circulars are expected to reply by sending a communication in the form of a report, containing useful hints and suggestions. In this way useful material is gathered for the future work. If they become a "Christian Endeavor Exchange," combining many helpful methods of work, plans tried and proved, etc.

Many of the local superintendents are scattered so widely over the State that it has been impossible to arrange a meeting where all could conveniently assemble. Some definite plans for work, so thus far we have resorted entirely to correspondence. The Middlesex section of the Y. M. C. A. has been secured as a Missionary Conference in connection with the convention and here we expect the missionary workers of the State will meet and become better acquainted with each other and the work. An exhibit of literature of the various missions fields and other interesting circles may be found at the headquarters, and the missionary workers will be present to meet all missionary committees have been there held. Their presence is especially needed for the imparting information and awakening an interest in the work. Let us "pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers," and we believe it is true that Whatever missionary information we may give to Endeavorers while a year is a small, will like the continuous dropping of water, at least bear fruit by wearing away the indifference shown by many Endeavorers.

Many of the unions reporting have always been proposed and in some cases tried with success, a plan for systematic, Christian, earnest work regularly pledged by the individual Endeavorers for the study of missions. Second, a missionary committee to furnish such missionary information as will prove special interesting and stimulating, and given to the Endeavorers in bulletin form, having it prepared with a hectograph or some kind of copying pad. Third, having a few minutes set apart in each prayer meeting to listen to the missionary reporter who gives the latest news from the mission fields. Fourth, in having the prayer meeting turn in keeping the society posted on mission mary topics. Fifth, in keeping a list of the best missionary books posted upon a bulletin in a conspicuous place and adding others as they come. These simple methods have often led to the awakening of an interest that has led the members ready to search and study for themselves, and this has resulted in their becoming hearty supporters of the cause.

The second feature of the work which has claimed our attention is the missionary meetings. These have been varied and interesting. The third year was in many ways of conducting missionary meetings, but in most cases the same principles have been carried. The new treatment of familiar subjects, and the old facts in new dresses have given vigor and life to the meetings.

The third and last feature of the work which has a bearing on the societies and which may be mentioned here may come under the head of systematic giving. Some societies favor the envelope system, others use pledge books, others the dollar a million try one week plan, while those more advanced are satisfied with nothing less than the tithe plan, which means the giving of two cents per week and collecting from four to five others the same amount. In addition to the systematic plans used, self-denial days, thank offerings and birthday gifts are in favor. But our Endeavorers are not satisfied with the monetary offering; time and strength is often spent caring for the sick, furnishing clothing for the poor, and boxes of fruit and flowers for those who know nothing of the luxuries of life. The sum total of all these gifts and foreign during the year has amounted to $14,286.46. Of this amount $4,000 has been given through the denominational boards. Our Endeavorers have responded generously to the appeals that have been made for Armenia, the total amount received by the State Committee being $1,000.

It becomes more and more evident as we study the burning missionary questions of the day, that we, as Christian Endeavorers, must be more prayerful, pray more, pray more earnestly and work more diligently if we would help to hasten the time when it shall become the Kingdom of our Lord. We would not be satisfied with any less than the best of ourselves, but would rather give diligence to make the coming year crowded with more glorious work for God. Our committee has watched with keen interest the missionary work as it has been carried on by the boards, and has become convinced of the fact that while a strong missionary spirit has been shown by our most consecrated Endeavorers, the time has come when the whole society should be led to enter in the missionary spirit wherever it exists, and an intelligent enthusiasm created by a study of missions. To this end we must use only available means which would bring about the desired results namely the Missionary Reading Extension Course." After much thought on the subject we have decided to recommend a plan whereby every Union in the State that will appoint a reader for the Missionary Department for the course. Leaflets giving full particulars of the plan, etc., will be furnished the state at the close of this session, and may also be obtained at headquarters.

Your committee would ask for the hearty approval of all and that it will be made the subject of prayer by all the Unions.

We wish it abundant and ever-increasing success, and pray that the missionary department in the year to come may reap a rich harvest as a result of the seed sowing in the year just closed. We would ask that each may feel personally responsible for the success of the missionary work in the State, and will be interested that the whole work in this name and with His approval.

Let us go forward with the united expressions of another year feeling that no cross is too heavy to bear, no service too humble to render, no hardship too severe to endure, no battle too great to fight for the cause of Christ, the fate of a state, and that anywhere with Jesus we can safely be cheered and encouraged by His gracious assurance "Lo, I am with you all the days." We will meet privileges, work and sacrifice, but under the leadership of the great Captain, sure shall be the glorious victory. For the battle is the Lord's and Lord shall over the earth as the waters cover the channels of the deep.

BLAZE IN THE NOTCH.

Barns Outbuildings on Wm. Demler' Place Destroyed by Fire.

The bright reflection on the skies last Friday at 7 o'clock was made by the burning of the barn on William Demler's property in the Notch.

Mr. Demler went to his barn with a lighted lantern about 7 o'clock for the purpose of feeding his horses. He was standing in front of one of the stalls with the lantern in his hand when a trapdoor, which hung overhead, came down with a crash and knocked the lantern out of his hand, at the same time breaking the glass. In an instant the dry hay was all in a blaze, and it was with difficulty that Mr. Demler rescued his three horses. By the time the animals were removed the whole barn was one mass of flames, and another barn belonging the Stewart estate was consumed also.

The neighbors responded quickly and assisted as much as possible, but the buildings could not be saved. The houses belonging to Andrew Wilson and Wm. Demler narrowly escaped destruction. Besides an immense quantity of new hay just put in the barns, three sleighs and three sets of single harness were consumed, also three election booths belonging to the township. Mr. Demler says that his loss will be about $2 000.

Former Newspaper Man.

R. Henri Herbert, of Trenton, has been in Plainfield the past few days, combining business with pleasure, and incidentally looking after the interests of the Republican party among his people in this section. Mr. Herbert was some years ago connected with the New Jersey State Republican, as associate editor. The paper was published in this city, its editor being Rev. John B. Bagwell. Mr. Herbert is one of the best known colored men in this State, a man of education, refinement and scholarly attainments. Mr. Herbert, however, has given up newspaper work, and is now with the National Cigar Manufacturing Company, of Trenton, as secretary and treasurer.

Dunellen Wins.

The Dunellen and Independent Gun Clubs competed for the third time Thursday, and it was unfortunate that the latter did not turn out better. Each shot at 25 targets. The score follows:

The Dunellen team won by 18 birds. Several sweepstakes were also shot. All the money was divided by the Rose system.

In Honor of a Guest.

Mrs. John H. Carney, of 40 Craig place, tendered a reception to Miss Mary Francis Higgins of Mount Saint Mary's Academy, Newburgh-on the Hudson last Friday. The evening was delightfully spent, Mr. Brown, of Madison N. J., furnished the music and Miss Libbie and Alfred Springer favored with solos and duets which were delightfully rendered. John H. Carney had a few words in dialect which drollery put many smiles upon the young people features.

ONLY TEMPORARY DEFEAT.

As the time draws nearer to election day, and a more thorough understanding of the currency question fills the minds of those who were the doubters one and two months ago—and upon whose votes the general result hinges—there seems to be every reason for the Honest Money Democrats to feel that the principles and candidates put forth at the Chicago convention in defiance of all Democratic precedents and teachings will be buried under a great plurality that will effectually squelch the element who have for the time being gained control of what is termed the "regular" portion of the party.

Such extraordinary and threatening legislation is advocated and promised if Bryan and Sewall are victorious, that drastric measures have been necessary as a protest to such ideas by the men from whom it was naturally supposed the real strength and support of the Democratic party would come this year as it has in all the years gone by. It was not a pleasant duty for life-long Democrats to find it necessary to dissent from the views promulgated from what they considered would be contradictions moved by the same Democratic precepts that had argued other Democratic National conventions, but it was much preferable that they should suffer defeat temporarily that they might not have the stigma of repudiation and infamy attached to that which has been near and dear to them in an association of a lifetime.

Senator Palmer, the candidate of the Honest Money Democrats, says that he feels confident that the ticket which he heads will poll 2,000,000 votes, and this being true, and there is every reason for so thinking—with the votes coming from the States considered close or else States in any other election but this surely Democratic, the defeat of free silver advocates is assured. Democracy will temporarily receive a set back, but in another four years it will be able to go forth and battle successfully.

Dr. Scudder, of Jersey City, in his pulpit last Sunday, exposed the dishonesty of the Popocratic talk against what they call the domination of England. He said:

"Some hysterical campaign orators would make us believe that England owns America, body and soul; that she dictates our financial policy and determines how we shall vote. They tell us we should be independent of all foreign nations in matters of trade, all of which is consummate rubbish. Any one knows that the property of this country largely depends upon its exports, and any policy that would diminish our traffic and credit with foreign nations would be suicidal to our own interests. If money goes across the water as interest on money loaned to us more money can be made to come to us in exchange for agricultural and industrial products. What this nation needs is reciprocity and friendly relations with the rest of the world, not repudiation of debts and warlike bluster."

Benjamin Smith, a man formerly prominent in New Jersey and also once very wealthy, died a day or two ago in the almshouse at New Brunswick. It is said that his poverty was the result of excessive generosity. How few there are who, having once acquired wealth, bestow it upon others and take upon themselves the miseries of poverty. Mr. Smith ought to have a monument, says an exchange.

At the Republican Convention for the Sixth Congressional District of New Jersey, including East Orange and Newark, which was held in Newark Tuesday afternoon, Representative Parker was unanimously renominated.

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

Plainfield has again resumed its wonted quietude. The visiting Christian Endeavorers have gone and the tenth annual State convention of the Christian Endeavor societies of New Jersey is now a thing of the past. For three days Plainfield was in possession of these bright young people and everything else was given up on account of this gathering. Last night they met together for the last time and now scarcely one of that great army remains. Although the convention is over and the delegates gone, it will be many a day before Plainfield forgets them. The spiritual life of the city has been quickened and the local Endeavorers given renewed strength to fight life's battle. The convention was the most successful of any ever held in the State, and great credit is due to the committees, thanks to whose efforts the convention passed off so successfully. To E. E Anthony, chairman of the '96 committee, unbounded credit is due, and his election to a State office by the society was but just recognition of his labors in behalf of the Endeavorers. The secretary of the convention, Jos. M. Hawkins, seemed to have the happy faculty of doing every thing at the one time, and without him it would have been impossible to accomplish what was done. The other members of the committee and its treasurer, David M. Runyon, were also responsible for the grand result The other members of the committee were: J. M. Hawkins, printing; Wm. E. MacClymont, music; H. J. Martin, reception; Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Juniors; J. G. MacLaughlin, entertainment; Herbert Bonnell, finance; Harry W. Marshall, hall and decorations; Miss Florence G. Hawkins, evangelistic; Harold I. Serrell, ushers; Miss Emma V. Fish, press; Rev. C. E. Herring, Rev. J. W. Richardson, Rev. A. I. Martine, pastors' advisory.

GREAT GROWTH.

No organization has ever had the extraordinary growth which the Christian Endeavor Society has had in its brief existence. The parent society was formed only fifteen years ago. Now there are 46,125 societies, having a membership of several millions. This phenomenal growth shows at once the society's power of accretion and its power for good. The aim of the society is so simple and yet so broad and far-reaching that Christians of widely divergent views on many matters purely theological can take its pledge and work under its guidance and are thus banded together in a fellowship that makes for good. It is a pleasure for Plainfielders to see the many members of the society who have come here to attend the State convention, and that their presence is gratifying is shown on every hand in the many evidences of welcome.

THE BEST YET.

No interesting feature of the great Christian Endeavor convention was left uncovered by the reports of The Daily Press yesterday, and without flattery The Press believes that it can lay claim to the credit of having better reports of the proceedings than has ever been published by any other paper before in the nine previous gatherings of the State society. That it was appreciated is best shown by the hundreds of subscriptions for the convention issues that have poured into the business offices from the delegates. To-day's paper speaks for itself, and of tomorrow's we propose to make just as good.

"The campaign for sound money has brought the people of all sections closer together than they have been brought since the war," says the Syracuse Post, (Rep.) "Honest money is as much needed in Georgia as in New York. A staple currency is as essential to business success in Texas as in Massachusetts. The credit and honor of the nation are as dear to loyal men of Alabama as to those of Illinois. This campaign will have accomplished much more than the election of McKinley and the triumph of the Republican party; it will have buried the ugly spirit of sectionalism which is the enemies of the republic have invoked."

The representatives of the press to whose lot it fell to record the proceedings of the State Christian Endeavor convention were greatly assisted in the performance of their work by Rev. George H. Ingram, superintendent of the press deprrtment. Many little details were furnished that would otherwise have made the newspaper men hustle, and the courteous and accommodating spirit of Mr. Ingram made him exceedingly popular with the reporters.

Some of the merchants of New York city are so confident of the election of McKinley, a conviction strengthened by the reports of the 50,000 strangers daily from all sections of the country who visit that city, that they are courageously beginning to buy goods for the expected revival of trade to follow the election.—True American.

Mrs John Benner, of Fanwood, is confined to her home by illness.

A Great Battle.

Do consumptives recover? Yes, thousands of them. Even after the disease has a firm hold? Yes, no doubt about it. After cavities have been formed and hemorrhages have occurred? Yes, even then. If the system is too weak, the disease will probably conquer, but if the body can be reinforced there is a fair chance for a winning fight. For twenty years, thousands have testified how they gained the victory.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil with the Hypophosphites is still coming to the rescue. Out-door life, fresh air, and good pluck are of immense value. But in addition to these the body must be supplied with that peculiar kind of fat which is found only in cod-liver oil; combined with valuable medicinal agents; and these must be the tonic effect which comes from the hypophosphites. It is a great battle, and a great victory is often gained.

SCOTT & BOWNE, New York

The electoral tickets of the National Democratic party are now published in nearly all the States, and the Bryan managers are so much afraid of their influence that they are making strenuous efforts, on one pretence or another, to prevent their being declared "official" by the State authorities. This is a worse than idle effort. No action whatever can be instituted which will prevent sound money men from casting their ballots against the nominees of the Chicago convention. If by any chicanery, in any State, the Palmer and Buckner ticket is not permitted to be placed in the hands of the people by the election officers, affording them a chance to vote according to their convictions, in whatever State the wrong may be accomplished, sound money Democrats will be sufficiently exasperated to put their protest on file against the Bryan ticket where it will do the most good.—Hackensack Democrat.

New Jersey and Delaware, neighboring States, have usually voted on the same side in State and Presidential elections since the close of the Civil War. Once only since 1864 has New Jersey been carried by the Republicans in a Presidential year. That was in 1872, and in the same election Delaware was lost to the Democrats. This year both States are claimed with confidence for McKinley. Both chose Republican Governors at the last election for that office.

William E. Sackett, the well known political writer of New Jersey, says that if William J. Keys is nominated for Senator by the Democrats in Somerset county, Charles A. Reed, who is assured of the Republican nomination, will have to fight hard to be elected.

THE RIGHT TO TAX MONEY.

The question of the right to tax the moneys of a resident of New Jersey on deposit in a New York bank, after the death of the depositor in New Jersey, has given rise to an emphatic difference of opinion in the Court of Appeals. One John F. Hondayer of Trenton, N. J., died in that city last year, having on deposit upward of $70,000 with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York The money thus deposited belonged partly to him individually and partly as trustee, but the account was in his name as trustee. The Surrogate held that the deposit was taxable under the Transfer Tax act. The Appellate Division reversed that officer, and declared that the deposits were not property within the State, under a proper construction of the Statute, but that upon receiving them the trust company merely became indebted to the depositor for the amount which it had received from him. On Tuesday the Court of Appeals, in turn, reversed the Supreme Court, a majority of the Judges saying, through Judge Vann, that they "are the opinion that a deposit of money in a bank, although technically a debt, is still money for all practical purposes, and as such is taxable under the Transfer Tax act." Judges Gray and Haight dissent on the ground that when Mr. Hondayer made the deposits they became the property of the trust company, and the relation thus created was simply that of debtor and creditor.

WILL FOWLER DEBATE?

Candidate Willey Wants a Contest on the Public Forum.

F. O. Willey, the Free Silver candidate for Congress in this district, has challenged Hon. Chas. N. Fowler, the Republican candidate, to a joint debate. The letter was presented to Mr Fowler by James H. Powers, formerly of this city, and when urged for a reply, Mr. Fowler said that he would answer it in the regular order of his correspondence. The letter of Mr. Willey's is as follows:

31 Hawthorne St., Orange, N. J.,
October 8th, 1896.

Hon. Charles Fowler, Elizabeth, N. J.

Dear Sir—You have been made a candidate for Congress for a second term, I am informed that the nomination has been given to you as a loyal supporter of the Hill faith and allegiance to the policy of the Republican party during the two years you have served in the National Legislature.

The Democratic party has placed me in nomination for the same office. The parties are agreed upon one proposition to wit:—The question of the money issue. However, as St. Louis conventions are more vital than any that have preceded it, for the past 20 years, I think the people of this Congressional district are anxious to hear both sides of the question before the election, the result of which is generally re cognized as overshadowing all else.

I therefore respectfully invite you to a series of public debates in the most prominent populous centers in our district, the same to take place at any suitable convenient time.

Awaiting your reply, I have the honor to remain,

Sincerely yours,
F. O. Willey.

Yesterday they notified Mr. Stack that they thought they had located the wheel in New Jersey and would send it on to the city, and after considerable detective work he found the bicycle. With the aid of the police he secured possession and brought it home with him.

THEATRICAL.

We are to have that popular comedian, William Jerome, and his excellent company of players at Music Hall, Thursday evening, in his twentieth century idea of an entertainment entitled, "Town Talk." It is entirely different from any other attraction on the road this season, being a combination of high-class vaudeville with sparkling farce comedy—thus giving a continuous performance from the rise of the curtain until the finish of the last act. The company is composed of such artists as Maud Nugent, the Mahr Sisters, Daly and Hilton, Barnes and Coakley, W. C. Davis, Master Tommy Meade, Charles Sedgwick and others.

Experience of the last decade in New York has been strong in evidence that the critical test of a comic opera's worth, or the opposite, comes about midway in the second week of its production. Such being accepted as a criterion of comic opera conditions, Francis Wilson has once more established himself in the midst of a thorough success—"Half a King"—and the Knickerbocker Theatre is sure of its nightly crowded house. "Half a King" met with so great a degree of popularity from the very first that it seems needless to say that improvements have been made. Everyone has grown "easy" in his or her assignment, and Mr. Wilson gives something bright and new at each performance.

The bright faces of farce comedy combined with the catchy songs and dances of vaudeville, is what will greet the audience at Music Hall on the evening of Thursday, October 15th. This company comes to us highly recommended and contains some of the best people in the profession, William Jerome, who heads this all star cast, is too well known as a song writer and parodist to need much mention. Some of the others in the cast are Miss Maud Nugent, the Mahr Sisters, Daly and Hilton, Barnes and Coakley, W. C. Davis, Master Tommy Meade, Charles Sedwick and others. Be sure and watch for the big show.

Worthy Your Confidence.

The success of Hood's Sarsaparilla in conquering scrofula in whatever way it may manifest itself is vouched for by the thousands who were nearly addicted by this prevalent disease, but who now rejoice over a permanent cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Scrofula may appear in the form of sores, or it may attack the glands of the neck, or break out in dreadful running sores on the body or limbs. Attacking the mucous membranes it may develop into catarrh or lodging in the lungs lead to consumption. Come as it may, faithful course of treatment with Hood's Sarsaparilla will overcome it, for working upon the foundation of all diseases, impure blood, the system is clarified and vitalized, and vigor, strength and health restored to the body.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

To Meet in the Westfield Congregational Church Next Thursday.

The sixteenth annual convention of the Union county Sunday School Association will be held in the Congregational church, at Westfield, Thursday and a large attendance is expected. In the morning at 11:15 there will be an address by Rev. G. H. Payson, of Rahway, on the subject "Christ and the children." An address on "International Sunday-School Work" will be given in the afternoon at 3 o'clock by Captain C. B. Parsons, of Red Bank. At 7:30 Mrs. Alonzo Pettit, of Elizabeth, will conduct a conference on primary work, and at 8:15 Rev. Linn E. Wheeler, of New Brunswick, will deliver an address on "The Secret of Success in Teaching." In the evening at 8:40 W. H. Beach, of Jersey City, will deliver an address. The morning session will be opened at 10 o'clock, the afternoon at 2 o'clock and the evening at 7:30. The programme is an excellent one and contains many things outside of the above mentioned.

Many Foreigners Naturalized.

Law Judge John D. Bartine, of Somerville, told a Press representative Saturday that he had naturalized more foreigners this fall than at other time, outside a presidential year, during the long time that he has been on bench and that the class naturalized were Italian and Slavs. The Judge said that he asked one Italian who was governor of New Jersey and that he replied "Mika Corcora." Now Michael Corcoran is overseer of Bridgewater township and lives in Raritan where the Italian resides and he undoubtedly looked upon the warm hearted Irish Republican as the greatest man in the State and so answered the Judge.

PARK CLUB LIKELY TO [illegible] OWNERS OF THE WHIST TROPH

One more victory and the Park Club challenge whist trophy, a handsome silver cup, will become the property of the Park Club. Monday, they defeated the challengers and scored the ninth to their string of victories. Their opponents were the crack team from the North End Whist Club, of Newark, and it was only by the closest kind of play that the Park Club players defeated them by a score of 16 to 11. It was probably the best game ever played in the clubhouse of the Park Club, and the trophy still remains in Plainfield.

The Parks gained the lead in the first round when they scored 7 points to their opponents 4. The second round resulted in the visitors securing 3 points while Plainfield only got 1. The third and last round was favorable for the home team, the score being 7 to 4 in their favor. The total was 16 to 11, in favor of the Parks, of course.

The same team, that has made the Park Club famous in the whist world, represented them last night, Messrs. Rogers, Howell, McCutchen and Townsend. The North End Club team consisted of Messrs. Cameron, Reynolds, Eagles and Smith. Mr. Brock, of the Ridgewood Club, acted as umpire.

The terms, by which the cup was offered, provide that it shall become the property of any club winning it ten times. Last night, the Park Club won their ninth victory. The next challenge is from the New Jersey Athletic Club, and that match will be played in about two weeks.

The Parks looked on the North End Club as their most dangerous opponents, and now that they have successfully defeated, the Park Club is looking forward to becoming the owner of the cup at no distant date. The cup was first offered last year.

FARMER JIM'S HOT SHOT.

TURNED HIS ORATORICAL BATTERY ON REPUBLICANS AND BOLTERS.

The Democrats at the Mass-Meeting Gave Him a Great Ovation—Many Local Hits Worked in His Address for Free Silver.

The local supporters and advocates of William Jenning Bryan and free silver assembled in T. A. B. Hall on West Fourth street, Saturday evening, and held a rousing mass-meeting. The sentiments of that portion of the Democratic party were proclaimed in no uncertain tones and those present were enthusiastic to the highest point imaginable.

When James E. Martine entered the hall escorting Hon. J. S. Beckwith, of Ohio, round after round of applause was given.

Mr. Martine called the meeting to order and Charles H. Lyman was made chairman. When he took the position of honor the heartiest applause was accorded him. Mr. Lyman spoke somewhat as follows:

"Gentlemen, I consider it an honor to preside over a meeting of this kind, which stands for the principles of William Jennings Bryan and his party. I am a good American citizen and would fight for my country if necessary. I stand on the Chicago platform first, last and all times, no matter what the enemy calls me."

Hon. J. S. Beckwith, of Ohio, was then introduced by Mr. Lyman, and again loud applause was given. The address of Mr. Beckwith was substantially as follows:

"I am a good deal Ohio and considerable New Jersey. I am here to-night to help drive out of this county a pack of wolves. I have been a Republican since the party was known and was one of the original forty. The delegates who went to St. Louis wanted free silver. A certain delegate present said, 'We have an Ohioan of whom we think a great deal, but you can't place him in nomination unless you swallow our gold-coated pill. The pill was taken and it made many sick at their stomachs, and I am one of those who was made sick. I am a Republican, but I am here to plead the cause of the Democrats. There were eight-tenths of every State that declared for bimetalism, but the Republicans revolted and repudiated. They are not Republicans, for they want to help England instead of the American citizen and his country. I am now an old man and you may wonder why I am here. I will tell you. It is because the present issue is more serious than any since the war. It is a contest of the American citizen to be freed from a moneyed power. You people of the east are only new in the fight. You have not felt the effects of the enemy like we have in the west, where heartrending scenes have been witnessed. Just think of potatoes selling for seven cents a bushel and onions for four cents a bushel. What kind of a living can a farmer make on such prices. It is one story like the Lord's Prayer, for the more times it is repeated the better it is. A trust, what is it? It takes away the rights from man to live. It won't let you have a match to light your pipe without first fixing the price on it. Monopolists are reducing the soil producer to want, but we are going to build America anew. We have a responsible duty on our hands. The question is American freedom or gold oppression by wealth.

"All-wise Providence gave man coal, but the trust seized it and now families are obliged to suffer because they can't pay the price. Again, God is just, and he gave us oil. But the Standard Oil Company has seized the product of the Almighty and controls every gallon that is consumed. No American in Congress or out would have stricken the silver measure from our statute books unless he was under English control. Shall silver be restored? The swayback Democrat or nondescript has got around his neck a chain of gold, and we should bury them in a grave and mark it 'unknown.' They tell us we claim alone for free silver, but at Chicago you demanded free coinage of gold and silver. One is as fair as the other. Shall the money of our fathers be restored to us? Money is the product of God for man's use and a value has been placed upon it carefully and they went to the trouble of using the French scale to do it, and silver has been kept at a parity with gold all the way through. Money is life and the blood of the nation. The colors white and yellow are significant, and white and yellow it shall remain for the American people. In 1874 silver money was drawn out of body politic, and we are now here to send John Sherman out of remembrance. Anyone that says aught against McKinley is doing so against an honest man, but anyone saying aught against Bryan is a slanderer. Sherman took one half of the blood out of the nation and in consequence gold has gone up and will continue to go up at the present rate. If I am a boy ten years old who wasn't intelligent enough to understand these questions I would send for a brain specialist. I stand here to tell you that when the American people pay her bonds in the money she promised to that is honor enough to take to my grave. In 1874-'75 we were threatened with a panic and wages went down. Farmers formed an alliance of which you are the outgrowth. It will take seventy-three years to get the amount of silver that Congress secured by two single acts. The gold men are too mean to believe in our country's power and they want to get England to help them out. We believe in the Stars and Stripes and we are independent of every nation on the face of the earth. We are told that Congressman Fowler secured money at 5 per cent and loaned it at 12 per cent. The English people will never run us as the Republican party want them to do, and we will not suffer any more. You may go vote for McKinley, you may vote for Bryan, or you needn't vote at all, but we shall put Bryan in power. Will you work that the American people shall be free and rule this nation?"

Loud and continued applause followed Mr. Beckworth's address. Then the crowd called for Mr. Martine, and amid deafening applause the Farmer Orator ascended to the platform, and it was fully five minutes before he could speak. Just before he commenced a man present exclaimed "the only real Democrat in Union county," referring to Mr. Martine. The speaker then continued in part as follows: "It wouldn't be Jim Martine if there was a Democratic meeting in town and he wasn't present and had something to say. A Republican speaker, Mr. Moody, while in this city recently took the trouble to speak of Jim Martine, by saying that he would sell his soul for a political job. Now, this man doesn't know me. Ever since I was eighteen years old I have been in politics, and there was times when it cost something to be a Democrat, and you, gentlemen, know me. I believe that Mr. Moody has no soul to sell for a job or title. I believe that there is prosperity in the remonetization of silver. Evils are pictures which are ridiculous. They tell us that we will get a fifty three cent dollar and that the silver mine owner will get a hundred cent dollar. A dollar is a dollar the world over, and the Republicans know that they are telling that which is absolutely false. They tell us that England will send our bonds back. If they want to send them back why Charley Fisk, the gold man, will buy them. The fact is that we would be to prosperous that it wouldn't be necessary to deal in bonds. The Republicans make use of the word 'flooded' frequently. At one time they howled about our being flooded with pauper labor, and now they are crying about our being flooded with pauper money. Why, I believe that if McClure, Fisk and Atterbury should wake up some morning and find their yards flooded with silver, they would pray to God that it would be kept up for four days more. We produce the silver in our country, and other countries buy from us. Last year England bought $50,000,000 worth of silver. Suppose she should send silver here to be coined, it would be coined in American dollars, and then what would the German, Englishman and Frenchman do? Would they leave it on the docks or store it away? No! they would spend it in this country and we would hum with prosperity. The Republican tells us that free silver would paralyze business, but ex-President Harrison said it would stimulate business. McKinley could not be favored bimetalism and silver as well as gold and the two should steadily be mentioned. If gold is the meeca, why is it that people living in gold countries don't stay there.

"The following statistics from the New York Tribune almanac gives us an idea of how people emigrate from gold countries last year. England sent us 31,000, Germany 36,000, Italy, who sends men here to dig John Kean's water ditches, sent us 43,966, France gave us 3,630, and Japan which has a silver standard, sent us only 489.

An Irishman was once given a small drink of whiskey which he was told was seventeen years old, and when asked what he thought of it replied that it was small for its age, and that is the same way with gold, it is small for its age. A man asked me the other day what my definition of 16 to 1 was, and I told him that it meant that for sixteen years we have been fooled, but by the eternal this one year we would not be fooled. When a pulpit orator stands before a Christian Endeavor audience, only two days ago, in our city, and says that the Democratic platform was born and drafted in hell, I think he is a blackguard and the assertion comes with ill grace. Those who fought for our country thirty years ago came from the ranks of the Democratic party. If the Mayor of our city should tomorrow require the assistance and help of men 90 per cent of them would come from the boulevard, while the gold men would skulk away and buy cheap substitutes. Mr. Republican, have you forgotten that Herr Most, anarchist, T. V. Powderly, the labor agitator, and Breckenridge, the young woman's friend, is with you? We have no money, but we have always had someone to come to our rescue and Wm. Jennings Bryan is our leader. Wealth is combined against us, but we can vote as we choose and we will. We can't send carriages after you to take you to the polls but the gold men will have lots of carriages. I appeal to you to stand firm and when the time comes to vote to do so."

When Mr. Martine finished his address the crowd went wild with enthusiasm, and in fact all through the address loud applause was given every few minutes. Mr. Wolfskell, of Elizabeth, a member of the State Democratic committee, was present and was called upon for an address. He responded in a happy manner by saying that he had heard that there was no Democrats left in Plainfield, but he was convinced that there were a few left. He then continued and spoke concerning the gold and silver question, and explained in an impressive and clear manner his ideas on the same. At the close three cheers was given for Bryan and three more for Mr. Martine, after which the meeting adjourned. Among those sat on the platform was Frank M. Bacon, an earnest silver supporter.

DEMOCRATS CANNOT UNITE.

Somerset County Estimates Show That McKinley Will Have a Majority.

A strong effort has been made in Somerset county to keep the gold and silver Democrats united on a county ticket. The gold Democrats held a conference on Friday and sent word to the silver leaders that if they would nominate a county ticket without indorsing the Chicago platform they would unite with them. This the silverites refused to do, so the gold men decided to nominate a ticket of their own, as published in Saturday's Press. A petition is now being circulated, as the nomination must be made in that way.

The ticket has the support of all the straight-outers of the party, and they think it will poll a heavy vote. James J. Meehan and William J. Keys are the only leaders of importance left with the free silverites. It has also been decided to nominate a candidate for Congress in the Third district, on the Indianapolis platform. A petition is being circulated for W. S. Jones, of Red Bank, and it will be no trouble to get the number of names required.

James J. Meehan, who leads the free silver movement, says that he believes the county will give a small majority for Bryan and Sewall. The gold men and the Republican leaders say that McKinley will get more than one thousand majority.

The silverites hold their county convention on Monday, October 19th.

STRONG BUSINESS COMBINATION.

H. E. Rider's and C. H. Lister's Bicycle Stores to be Joined.

It is probable that this afternoon the necessary papers will be signed for the formation of a company to succeed H. E. Rider and Charles Lister in the bicycle business on an extensive scale. Those interested in the company are B. A. Hegeman, jr., L. S. Pocock, A. D. Thompson and Meests. Rider and Lister. It is intended that Mr. Lister will combine his store with the one now conducted by Mr. Rider on the opposite side of North avenue. Mr. Lister is an experienced dealer in bicycles and together with the well known enterprise and responsibility of the other members of the company, the combination would be a strong one.

Messrs. Hegeman and Pocock will be directors and Messrs Thompson, Lister and Rider the incorporators.

Many political speakers, clergymen, singers and others who use the voice excessively, rely upon One Minute Cough Cure to prevent huskiness and laryngitis. Its value as a preventive is only equaled by its power to afford instaneous relief. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

VICTORIA MAY RETIRE.

England's Queen Weary of Performing Official Duties.

A Few of the Notable Events in the Venerable Sovereign's Career—Characteristics of the Prince of Wales and Duke of York.

[Special Letter.]

Twice within 13 months the rumor that Queen Victoria contemplated retiring from Great Britian's throne has come across the ocean. When the statement was made early in 1895 it was discredited in all well-informed circles, but the latest reports seem to be based on substantial grounds and an announcement of the queen's withdrawal from active political life may be expected any day. It is hardly probable, however, that the queen contemplates abdication. She is a woman of remarkable pride and, in spite of physical debility, a great stickler for etiquette. Should she decide to rid herself of the cares of state she will insist upon remaining queen and the prince of Wales will perform her functions possibly under the title of regent, but he will not become king of Great Britain as long as his mother may live.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

Has Reigned Nearly Sixty Years.

Queen Victoria's reign has been one of the most beneficial in the history of Great Britain. When she was born, May 14, 1819, in Kensington palace, the daughter of the impoverished Edward, duke of Kent, there were several lives between her and the succession; and when she ascended the throne on June 20, 1837, the people of England felt restless and discouraged. But the young girl, whose succession was viewed with so much alarm, developed into one of the ablest rulers of the world. Without being ultra-conservative, she insisted upon the observation of every form and ceremony calculated to inspire respect for the monarchy, and, at the same time, granted many privileges to the common people the bestowal of which had been fought desperately by her stubborn predecessors, the Georges. Her marriage, Feburary 10, 1840, to her cousin, Prince Albert of Saxe-Gotha, with whom she had long been deeply in love, was not received favorably by her subjects, who did not become reconciled to it until after the prince's death, December 14, 1861. Then it began to dawn upon the cordial British minds that there might be such a thing as love, after all; and riches, villages and hamlets joined in expressing sympathy for their bereaved queen. The noble gentleman who, in his lifetime, had been ridiculed and lampooned by duke and pauper, was held up to the world as a pattern of a man and husband. The praise came too late, however, to please the queen, who showed her devotion to the memory of her consort by remaining faithful to it. During their 21 years of married life the queen and her consort were blessed with nine children, all of whom are living except Leopold, duke of Albany, who died March 28, 1884, and Princess Alice, wife of Grand Duke Frederick William of Hesse, who died December 14, 1878. The children still living are Albert Edward, prince of Wales, the duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha; the duke of Connaught; the empress Frederick of Germany; Princess Christian of Denmark; Princess Louise, wife of the marquis of Lorne, and Princess Beatrice whose husband, Prince Henry of Battenberg, died recently in South Africa."

QUEEN VICTORIA.

Attempts on the Queen's Life.

The momentous political events, in which Queen Victoria took an active part, can be counted by the score. In her reign the population of the mother country increased from 26,000,000 to close on 45,000,000, and that of the colonies has grown from 4,000,000 to 17,000,000. As empress of India her role bounds over nearly 1,500,000 square miles, with a population of 275,000,000. In 1854 she declared war against Russia, and, in alliance with France and Turkey, compelled the St. Petersburg government to give up its intention of seizing Constantinople. In 1856 she entered into war against China and Persia, both of which countries were eventually compelled to accede to Britain's demand. The mutiny of the Indian army, in 1857, was suppressed effectually at her request, but she afterward instituted many reforms in her Asiatic empire, thereby preventing a repetition of the horrors of the Sepoy. Humanitarian enterprises of every description received her active support, both as a woman and as a sovereign; and the great railway system of the United Kingdom was established with her direct assistance. Like almost every other old-world ruler, the queen has repeatedly been the mark of would-be assassins. The first attempt on her life was made by Edward Oxford, who discharged two pistols at her and Prince Albert, as they were proceeding up Constitution hill in an open phaeton from Buckingham palace, June 10, 1840. He stood within a few yards of the carriage, but no one was injured. Oxford was next to be sent to an asylum and set at liberty in 1868, on condition of going abroad. On the 27th of June, 1850, a fellow named Pate tried to imitate Oxford, but the queen escaped unharmed. On February 29, 1872, Arthur O'Connor, a boy 18 years of age, entered Buckingham palace with an unloaded pistol, and threatened to shoot the queen. He was apprehended and sentenced to imprisonment and flogging. The last attempt at assassination was that by Roderick Maclean, who, on March 10, 1882, shot at the queen at the Great Western railway station at Windsor. He was committed for high treason. Somewhat more pleasant than these occurrences was the queen's experience with an eccentric miser, named John Camden Neild, who was so pleased with her personality and public acts that he bequeathed to her the sum of £ 250,000 on August 30, 1852.

Albert Edward, Prince of Wales.

Should the prince of Wales be appointed regent, as has been reported, he would be the real head of the nation, except in name. And he would be the most popular male ruler England has had for nearly a century and a half. Albert Edward was born in Buckingham palace November 9, 1841. He studied under private tutors, passed one session at the University of Edinburgh, spent a year at Oxford, and pursued a four-years' course of study at Cambridge. In 1858 he was made a colonel in the British army and devoted some time to the study of military tactics in camp at the Curragh. Two years later he visited Canada and the United States, being received in both countries with great enthusiasm. The position of heir-apparent is never a pleasant one. Its incumbent cannot take part in politics, and tradition forbids him to participate in the affairs of state. These conditions in a measure wrecked the prince's life, which has been of an ornamental character altogether. Among the sporting fraternity of the continent he is known as a "high roller." This sobriquet he has earned by years of devotion to the gaming table and the betting ring, two pastimes which have frequently placed him in financial straits. Parliament relieved him several times, as did also wealthy friends, among them the late Baron Hirsch, who bequeathed to his highness $1,000,000 in unpaid notes. The only serious pursuit which he has followed is freemasonry, his gentleness having repeatedly honored him with election to the grandmastership of England. On March 10, 1863, the prince married Princess Alexandra of Denmark. Their married life has not been without bitterness. The princess, like all the other girls of the Danish royal family, was brought up to look upon lying in all kinds with horror, and the innumerable scandals with which her husband's name has been connected are said to have soured her naturally sweet disposition. Among the women of England the princess of Wales is extremely popular, as she is not only a model wife but at the same time one of the best dressers in Europe.

Second in Succession.

Next in succession to the prince of Wales is George, duke of York, who was born June 3, 1865. He is the second child of the prince and princess of Wales, their eldest son, Albert Victor, having died January 14, 1892. Albert Victor was engaged to Princess Mary of Teck, and after his death George took his place not only in the line of succession, but also as the bridegroom of his fiancee, the marriage occurring on July 6, 1893. The duke of York is known as "the sailor prince," and is well liked, although he is said to be far from perfect in his manners or morals.

POOR OLD UNCLE SAM.

Almost Everybody Tries to Loot His Treasury.

Big Thieves and Little Thieves by the Score Steal Money from the Government—How They Work Their Schemes.

[Special Washington Letter.]

Men who call themselves respectable, and who are sometimes called honorable, often try to loot the national treasury; and they do not seem to have any twangs of conscience.

The protection afforded the treasury by the senators and representatives in congress, and particularly the chairmen of the committees on appropriations, guarantees safety of the public funds. There are more honest men than dishonest men in congress, or else they are compelled to be good for fear of consequences. It is most likely that their moral sense, in a majority of cases, is well developed, for appropriations are carefully scanned before being passed in committee, or in the forum of debate.

President Cleveland, however, found it necessary to veto the river and harbor appropriation bill, and also the general deficiency bill. There was an immense amount of jobbery in the river and harbor bill, but nearly every member of the house of representatives had a slice of the steal, and hence the bill was passed by a two-thirds majority over the veto, and the money was thus appropriated. Fortunately large sums are left to the discretion of the secretary of war for disbursement; and the secretary is in no hurry to expend the public funds needlessly.

The general deficiency bill contained two rank steals, and everybody in Washington knew that the veto was right. The bill was killed by the veto, and could not be passed by a two-thirds vote, as the river and harbor bill had been. Four years ago a certain senator, who occupied a position of prominence and power, inserted an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the French spoliation claimants, as an amendment to the general deficiency bill. The bill carried so many important items that President Harrison did not veto it, and hence the treasury was looted to that amount. During the past session of congress the same senator championed the French spoliations claimants again, in the secret of a committee room; but did not do so on the floor of the senate. On the contrary, he intrusted the work to another senator, who proposed the amendment providing $1,000,000 for French spoliation claims, while the principal senator was absent from the senate chamber for a few minutes. That enabled the chief manager to say, if ever accused of jobbery: "Thou canst not say I did it."

The same appropriation bill opened the way for enormous appropriations under what is known as the Bowman act. If the bill had become a law, there would have been fully $100,000,000 drawn from the treasury inside of ten years, for the payment of obsolete and unworthy claims. But the president vetoed the bill, and thereby rendered his country a great service. Senators and representatives who voted for the big steals referred to would not listen to the demands of smaller and more deserving claimants.

But not only during the sessions of congress are the raids made. They are with us all the time, trying and scheming to get their hands into the treasury. There are schemers and plotters of every description, and not one of them seems to think that it is wrong to swindle the federal government.

Fifteen years ago appropriations were made for the purpose of constructing a tunnel a mile long, to carry water to a section of this city which was not well supplied. The tunnel was constructed under the direction of engineers of the army, and when it was completed the aggregate appropriations amounted to nearly $2,000,000. About ten years ago the tunnel was ready for use, and before turning the water into this viaduct the quartermaster general caused an inspection, and he made an honest report. Everybody was amazed to learn that the enormous sum of $2,000,000 had been practically thrown away. The tunnel was useless, and had been constructed not for the purpose of carrying water, but for the purpose of robbing the government. The hole in the ground was there, but the brick work lining was an awful botch. Common plaster instead of cement had been used. Great holes above the brick work were left unfilled; and the pressure of water would have broken down the brick lining almost immediately. The contractors cared nothing for that. All they wanted was to have the tunnel accepted by the government, so that they could draw their final moneys from the treasury, and get away from Washington as soon as possible.

The tunnel is still there. It has never been used, and it cannot be used without the expenditure of at least another million dollars. Moreover, other appropriations might be misspent in that same hole; and nobody seems to be willing to take the responsibility of recommending that the work be taken up and honestly completed.

That is only a sample of the methods employed by unscrupulous men to get money from the treasury without rendering an equivalent for it. We recently have found another little steal going on; and it is of such a petty nature that nobody would have suspected it. We are not surprised when we see men reaching for hundreds of thousands or millions; but we never expect men to undertake little jobs for a few thousand dollars. In other words, little shrewd do not abound among men who have attained positions and secured recognition before the executive departments, or who have the privilege of doing business on Capitol hill. The last discovery of corruption involves only the sum of $3,000; and out of that the contractor could not have made more than $4,000, although he might have made at least $1,000 if he had done his work honestly.

Opposite this city, on the Virginia heights, there is a cavalry post called Fort Myer. It is near Arlington cemetery, and in plain view of Washington. For several years there has been considerable complaint concerning the meager supply of water at Fort Myer, and various plans have been considered for supplying a sufficient amount of water for the comfort, convenience and health of the soldiers stationed there. The prevailing impression was that a viaduct must be built to connect the fort with the water supply of this city. In accordance with this plan, an appropriation of $100,000 was made, and the secretary of war caused the subject to be investigated by his engineer officers, who reported that a well ought to be sunk on the premises which would supply sufficient water, and which would cost not much less than the viaduct. It was reported that a flow of 50,000 gallons per day would be ample, and surely that amount could be procured by an artesian well. At any rate the effort should be made.

Just at that juncture ex-Congressman Levi Maish, of Pennsylvania, secured the contract for digging the well, his compensation to be $8,000, if he could produce 50,000 gallons per day. Col. Maish hired a subcontractor in Pennsylvania, brought him here and set him to work. Three wells were dug, the first two being unsatisfactory. The third well produced a flow of 60,000 gallons of pure water per day; and the government chemist declared that the water was absolutely pure. It was not a spontaneous flow, but was forced up with an eight-horse power pump. It was thoroughly tested, and sure enough 50,000 gallons per day were produced, and the well was accepted, and the $8,000 paid to the chief contrator.

The quartermaster general recently caused the well to be carefully examined, because it did not produce the amount of water required. In fact when the pump was worked and the water used, it soon gave out. Investigation disclosed the fact that a four-inch terra cotta pipe was connected with the well, and ran down the hill side into a little brook. A few hundred yards down the stream a dam had been constructed which backed up the brook water, so that it could be pumped into the fort premises. But, as long as the water was merely pumped to show its volume, it ran back into the little stream; and thus a flow of 50,000 gallons per day was kept up. The same water was being pumped up over and over again. There was no well at all, and there never had been a well. It was simply the dishonest practice of a subcontractor who secured his money and then disappeared.

Congress appropriated $100,000 to provide a water supply for Fort Myer. The sum of $8,000 has already been expended and no result produced, so now only $92,000 remain available for the purpose, and the soldiers at Fort Myer must still go thirsty, or else pump up water from their little brook until it becomes exhausted, and it is not very full of water during this hot season. The ex-congressman proposes to pay back the $8,000, although he will be the loser of that amount, in addition to the money which he paid the swindling subcontractor. The question is, how will he get it back into the treasury. Under existing practices, the money having been expended for the well, and the treasury books showing that fact, the money can only be restored to the treasury as a part of the succeeding fund. It cannot be credited to the appropriation for Fort Myer's water supply.

It is of vast importance to everyone in this country, that only honest men be sent to congress, and only honest men be placed in high positions in the national capitol. It is important to the farmer, the miner, the merchant, the manufacturer, the preacher, the wife, mother, daughter, son, and to the infant in arms, that this should be honestly and in truth a government of the people, for the people and by the people.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISES.

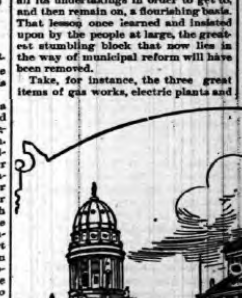
City of Berlin Derives Large Revenues from Them.

How German City Councils Deal with Corporations—Contracts Which Add Millions a Season to Depleted City Treasuries.

[Special Berlin (Germany) Letter.]

For sound municipal government it is indispensable to let out contracts and leases and to dispose of franchises in a way to redound to the best interests of the community, financial returns included. Whoever has given the subject of American city government the slightest attention knows that it is precisely in this respect that it is most at fault. The municipal history of New York is in itself a glaring illustration of the systematized looting mayors and aldermen have made of their most important prerogative, and the enormous debts piled up and the insufficient income of most of our large American cities are, leaving downright corruption out of the question, the consequence of reprehensible neglect of all due precaution in guarding the interests of the commonwealth against the greed of private schemers. To bring about a thorough reform of municipal government in the United States nothing is more needed than to inculcate the lesson deeply in the hearts and brains of the average city council that the needs of a city are just like those of a private individual, of a commercial firm—there must be profits in all its undertakings in order to get to, and then remain on, a flourishing basis. That lesson once learned and insisted upon by the people at large, the greatest stumbling block that now lies in the way of municipal reform will have been removed.

Take, for instance, the three great items of gas works, electric plants and



SCHILLER PLACE AND ROYAL THEATER.

intermural communication. All three of them have been made important sources of revenue to Berlin and with that the quality and price of the service rendered by the companies is above what is rendered by American companies. In Berlin the gas supply has been made a city feature. The works are operated, however, by two distinct companies, at the city's risk and under the city's strict control. Both the grade of the illuminating and fuel gas and their prices are prescribed and no deviation is, under any circumstances, permitted. The gas is tested daily by municipal officers. The price is about 50 per cent lower than in the majority of large American cities. Yet the clear profits accruing to the municipal treasury every year are reckoned by the millions, and the taxes are by that much diminished. Berlin is, however, not by any means alone in this respect. Other German cities owning their gas works are Hamburg, Breslau, Dresden, Leipsic,

MONUMENT OF FREDERICK WILLIAM III.

Cologne, Konigsburg, Bremen, Nuremberg, Dantzic, Magdeberg, Chemnitz, Dusseldorf, Barmen, Stettin and Brunswick. And in every instance they are making it a success in every respect, both as to price and quality and means of revenue.

In the matter of electric plants things are still in an evolutionary stage in Germany, municipal governments being here rather slow before engaging in enterprises as to the value and permanence of which they do not yet feel fully assured. The Berlin works were opened in 1886, and the five important German cities of Breslau, Cologne, Dusseldorf, Altona and Cassel have like plants of their own likewise. In other German cities they have preferred contracts with private firms, Siemens & Halske being the favored one. In each case, however, the city's interests are fully guarded. As a sample I [illegible] the revised contract [illegible] Berlin and [illegible] which the company may operate, expires, under heavy penalties, it is to have been fully provided with [illegible] within a brief period, specified in the contract. As compensation for [illegible] sion (not exclusive) to use the [illegible] it is agreed that the municipality shall receive ten per cent. of the company's gross receipts, and, moreover, whenever the company earns [illegible] profit of more than six per cent. on the actual investment of capital, the treasury shall receive 25 per cent. of such excess of income. In addition, ten per cent. of the gross income, further, it is agreed that the city shall provide the magnificent [illegible] lumination of Unter den Linden, together with that of the Potsdamer Platz and of Leipziger strasse, at the expense of maintenance and service, at a price so low as to be nominal.

Besides this a special and [illegible] rate is provided for such further [illegible] tric street lighting as the municipality may desire. The city authorities retain the fullest rights of inspection both technical and financial, and the company's affairs are open to the knowledge of responsible public officials. The city requires the deposit of 250,000 marks as surety, and holds the company down to the strictest possible regard to the laying of wires and the breaking up of streets or sidewalk surfaces. The company is required, however, to maintain a reserve fund equal to 20 per cent. of its invested capital, and this fund, in the form of Berlin municipal bonds, must be kept on deposit with the city magistracy. In consequence the agreement is a financial schedule of rates that the company is authorized to charge its private patrons. No departure from established rates can be made without the consent of the city authorities. Finally the municipality reserved the right to buy the entire plant and all its appurtenances at any time after October 1, 1893, on a fair basis of valuation, carefully provided for in the contract. The whole arrangement is the perfection of business lucidity and intelligence. And I may add that under all the above conditions the company has been doing a flourishing business.

And now as to franchises granted to street railway companies. Generally, it may be said that such franchises are much more profitable property in America than here; but, on the other hand, the companies themselves are under incomparably closer municipal control in Germany, and they have to pay about all for the privilege enjoyed one can reasonably expect of them. In most instances they have to pay a tax of from eight to ten per cent. more upon gross receipts, with certain other advantages accruing to the city, such as reduced rates of transportation. For short distances the rate of price for a ride is one cent, as is the case in American cities, viz., ten pfennigs, for longer distances it is increased to 15 or 20 pfennigs, or five cents. School children and others have a much lower rate. There about the general rule in German cities of large size. There is also a good fee for horse, steam or electric cars, with rates averaging 50 per cent. less than prevail in American elevated roads, the Berlin city railway (or "Stadtbahn") is the most constructed safest elevated line in existence, and yet it pays handsome dividends.

In dealing with these companies, too, the city always takes the best care of its own interests. Thus just now the Berlin horse railway franchise (for another 15 years) granted to the largest and most flourishing of the Berlin street railway companies—the Greater Berlin Horse Car company—has about been perfected. It yields the city much greater advantages and a much higher profit out of its revenues than did the old franchise. The tax on the gross receipts has been increased from eight to ten per cent., and will go on increasing to 15 per cent. The company is held to put in permanent improvements to the amount of 18,000,000 marks (or about $2,500,000) on its extensive lines. Besides it agrees to replace, gradually, all its horse railways by electric lines within a few years, and to introduce a uniform ten pfenning rate and a complete system of transfers for the original fare paid.

From the three sources named above the city has an average annual income of 23 to 25 million marks. There is not in the whole length and width of the United States a single city which can show similar results of its street railway system or other public conveniences. But of course, as I pointed out before, the first requisite necessary to bring about similarly wholesome conditions in American cities is to elect only honest and capable aldermen and [illegible] men, men having the welfare of [illegible] at heart, not only on the [illegible]

Dear, could the light come back again
That never was on land, nor sea;
But only in youth's dreaming brain
As all life's pure ideals be,
Would you take willing hands, with me,
To walk once more, through sun and dew,
By mead and meadow, tower and tree—
In that old world we loved—and knew?

Would you cross over months and years
By milestones long, long left behind,
Back to that time of April tears
And April smiles—the breathing wind
Warm with May's promise? Could you find
The leafy footway through the wood?
Would your white hands the branches bind,
Your glad eyes seek me, where I stood?

How fair it was, the sylvan scene!
Dim vistas through the forest space
Throbbing with light—translucent green,
The young buds bursting from the sprays,
And the sweet vision of your grace!
Soft eyes, soft hair, half childhood's mirth,
Half woman's passion in your face—
Too warm for heaven—too pure for earth!

If, by some spell that past hath,
If, by some fairy's secret chart,
We two might find that dear lost path,
Would you turn back from busy mart
And life's wild rush and whirl, apart,
To love's first kisses, dreams and sighs?
I would turn back with you, sweetheart,
Yes, from the gates of Paradise!

CAMPAIGN BANNERS.

How the Most Elaborate Designs Are Rushed Through at Railroad Speed—It Is a Regular Business.

[COPYRIGHT, 1896.]

Already the campaign banner is swinging mid air across the avenues and adorning the various political headquarters. Very few people, as they gaze on these works of art, have any idea of their manufacture — simply knowing that they appear after the selection of the candidates for presidential honors, and associating them with fireworks, brass bands and oratory.

The making of campaign banners is, however, an extensive business—several firms devoting themselves exclusively to their manufacture. It is true that banners are sometimes gotten up by cigar palaces for a small show, that crop up for the occasion, but they are not to be classed with the banners turned out by the regular factories. A visit to one of these establishments reveals some interesting facts.

On the chosen banners only the names and sentiments of the candidates appear, but the large and costly ones have the portraits of both nominees painted in ovals, separated by fanciful designs. Both the original figure of Liberty and the eagle performing feats that would fax a contortionist—airily balanced on a shield, his talons filled with enormous bundles of arrows, a pennant expressing his political opinions floating gracefully from his beak; or with a shield suspended from his neck he takes his wild flight across the rising sun. The Goddess of Liberty and other designs are executed in an equally striking manner.

The first-class campaign banner is the product of the combined efforts of three men—the portrait painter, the sign painter and the sailmaker. In making the banner the work is divided up. The painting, which is done on sized muslin, may be accomplished in two ways. If the man is an expert, he takes a large circle of pasteboard, having the features cut out, and traces the general outline and size of the head, using a photograph to finish the portrait from. But the usual method is by the use of stencils, each stencil being for a different color. The large pieces of muslin, tacked on boards, are ranged in a row around the room, and men with pots of paint pass from one to the other with great rapidity. Painter No. 1 lays in the hair, No. 2 follows with the flesh tint, No. 3 puts on the shirt and collar, and No. 4 the coat; thus the foundation is laid in for the artist, who comes along with his huge palette and completes the portrait.

Meanwhile, the sign painters, perched on stools and boxes, are putting on long strips of muslin "The People's Choice" and other equally flattering sentiments. The sailmakers cut a roll of square meshed net into the different banner sizes, binding them with a thick rope covered with canvas.

No stencils are used for the emblems. They are spontaneous bursts of the artist's imagination. He can indulge his genius in eagles as much as he chooses, he pleases, and Liberties as defiant. This is not all. A banner once painted is not a loss, even if it remains on the firm's hands. As the artist remarked, "putting on or taking off a mustache or beard, rearranging hair, an extra touch of fat or lean as the case requires is a small matter, accomplished by a few strokes of the brush." The sign painter is equally handy at altering the political mottoes.

The banner takes some days to dry, and a week to finish. A section is placed paint downward on the floor and the net put over it. The surface design is next pounced on top, and the sailmaker, sitting on the floor sailor fashion, sews it all together. Then the banner is ready to be raised with cheers and a flare of red fire

Cats That Became Wild.

When the lighthouse was built on Goat Island, in the Pacific ocean, 20 years ago, the first keeper took a number of cats to cheer him in his loneliness. The island at that time was the home of countless birds and myraids of quail. The cats soon found that they could get a living by hunting, and they began absenting themselves from home. They returned at long intervals for a year or two, and then stayed away all the time. They multiplied rapidly, grew large and fewer and have become a nuisance. They have almost exterminated the quail, and other birds are becoming scarce. Efforts to destroy them by shooting or poison have failed and they continue to increase.

Dancing Skeletons Killed Him.

A remarkable cause of death from fright was the case of the Dutch painter Poutman. He was at work in his studio, where there was a number of death's heads and skeletons, when he happened to fall asleep. During his sleep there was a slight shock of earthquake, and when he woke up suddenly he saw the skeletons and skulls dancing around in the greatest confusion. He at once became panic-stricken, and rushed across the room and threw himself out of the window on the pavement below. He died in a few days after, not from injuries received in the fall, but from the nervous shock given by the dancing skeletons, though the cause of the festivity was explained to him.

THE WIND'S MUSIC.

Ever about life's pathway floats
Strange music, thrilling and piercing notes,
Themes which, played by a master hand,
Surge through the length and breadth of the land.
Earth is the keyboard, each new day
Its keys are fingered in varied way,
And the master hand you may seek and find
With the wild, weird, wonderful, wanton wind.

Listen: at times there seem to swell
The dancing notes of a Tarantelle;
To-morrow perchance may the wind return,
But to-day—an elf on mischief bent,
Whirling the cap from a schoolboy's head,
Stealing the apples ripe and red,
Maddest of pranks for all mankind,
Wilful, worrying, witchlike wind!

Darkness falls, and there rolls a dirge
O'er the sleeping land and the ocean's surge.
Great, wild chords in their agony
Burst out, till ev'ry ear is wrung;
The music sinks to a mournful wail,
Rises and falls like some plaintive scale,
A funeral chant, or a requiem hymn,
Wailing, wuthering, warring wind!

Oftener still, from day to day,
A strange, monotonous fugue holds sway,
So fanciful-like, that the listener deems
Seems scarce its wandering maze to hear—
Filling type of one's daily life,
Notes in continuous, gentle strife,
Master product of master mind,
Wistful, tearful, weary wind!

Yet once more. As the summer's heat
Of the day is dying, a nocturne sweet
Steals from the hills with a soft "good night,"
Rippling a lake in the sunset light,
Gently swaying a leafy bough,
Soft, as a cool touch for an aching brow,
Rest for a weary human kind,
Welcom, whispering, western wind!

Ever about life's pathway floats
Strange music, thrilling and piercing notes,
Themes which, played by a master hand,
Surge through the length and breadth of the land.
Glad or sorrowful, grave or gay,
Varying signature each new day,
And the master musician whose hand and find
In the wild, weird, wonderful, wanton wind!

BEAUTIFUL MISS STARBIRD

BY CAROLINE L. FIELD.

Petticoat Lane is but a stone's throw from Gilbury Green. It is not very wide and not particularly straight, but it is wonderfully pretty of a June morning, say, when the rising sun streams in beneath the huge elms that stand like staunch men-at-arms, holding up a fair green canopy for Queen Summer to lie under; or in mid-September, when the same bright orb, a little flushed with his day's run, sends a rosier flood from the west to linger lovingly along the greensward that lies broad and cool on both sides of the way.

Petticoat Lane always green in Pettscost Lane from April till December, for a little brook runs singing down from Peddock's Hill to the west river, and it finds the lane so pleasant a place that it runs beside it for six of nine crossing from one side to the other, midway of its course, with a charming underground gurgle and rush, as beguiling to little ears as is the low, broad surface flow to the feet of cattle and horses.

The wall is very old. All its cool, dark crevices are hung with ferns, and its stones are veiled with moss. The lane itself is very old, and its houses date back to long ago.

Just where the narrow brown roadway makes its last curve to join the north turnpike stands the oldest house of all. The long, shingled roof slopes down nearly to the grass behind. A tall, weather-beaten stone chimney rises higher than the five fluted stone chimneys on one side, and on the other an ample stoop, with queer wooden benches at either end, gives entrance to the wide central hallway. At the hallway along the lane stand other houses, old, also. This is the historic part of Gilbury. On other thoroughfares, dignified by the name of streets, there are dwellings which were built as recently as 50 years ago; on Petticoat Lane no house has seen fewer than 150 summers, and no summer of them all has opened upon the earth with fairer promise than that in which my story opens.

The story may be said to have begun when Grandmother Starbird received, one fair May morning some 20 years ago, a letter written on thin, foreign paper, and having a blue, a gray and a yellow stamp on the envelope. Postmaster Fixon looked at it twice, once through his spectacles and once over them, before he put it into the Starbird box, and old Joshua Plummer, who usually acted as mail-carrier for the "far end o' the lane," studied King Victor Emanuel's face all the way up town, until he would have recognized him anywhere. Grandmother Starbird no sooner set eyes upon the letter than she flung the gray yarn stocking she was knitting across the room, and pushed Joshua Plummer into the nearest chair while she ran to fetch him a glass of her oldest currant wine as a reward of merit.

"There, there that, Joshua, and wish me joy! Elinor is coming home."

Joshua eyed her shrewdly. The currant wine, or something else, had set his little old eyes a-twinkle.

"Do Starbird's kin, if you can read letters afore ye open on 'em. That's a terrible flimsy arrivelope, an' no mistake, but I didn't know as your eyes was quite so keen."

"I don't need to read it, Joshua, except to say that she'll be here. She was 21 years old a fortnit's ago Tuesday. When her mother's folks took her away she said she should come back as soon as she was her own mistress, and Elinor Starbird never breaks her word."

"H'm! That'll kinder rile Uncle Haynes, now, won't it?" remarked the old man in a tone that "said Uncle Haynes' riling was a matter of small concern to either of the persons present.

Grandmother Starbird merely compressed her soft, puckered old lips and elevated her nose a little. She never discussed family affairs with outsiders, but her expressive face was not under so strict control.

Joshua Plummer chuckled.

"Well, I'll be goin' along. That wine is most excellent good! Ye he'n't read yer letter yet, but as ye seem so plug now or what's into it? Those there ain't no objections to my spreadin' the news a mite?"

"Spread away, Joshua! If I was to say 'don't' 'twould be all the same in the end, so you may as well be regularly delegated. I'm expecting my granddaughter some time within a fortnight, and I don't care who knows it. Now run along, and let me read my letter!"

So Joshua departed and the news spread. Gilbury was all agog. Six years before a slim, fair-haired girl, just out of short dresses, had sat on all their doorsteps, and eaten apples from all their early apple trees, and they had regarded her as being like themselves, loving and lovable, but in nowise uncommon. Now, however, it was different. Fashion, fortune and foreign travel had all materialized to Gilbury in the person of Elinor Starbird—"the beautiful Miss Starbird," as she had come to be called out yonder in the great world. When Uncle Haynes, who was also "Guardeen" Haynes, had persisted in carrying his charge off to Europe—as he always did for the completion of her education, but as all Gilbury keenly realized, to wean her from her father's family and old associations—no one but Grandmother Starbird supposed she would ever return to dwell among her own people as before. Now that her coming was imminent only the same old lady seemed able to await it with calmness. In this old New England village, peopled largely by the descendants of the original settlers, a long habit of friendship and neighborhood had grown to be second only to the bond of blood. Their old friend's grandchild had been like a grandchild to them all, and her coming was looked upon deeply resented by them all. Now that she was soon to come among them again no other subject could occupy thought or speech for the time being. Would she come alone, or would Uncle Haynes follow, since he could no longer lawfully? Would her stay be short or long? Would she still be the frank, open-hearted girl they had known, or would time and travel have changed, and worldly polish have dimmed her? All these points could but be guessed at. But two things were certain: She would be a woman grown, and all her clothing would be fresh from Paris. There was to be a Gilbury Green Fair in Pettscost Lane from April till December, for a little brook runs singing down from Peddock's Hill to the west river, and it finds the lane so pleasant a place that it runs beside it for six of nine crossing from one side to the other, midway of its course, with a charming underground gurgle and rush, as beguiling to little ears as is the low, broad surface flow to the feet of cattle and horses.

The wall is very old. All its cool, dark crevices are hung with ferns, and its stones are veiled with moss. The lane itself is very old, and its houses date back to long ago.

Just where the narrow brown roadway makes its last curve to join the north turnpike stands the oldest house of all. The long, shingled roof slopes down nearly to the grass behind. A tall, weather-beaten stone chimney rises higher than the five fluted stone chimneys on one side, and on the other an ample stoop, with queer wooden benches at either end, gives entrance to the wide central hallway. At the hallway along the lane stand other houses, old, also. This is the historic part of Gilbury. On other thoroughfares, dignified by the name of streets, there are dwellings which were built as recently as 50 years ago; on Petticoat Lane no house has seen fewer than 150 summers, and no summer of them all has opened upon the earth with fairer promise than that in which my story opens.

The story may be said to have begun when Grandmother Starbird received, one fair May morning some 20 years ago, a letter written on thin, foreign paper, and having a blue, a gray and a yellow stamp on the envelope. Postmaster Fixon looked at it twice, once through his spectacles and once over them, before he put it into the Starbird box, and old Joshua Plummer, who usually acted as mail-carrier for the "far end o' the lane," studied King Victor Emanuel's face all the way up town, until he would have recognized him anywhere. Grandmother Starbird no sooner set eyes upon the letter than she flung the gray yarn stocking she was knitting across the room, and pushed Joshua Plummer into the nearest chair while she ran to fetch him a glass of her oldest currant wine as a reward of merit.

"There, there that, Joshua, and wish me joy! Elinor is coming home."

Joshua eyed her shrewdly. The currant wine, or something else, had set his little old eyes a-twinkle.

"Do Starbird's kin, if you can read letters afore ye open on 'em. That's a terrible flimsy arrivelope, an' no mistake, but I didn't know as your eyes was quite so keen."

"I don't need to read it, Joshua, except to say that she'll be here. She was 21 years old a fortnit's ago Tuesday. When her mother's folks took her away she said she should come back as soon as she was her own mistress, and Elinor Starbird never breaks her word."

"H'm! That'll kinder rile Uncle Haynes, now, won't it?" remarked the old man in a tone that ferny, mossy glens, and slopes very much like those of the Hudson Highlands at Garrisons—only, instead of the fair river at the bottom, there is the sea roaring over rocks at the foot of the cliffs—and then, mile upon mile of heather and rusty bracken-carpenting, bare round hill-tops with never a tree or bush; and, after that, rolling stretches of the greenest pasture land, marked out in quaint shapes by the hedgerows, and full of cattle and sheep, grazing. There, on top of the coach we could see well over the country; and when one's imagination seemed most inland, a sudden turn on a high bit of road would bring us in sight of the sea again, stretching away to the north.

We reached Lynton about dusk, and found it a pretty old village on the very top of a steep wooded mountain. We went to a hotel mentioned by Baedeker, and found it delightful; small, but with all possible comforts. There we had a good dinner, after our three hours' ride, and slept a long night. Next morning we got a light "trap," with a strong, homely horse and a good driver, and started off on a nine-mile drive to Malmsmead, a hamlet of four houses at the entrance to the valley where the famous robber Doones lived two centuries ago, and which Blackmore romanced about in his quaint "Lorna Doone." That drive was lovelier than the coach ride, if possible. We followed a stream called the East Lyn, in its windings around the hills to the place where another stream joins it in a most picturesque glen, with much cascading and foam and spray. That they call "Watersmeet." From there we followed the other stream—the "Brendon Water," leaving it sometime to cross a hill but finding it again. At Malmsmead we left the "trap," and took a rug, a basket of sandwiches and a couple of copies of Lorne Doone, and marched away for three miles along the "Bagworthy Water," through a delightful valley. We found the ruins of the house where a daughter of the Doones really did live, and where Blackmore put Lorna, and there we sat and ate our luncheon, and then read for two hours in the warm sunshine with heather-covered hills all around shutting off the wind. We were quite alone. I had my doubts about our going off so—and the valley was the most deserted place I have ever seen—but all the natives laughed, and said that they had no railroads to bring rough characters, and that a tramp had never been seen in the country, and so sure enough, quite safe we were. We reached Malmsmead again between four and five, and found that one of the farmer's daughters had spread out tea for us—bread and butter, jam, cream, and tea itself—and very delicious at that. Then we drove home by another way, past Plovers' Barrows farm where John Ridd lived, and past Oare Church, where he married Lorna, and past Nicholas Snowe's farm—all the names are just as Blackmore wrote them, and much of his novel is history—and so, suddenly back to the sea, which we followed to Lynton. It was the most beautiful day that I have had in the whole year, and I think it will take a long time to jog it out of my memory.

This morning we came in the coach back to Ilfracombe and music work. Tomorrow, if it is clear, (which doesn't seem too probable) we want to go on an hour's journey with the little steamer toward the west, to Clovelly, which is an old fishing village, and very quaint, according to all accounts. Charles Kingsley has to do with it in "Westward Ho!"

Extend the Trolley By All Means.

The more the trolley extension is advocated between this city and Scotch Plains the more the people of the latter place are in favor of it. There is, however, some little objection to the enterprise and there is likely to be unless the railroad company buys off the objectors or else has a commission appointed for the purpose of adjudication. One thing is certain and sure, the extension would in a large degree help the Plainfield merchants, while the Scotch Plains merchants would not suffer to any noticeable extent.

agreed with John Sherman that the source of all the troubles and difficulties is deficiency in the revenue. Under Harrison and Morton, with a protective tariff, the country became the richest in the world and paid off a large portion of the National debt. Under Cleveland and the Wilson bill, he continued, the debt was greatly increased, the factories closed, and riots caused.

He then took up the topics of free silver and bimetalism and free silver, and said that every Nation that had tried free silver had failed. Even the United States has tried it with disastrious consequences. To make 53 cents of bullion into $1 means profit for somebody. "Who gets it?" he asked, and he answered, the western mine owners and the English syndicates that own mines there.

He then sketched the situation, as he imagined it, should Bryan be elected and drew a lurid picture. Such a situation, he was sure, would not happen, as all the right-minded men will vote for McKinley. He closed with an eloquent appeal to the voters which, when finished, brought forth tremendous applause.

That ended the meeting and the crowd soon dispersed.

BOOT WAS ON THE OTHER LEG.

McCauley, Who Prosecuted a Neighbor, Gets a Taste of His Own Medicine.

Alexander McCauley, of Scotch Plains, who gained so much unenviable notoriety among his neighbors for his prosecution of his old neighbor, Carl Bierstetter, whose chickens had eaten some of McCauley's corn, was himself brought before Judge Clark Saturday in a suit for damages brought by Philip Radin, a neighbor.

From the evidence presented it appeared that the young sons of McCauley had frequently walked over the grounds of Radin, as a short cut to their house, and in so doing had destroyed a tomato vine. Radin had afterward said that he would give McCauley a taste of his own sauce, served out on the old German, and hence the suit.

Judge Clark said he believed that the suit was brought solely to annoy McCauley, but the latter's own admissions left the Court noother course to pursue than to render a verdict for Radin, which he did for the sum of six cents and costs, which were paid by McCauley, who was loud in his criticisms.

EASY ANGLING, BUT COSTLY.

Two New Market Men Fined for Illegally Taking Bass From the Pond.

John Otto, the mill owner at New Market, drew off the water from his mill pond Monday morning and Theodore Roantree and Joseph Winckler, who live nearby, concluded that it would be a splendid opportunity to capture a catch of fish without much patience or expense. After the water had been drawn off it was not much trouble for them to spear a half bushel of bass and a few carp, and this they did with dexterity and rapidity. The fish were taken to the home of the former.

Game Warden Sebring heard of the instance and yesterday afternoon went to New Market with a search warrant and found the coveted fish in possession of Roantree. He immediately put the two fisherman under arrest and took them before Justice Storms on the charge of fishing in violation of the game laws. The justice found them guilty and fined them $20 and costs, which they paid. Roantree is employed as a barkeeper in the lake house.

MAY RUN MARSH FOR SENATOR.

The Democrats Seem to Think He Would Pacify Gold Men.

The Union County Democratic Executive Committee intends to make a vigorous effort to carry the county. They are casting about for a candidate for State Senator who will not be objectionable to the gold Democrats.

Prosecutor Fred C. Marsh, who made a gallant campaign last spring for the Mayoralty of Elizabeth, seems to the committee to be the strongest man who could be named for Senator. Up to last spring he had never been beaten in a political contest. Before he consented to run as a Democrats were demoralized, but through the vigorous campaign he inaugurated they were placed in control of the City Council and Board of Education.

SENATORIAL SHADOWS.

BEARING OF LOCAL CONTESTS ON CHOICE OF SMITH'S SUCCESSOR.

Senators and Sheriffs to be Elected Next Month Will be an Important Factor —How W. E. Sackett Looks at It.

William E. Sackett, the well-known political writer, had the following in The Herald Monday morning concerning the situation in this State:

The contest for the Republican nomination of Senator in Monmouth revealed a rivalry between John Kean, of Elizabeth, and Governor John W. Griggs for the next vacancy in the United States Senate, and it is likely that all of the contests for the nominations will be finctured by the same rivalry. The State Senatorial conventions have a direct relation to the struggle of 1899 for the chair at Washington which Senator James Smith now occupies. The Senator to be elected this fall will hold over into the Senate of 1899, and help to name the man. It is not to be assumed that Senator Smith is looking upon the Senatorial counties with an indifferent eye, safe as most of them may seem to be for the Republicans. He will doubtless throw his influence in behalf of favorable candidates on the Democratic side, and in the strife at the ballot boxes next month he will probably exert himself to pull as many of them as he can successfully through.

Which, by the way, is a very proper kind of an enterprise for Senator Smith to engage in. He has a perfect right to desire to succeed himself, and to employ all approved opportunities for the gratification of the desire.

It would scarcely be suspected that the Shrievalty contests could have any bearing, direct or indirect, upon the big Senatorial contest. But they will. The Sheriff, with the grand and petty jurors at his beck and call, and the property of luckless debtors at his mercy, is a big power in this county. He exerts an enormous influence. Like the State Senator, he who is elected to be a Sheriff this fall, will still be Sheriff in 1899, and no man seeking the support of a county forgets to pay his respects to this big dignitary of the Court House. His work and influence are always a big factor in determining the choice of the Assemblymen to be elected during his term to represent his county in the lower House, and every aspirant for Senatorial honors may be expected to do his level best to have the several conventions name and the several counties elect a sheriff who would prefer him above all competitors for the shining distinction.

The notable contests between Tice and Church in the recent Middlesex County Convention for its Shrievalty nomination is known now to have had a Senatorial end to it; and each of the rivalries for this particular county nomination will be sure to have its Senatorial sequel.

The imminence of this great struggle of 1896 will serve to lend a dignity and importance to these local contests that otherwise would attract no attention anywhere. The Union County convention especially will be watched with curious eyes by all the practical politicians. That happens to be Mr. Kean's own county, and it was Foster Voorhees's gubernatorial boom that took Union county from Mr. Kean in the gubernatorial convention of last fall and contributed so essentially to Governor Griggs's triumph there. It would be idle to say that Mr. Kean looks with favoring eye upon the apparent certainty of this fair-haired Senator's renomination. He may be presumed to see the advisability of having the Senator from his own county with him at the supreme moment. It might be a fatal weakness in his own campaign to have an unsympathetic statesman in that particular chair in the State Senate.

Those of the eight counties in which new Senators are to be chosen that will be the scenes of the severest strife between the parties are Somerset and Monmouth. Camden, Essex, Gloucester, Salem and Union are assured to the Republicans. Warren cannot be wrested from the Democrats, but there is sure to be a battle royal be tween the two political armies for the mastery in Monmouth and Somerset.

QUEEN. CITY'S FIFTH

ODD FELLOWS PLEASANTLY CELEBRATE AN ANNIVERSARY.

Ex-Judge W. A. Coddington Opened the Programme With Words of Welcome and Some Facts About the Noble Order.

The fifth anniversary of the formation of Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I.O. O. F., was pleasantly observed by the members last night in their rooms in the Elkwood building, when a large number of friends were entertained with a literary and musical programme and supper.

The assemblage was called to order at eight o'clock by Noble Grand Lewis DeCamp, who acted as master of ceremonies during the evening. He introduced ex-Judge William A. Coddington, a members of the order, who spoke a few words of welcome to the guests and told something of the order itself.

He extended a warm welcome to the guests and told how, just five years ago, the lodge had been formed with thirty members. It's membership list has now grown to 150, while the lodge has been able to meet all its obligations and is now in excellent financial standing. He made a complimentary reference to the side issue of Rebecca Lodge and complimented the officers on their excellent work and District Deputy Grand Master Pocock and his staff on having done the best work of any team in this district. He dwelt particularly on the benefits of the order.

The Judge's remarks were followed with a song, "Just Tell Them That You Saw Me," by Bert, Frank and William Vail, a trio of young voices mellow and clear. Then came a recitation by Bert Ford and a song by Anna Higgins, both little people, who acquitted themselves creditably in their efforts to entertain. Adams and Sherwood introduced a few feats in legerdemain much to the mystification of the auditors. Benjamin DeVere rendered a cornet solo and Albert and Miss Springer gave a duet that received the applause of appreciation. Then came the announcement of John Carney in a German dialect monologue. Mr. Carney's talk was the feature of the programme and many a laugh he got with his humorous climaxes to stories fraught with local hits. Eli Odam gave a song in a good tenor voice, though slightly hampered by a cold. The programme was ended with a solo, "She May Have Seen Better Days," by Frank Vail, and a parody on the same song by Bert Vail.

Afterwards the guests enjoyed a pleasant social chat and refreshments in the hall below.

The committee of arrangements in charge of the affair consisted of J. B. Biggins, Charles Young, Isaac Lane, William Barber and Floyd D. Fuller.

New Hospital President.

The Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital met at the Public Library last evening and elected George H. Goddard, president, in place of the late E. N. Erickson. It was reported that gas connection had just been completed at the hospital and that a new roof was being placed on the main building. The rest of the evening was devoted to routine business.

The Secretary was instructed to notify the medical staff of the adoption of an amendment to the constitution giving effect to the recent decison of the board to open the hospital to patients and physicians of every school of medicine. The managing committee was delegated rules appropriate to that decision; pending the adoption of which, patients may be admitted subject to existing rules and the discretion of the medical director.

Died After a Brief Illness.

James O'Keefe, aged forty five years, died at his home, 422 West Sixth street, yesterday, after an illness extending only since last Wednesday. He leaves a widow and six children. The funeral will be held from his late residence tomorrow morning at 8.30 o'clock, and from St. Mary's church at 9 o'clock. He was a member of the Mason's Union, and this order will attend the funeral services.

Jurors Fined.

Several petit jurors failed to respond to their names in the Union County Court of General Sessions in Elizabeth yesterday, and Judge T. F. McCormick fined them $25 each. The case of Dr. J. Max Reiner, editor of the New Jersey Herald of that city, accused of libelling Mayor John C. Rankin, which was set down for yesterday had to be postponed until November 14th.

THE GRAND JURY REPORT

TWO PRESENTMENTS AGAINST PLAINFIELD BUSINESS MEN.

One Was Against the Usanity of the Cycle Academy and the Other for the Pollution of Green Brook by Sewage.

The grand jury came into court in Elizabeth Tuesday and reported that they had finished their labors, and a total of sixty-three indictments were found and two presentments. The jury was thanked by the judge and discharged.

Two of the presentments were against Plainfielders. Charles H. Hand was presented for maintaining the Jersey Cycle Academy building without proper and safe exits for the handling of large crowds.

Chapot & Sons were presented for maintaining a nuisance in polluting Green brook with the refuse water from their kid glove factory near Evona, the details of which were published exclusively in The Daily Press sometime ago.

Four prisoners were discharged from the county jail against whom no indictment had been found for the charges made against them. Charles Frey, for beating his wife in this city, was indicted and arranged in court and pleaded not guilty. He was remanded for sentence.

Wm. VanNest, for larceny of a gun from Charles Lister, was indicted and when arraigned pleaded guilty. He was also remanded for sentence.

A number of other petty cases were also arraigned.

It is understood that an indictment was found against a prominent Plainfield citizen in connection with the crusade made by the Borough Board of Health in suppressing the pollution of Green brook.

DOMINICO NOT ARRESTED.

Frazee and His Friends Said to be to Blame For Sunday's Scrap.

Dominico de Dominico, the proprietor of the Italian resort at Scotch Plains, whom it was alleged shot Alex Frazee without apparent cause last Sunday, Tuesday went to Elizabeth and gave himself up to Sheriff Kyte. The Sheriff had no warrant or complaint against him and permitted him to return home. No complaint has been made and it is understood that none will be. It is said that the party of men, of whom Frazee was one, were the ones to start the fight which ended in the shooting and were entirely to blame for the trouble they became involved in. Frazee is rapidly recovering from the injuries inflicted by the gun shot and will leave the hospital in a few days.

King's Daughters to Entertain.

Lazzi, on contract, returnable, November 5th.

Damrosch Lecture.

The lecture to be given by Frank H. Damrosch at Seminary Hall Tuesday afternoon will be one of the most interesting events of the season. The subject "A Key to Unlock the Treasures of Song" speaks for itself. Profitable to music lovers and enjoyable to all. Mr. Damrosch will give practical illustrations showing how to use this magic key. Dont fail to go and hear what can be done.

IN THE MIDST OF A MOB.

E. R. ACKERMAN STONED BY ORANGE ROUGHS MONDAY NIGHT.

The Plainfielder Delivered a Republican Oration and His Argument Was Met With Stones From the Disturbers.

Until Monday night the political campaign in New Jersey had been free from mob violence, but on that occasion Orange was the scene of a lively time that came near being a riot. A Republican demonstration was to be held that evening, which was to include a bicycle parade and a mass-meeting, at which a Plainfield citizen, Ernest R. Ackerman, Republican candidate for Presidential elector in this district, was to be the prominent speaker. The parade was large but the tough element did their best to break it up. Packs were scattered over the streets and punctured tires were very plentiful. Clubs were used, and the decorations on the wheels smashed, and some poor Republican cyclists were dragged from their wheels.

At the mass-meeting, Mr. Ackerman enjoyed the rather unpleasant sensation of being stoned. Luckily the bombarders were on the outside of the hall, but large rocks, brickbats and the like crashed through the windows in imminent peril of those within. Other means were used to disturb the serenity of the meeting. The hall was packed, however, with those who wanted to hear Mr. Ackerman, and hear him they did. He made a strong speech, despite the fact that he was talking under fire, and was loudly applauded. His audience was largely composed of workingmen who seemed greatly pleased with his remarks and appearance.

THE VOICE OF A VICTIM

ONE WHO SUFFERS FROM BONFIRE SMOKE SCORES MR. MEEKER.

Quotes a City Ordinance to Show That the Street Commissioner Tacitly Approves What He is Authorized to Stop.

A member of the Woman's Town Improvement Association sends the following communication to The Daily Press, signed "Victim," anent Street Commissioner Meeker's recent interview in this paper:

The ordinance relating to the morals, peace and good order of the city of Plainfield, section 4, reads: "For setting off firecrackers or squibs, throwing fireballs made of combustible materials, or making bonfires on the streets or public ways * * a fine is imposed in any sum not exceeding $20." The ordinance relating to the duties of the street commissioner, section 2, reads: "The street commissioner shall be the overseer of the roads, streets and public grounds in the city of Plainfield, under direction and supervision of the committee on streets and public health * * and it shall also be his duty to detect and discover every nuisance which may exist in the streets of said city, and forthwith to remove the same, and to prevent said streets from being improperly obstructed and encumbered, and to prevent the maintenance or continuance of any nuisance or anything of offensive or unwholesome nature within said streets or public grounds."

Judging from a recently reported interview with the street commissioner it would seem that the foregoing ordinances have very little weight with him, as he, a paid officer of the city, virtually encourages the violation of the ordinances, and the increased number of bonfires of leaves within the last few days show that people have not been slow to follow his suggestions. He also gives his opinion in regard to the non-injurious effects of the smoke from the burning of the leaves, in direct opposition to the known views of eminent physicians and the sad experience of many a sufferer.

The Town Improvement Association is seeking to beautify and improve the city, and deserves the support and encouragement of its officials at least.

An Elizabeth Paper Suspends.

The New Jersey Herald, of Elizabeth, after a career of one year, gave up the struggle for exirtence Tuesday. It was formerly the Central New Jersey Herald, a Democratic organ. After running for many years in became the property of Dr. John Max Reiner, who changed its politics to that of a Republican afternoon daily and began a crusade against the city authorities for alleged non-enforcement of the Sunday-Closing law. The outcome was the imprisonment of Dr. Reiner for twenty days on twenty-six charges of criminal libel, made against him by Mayor Rankin. The Grand Jury only found indictments on four of these complaints, and the trial of Dr. Reiner has been set for November 14, Editor Reiner will engage in literary work in New York. The paper may be started again after the election.

A. foot ball players, will commence work again in a few days, as the Y. M. C. A. has agreed to surrender their lease. The avenue when completed will be a fine thoroughfare, and Mr. Uhdal is entitled to much credit for the part he has taken in the grading.

Grand Jury Throws Cases Out.

The Grand Jury of Union county has thrown out about 200 cases, in which they said they were unable to find sufficient evidence on which to base an indictment. Local justices were blamed by the jury for pressing trivial cases for the jury's consideration. About sixty indictments will be handed to the court today.

Another speaker will be Dr. Beckworth, of Ohio, who addressed an audience in T. A. B. hall some weeks ago. It is expected that other speakers will also be present.

This evening the Bryan and Sewall Democrats will hold a mass meeting in Saengerbund hall on Somerset street, which will be addressed by Rev. Death of Walter Leland.

Walter Henry Leland, son of George and Mary Leland, died at his home, 401 West Front street, Tuesday afternoon, after a week's illness from typhoid pneumonia. He was out on the street the day before he was stricken down to his bed, and he was conscious to the last. "Walley," as he was familiarly known, was born in Brooklyn Feb. 15th, 1863, and came to Plainfield twenty-five years ago. He was a tinner by trade and had worked with his father for a long time. The funeral will take place from the house on Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and interment will be made in Hillside cemetery.

Will Sue For Heavy Damages.

Former Congressman John T. Dunn, of Elizabeth, returned Tuesday from Hampton Junction, where he has been the last three months undergoing treatment for injuries received by the falling of an elevator in the Merchant's Mutual Bank, in Newark. At the time he received the injuries it was feared he would die, as there was a clot of blood at the base of his brain. He has not yet fully recovered. He says the corporation offered him $1,500 to settle his claim, but he refused the offer and will sue for heavy damages.

—Another McKinley and Hobart flag has been flung to the breeze in this city. It hangs in front of the residence of Charles W. Burton, of Watchung avenue, and was placed there by him.

A HEAVY REGISTRATION.

MANY ADDITIONAL NAMES ADDED TO THE POLL LISTS YESTERDAY.

There is Almost Sure to be Two New Districts Formed by the Result of the Vote Next Tuesday, and Possibly Three.

The Boards of Election Tuesday completed the work of registering the largest number of voters ever recorded in this city and borough. Though a thorough house-to-house canvass had been made before the boards sat two weeks ago, and a large number came and personally registered that day, still quite a number in addition to these were registered yesterday. Members of the boards say that several men—especially colored men—came yesterday and demanded that their names be added to the lists who were unknown to any one of the board, but the law compelled them to register their names.

It is probable that in the Third ward fully 600 votes will be cast out of the 686 names registered, and this will necessitate the formation of another district. The same thing will happen in the First district of the Fourth ward, where 731 names are registered, and it is quite probable that even 600 votes may be cast in the First district of the First ward. This would make three additional election districts in this city.

The figures follow:

	First Vote	Names day added	erased	To'l Oct '96	To'l Sept '96
First ward, 1st dist.	456	69	9	806	746
First ward, 2d dist.	197	18	3	212	194

A LOVE KNOT TIED.

Marriage of Miss Ernestine Negus, of Bound Brook, to Edward V. French.

A pretty home wedding was solemnized Tuesday afternoon at Bound Brook, when Miss Ernestine Negus, of that place, was united in marriage to Edward V. French, son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. French, of West Seventh street, this city.

The celebration took place at the home of the bride and the ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Whitney, of Plainfield, an uncle of the groom, in the presence of the near relatives of the contracting parties. Miss Negus and Mr. Negus, sister and brother of the bride, served as bridesmaid and best man.

Following congratulations, a sumptuous repast was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. French left for a short wedding trip On their return they will probably reside in this city. Mr. French is an architect and will open an office in the Babcock building when he returns.

Among those who witnessed the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. J. H. French, Miss Mary French, Miss Louise French, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. French, Frank French, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. French, Miss French, of Plainfield; Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Keeps, of Boston.

The presents received by the bride and groom were handsome and very costly.

WEE GIRL BEAT A WOMAN.

Forty-Foot Child Convicted of Assaulting a Two Hundred Pound Lady.

The tiniest female prisoner ever tried in Union County, appeared before Judge McCormick at Elizabeth Monday. Her name is Louisa Grass, a German, of No. 600 Elizabeth avenue. She is ten years old and weighs forty pounds.

Miss Annie Jarvis, twenty-six years old, is a plump Scotch girl, near the two-hundred pound mark, and lives next door to the Grass family. Recently, it is charged, Miss Jarvis called Louisa "Dutchie," whereupon the latter struck the other in the face with a stick. For this she was arrested, and the Grand Jury, not knowing her age or size, indicted her.

Little Louisa conducted her own case yesterday, and told the story of the assault in a masterly manner for her side. The jury, after being out three hours, concluded that the assault had been proved and brought in a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation for mercy. She will be sentenced Wednesday.

Died in South Dakota.

Word has been received in this city telling of the death of Walter Fawcett, aged forty-three years, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, which occurred at Elk Point, Dakota, last Saturday evening. PASSING OF LITTLE NELL

TOUCHING SERVICES OVER THE REMAINS OF MISS MESCHUTT.

Rev. C. E. Herring Preached a Sympathetic and Condoling Sermon for the Parents—Very Beautiful Floral Tributes.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Meschutt, of East Front street, which has been deeply saddened by the death of their only daughter, Miss Nellie J. Meschutt, was filled last Wednesday with sorrowing friends and relatives when the funeral services were held. The bright-faced, happy little girl who had so many friends, lay peacefully in a white plush casket, around which was entwined the ever-beautiful smilax and a profusion of nature's rarest flowers.

Rev. C. E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, conducted the services. He read appropriate Scripture selections, which were followed with a touching vocal selection, "Asleep in Jesus," by the Misses Bessie Blair, Lottie Messersmith and Willard M. and Ralph K. Miner. A few more selections from the Scriptures were read after which Mr. Herring spoke very tenderly and affectionately. A portion of his remarks follows: "The flower fadeth. This week has been one of death. There has been three funerals, two aged persons and the one which calls us here this evening.

"It is like the fading leaves. I picked up a leaf today and was reminded that it had finished its work. We are mindful that the flower fadeth. The blossom fades, and we look at this little one and wonder why she should be taken so early. But she never has left its fruit. Little Nell has gone, but she has left something. This life faded gradually. A year ago she was taken with a disease and the light has gradually been going out. Like the lily her life faded beautifully, and it became more so as it passed away.

"The room she had seemed to fill with life, even while her own was waning fast; the eyes she had gladdened can know her never more. It is not certain that Heaven's justice ends. Think what earth is prepared with that world to which her young spirit has winged its early flight, and say if one deliberate wish expressed in solemn terms above this bed could call her back to life, which of us would attain it. With little Nell there is no more sorrow or trouble. Who would call her back from where she beckons us on? We will meet her; yes, we will meet her."

Mr. Herring offered a most fervent petition for the Throne of Grace, in which he invoked the blessing of God on the bereaved ones. The quartette then sang very impressively "Abide With Me." An opportunity was given those present to view for the last time the loving form of the dear one whose life had gone out to the One who had given it. There were a number of beautiful floral tributes. A pillow bearing the name "Nellie" came from an uncle, and another pillow from the Junior Christian Endeavor Society, "Our Darling." There was a cross from a near friend, and a pretty wreath, with the word "Schoolmates" inscribed. The Junior Christian Endeavor Society, of which she was a member, gave a choice bunch of roses, while there were a number of other tributes, consisting of chrysanthemums and roses, given by loving friends. The remains were taken to Arlington this morning on the 10:50 train for interment.

Those who served as bearers were Frank Dunn, of Elizabeth, Philip Meschutt, of Jersey City, uncles; Frank Harris, of Philadelphia, and W. F. Dunn, of this city, cousins. They accompanied the remains to Arlington this morning.

Exhibition of Prize Slides.

Among the prize slides to be shown at the Camera Club tonight are the following: Landscape of Norway, bronze medal awarded to Dr. Mitchell, of Philadelphia, and Wm. B. Post, of New York, formerly of the Plainfield Camera Club; Marines, bronze medal awarded to Wm. B. Post; Architecture, silver medal awarded to Dr. Mitchell for his fine interior of Westminster Abbey; in portraiture and figure study Miss Clarkson received honorable mention; Genre, bronze medal to T. Morley Brook, Manchester, England. A very interesting picture is the Gate of Tscheragan Scraj, one of the palaces of the Sultan, Constantinople. Strangers are not even allowed to approach the gates, much less to enter. This view was taken after several unsuccessful attempts and at a good deal of personal risk.

Bad Effects of Jersey Lightning.

Patrolman McCue met a visitor from Syracuse a few days ago. The New York State man had just made the acquaintance of "Jersey Lightning" and the effect was not promising as far as steadiness was concerned. As the visitor seemed unable to take care of himself the officer performed that duty and landed the stranger in jail. Next morning, the prisoner gave his name as Frank Smith and pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly. City Judge DeMeza fined him $10 for his racket.

STRANGER AND $65 GONE

EXPRESSMAN ELMER BARRETT LOSES MONEY BY A DISHONEST PERSON.

While His Brother Was Waiting for the New Man to Make Returns the Latter Went Out of a Back Door.

Elmer Barrett, of Cranford, has learned that it pays to be careful in hiring men, and his experience has cost him $65 clean, cold cash. Mr. Barrett conducts a package express business for New York houses in the towns along the Central Railroad between Elizabeth and Plainfield. He was in search of a man to help him, in addition to the services of his brother, and preferred to get a man living in the vicinity of Plainfield. He came to this city on Monday and called on Mrs. Day, who keeps an intelligence office on East Front street. She recommended a man to Mr. Barrett and the two men returned to Cranford. The new man did not give his name, and as he was going to work with Mr. Barrett's brother on the wagon his employer never thought to ask it. The stranger and Mr. and Mrs. Barrett's brother started together on Tuesday morning making deliveries. Before leaving, Mr. Barrett told them to call at Hoff's livery stable in North Plainfield, after they had delivered their goods, and get a new team of horses which he had purchased for his business. During the day $65 was collected, the new man being allowed to collect the money. When they reached Hoff's livery Barrett asked his helper for the money, but the latter said that it would be better to wait until they returned home before making a settlement.

The stranger then went into the stable for the horses, leaving Barrett in the wagon. The latter waited patiently but his man did not appear. Finally, getting anxious, he went to the stable and learned that the stranger was not there, but had skipped over the back fence and disappeared, and for all that anyone knows he is running yet. Barrett went back to Cranford with the horses and told his brother of the circumstance and of the two came to Plainfield in search of their missing friend, but as yet he has not been found.

SET IN CHISELED ROCK.

The Farmer Orator Seals Documents to be Opened in Ages to Come.

In the ages to come when this and probably several other generations have come and gone, the great stone pillars which James E. Martine is erecting at the entrance to his Cedar brook farm on Watchung avenue, will still be standing as a tribute to the Liberty orator's belief that when you build it pays to build well. And in a receptacle chiseled out in the centre of one of these rocks which will stand for centuries the beatings of Jersey's famous storms is sum mer and its icy blasts of winter can be found three papers and two photographs that will bring to the mind of the then living a thing that will be but history to them.

The first and most important object which will doubtless greet their vision will be a paper, indited in the handwriting of the Farmer Orator, as follows:

Plainfield, N. J., October 22d, 1896.
Cedar Brook Farm.
J. E. Martine, a Democrat, is the builder and owner.
James Kington, mason.
Alex. Brown, toolpost attendant.
This is to inform the world at large that I am a earnest political campaign. the contest being between the masses on the one side, under the Democratic platform, and on the other the Republican party with all the wealth and aristocracy with them. May Heaven advance the people's cause and the broad thoughts and aims of the Democratic candidate, Jennings Bryan is the people's candidate in this our fight. In this fight I am in the side of the Democratic party for the free coinage of gold and silver, and the Republican side for gold monometalism.

With this document will be encased a picture of Mr. Bryan and Mr. Sewall, a copy of The Daily Press of Monday, and a copy of the Democratic platform enunciated at Chicago.

Missionary Society Entertained.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of Grace M. E. Church were pleasantly entertained last evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Valiant. This society gives no entertainments and the members are diocesionall yat each others home and by taking a collection receive what money they use for home missionary purposes. Last evening there was a goodly number present, and the festivities were enjoyed by all. The evening's sociability was interspersed with selections by Miss Lizzie Hoagland, piano solos by Miss May Conroy and Miss Bessie Valiant. Another pleasing feature was the playing of games. Refreshments consisting of cake and coffee was served in abundance. The committee in charge consisted of Mrs. John Valiant, Mrs. James Lunger, Mrs. L. A. Hummer, Mrs. Anna Most and Mrs. J. C. Gary.

Williams and his wife are believed to have gone to Australia. The stock they left behind has been levied on by some of their creditors and will be sold at public auction next Monday.

KELLER SUIT SETTLED.

THE DEMANDS OF CHRISTIAN KELLER CONCEDED BY RELATIONS.

Heirs of Madeline Keller to Give a Deed for the Property Claimed by Christian, the Latter Doing the Same With the Lot to Them.

The Chancery case of Keller against Keller, begun at Newark on Monday last, the details of which have already appeared in The Press, was concluded at the State House in Trenton yesterday. At the close of the testimony offered by Christian Keller, counsel for the other side arose and said that he was satisfied that the relief prayed for by Christian Keller in his cross-bill, ought to be granted by the Court, and he had concluded to make no further opposition, but to consent to such a decree. Vice-Chancellor Reed replied that he thought that course was a wise one. Craig A. Marsh, counsel for Christian Keller, then drew up a final decree requiring the husband and heirs of Madeline Keller to give Christian Keller a deed for the house and lot claimed by the latter, at the same time to give the other side a deed for the vacant lot, as he tendered his willingness to do in his answer and cross bill. The decree also provides for the sale of the corner property and the equal divisions of the proceeds between Christian Keller on the one side, and the husband and heirs of Madeline Keller on the other.

Cut Below the Grade.

Exclusive announcement was made by The Daily Press recently that the grade of the Watchung avenue extension was about fifteen inches lower than it should be. At that time there seemed to be some doubt as to who was responsible for the mistake. Engineer F. A. Dunham gave the proper grade, but the fact has now come to light that the man left in charge by Contractor Bowden paid no attention to the grade stakes and cut down regardless of the set lines. An investigation was made and the above state of affairs was disclosed. Now Contractor Bowden's men are carting dirt back to fill in to secure the proper grade. The mistake which is a costly one will have to be borne by Mr. Bowden as it can neither be charged to Mr. Dunham or the borough.

A Reckless Pig.

A pig that runs at large on the streets at Garwood was run into four times by wheelmen in one day, and each time the wheelman got a fall, but the pig was apparently uninjured. The animal has caused many wheelmen to fall, and is apparently afraid of a wheel, but somehow manages to get in the way every time a wheelman or wheelwoman gets near it.

Wearing Their New Uniforms.

A meeting of the cadet corps of the North Plainfield High School was held yesterday afternoon and Captain C. M. Dolliver distributed the new uniforms to the cadets. The uniforms are similar to those of the Plainfield High School cadets except that they have a light blue shoulder piece to hold the cross belt.

May Lose a Finger.

Carl Hauser, the five-year-old son of Rev. and Mrs. Hauser, of Duer street, may lose a portion of a finger the result of an accident which occurred on Friday. He with a young son of William C. Krausse, of Vine street, were playing with a bicycle. The latter's son was turning the rear wheel around at a lively rate of speed, when young Hauser's hand caught in the rear sprocket wheel. The little fellow screamed with pain, for the nail on the finger was completely torn off, and the flesh deeply lacerated. He ran to the house and told his parents what had happened. Dr. Davis was summoned at once and dressed the wound. It cannot be determined just yet whether the finger will have to be amputated or not.

TO A HIGHER THRONE.

FINAL OBSEQUIES OVER THE REMAINS OF G. H. NEAL.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck Preaches a Deeply Affecting and Consoling Sermon to the Bereaved—Floral Tributes.

The exceedingly large attendance at the funeral of the late George H. Neal, held Sunday afternoon at 2:30 from the house, 76 Fairview avenue, was a strong testimony of the high esteem and regard in which he was held. In addition to the large number of Plainfielders present, and representations of Columbia Lodge, No. 58, A. O. U. W. and Senate Lodge, No. 3542, K. of H., of which lodges Mr. Neal was a member, there were present thirty employes from the house of Merck & Co., of New York, where Mr. Neal was a valued employe. Many friends who desired to attend the funeral were unable to gain admittance to the house owing to the large attendance.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck, of the Trinity Reformed church, conducted the services which were very impressive. His remarks were based on Paul's words, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." In part Mr. Schenck said:

"We naturally shrink from death for we see the dark side of it. To the believer the grave is transformed. It is as a vestibule to the Eternal Day, a resting place for the worn out body. Death has been robbed of its sting, and to the believer it has been swallowed up in victory. It serves as a summons calling him as a soldier of Christ. When the blossom drops from the tree we do not mourn, for we know it is the result of ultimate fruitage. The believer views death as falling asleep in Christ. Such a triumph must have a rock basis, not a mere surmise or wish, but an immutable foundation of Christ and the resurrection. To the members of this household I have brought you this view of death. Not that our hearts are not grieved, it does not mean that there is no sorrow, it does not mean that we will not mourn the loss of our fellow citizen who walked with us as a faithful legislator, whose record speaks louder than words. It does not mean that the mother, sisters, wife and little children shall not sorrow. There is a comfort in this sorrow and that is that our brother committed his soul to his Saviour and in Him he rested, which makes this occasion one of triumph. Let us, with his associates in business, receive the blessing we require today."

When Mr. Schenck concluded his remarks, he offered a touching petition to the Throne of Grace, after which E. E. Runyon sang tenderly, "Rock of Ages." Those present then looked for the last time on the form of their beloved friend. Among the floral tributes was a large wreath of roses and galax leaves, from the house of Merck & Co. It bore a broad band of satin ribbon on which was inscribed, "We shall ever mourn our friend, Merck & Co." Another tribute was an anchor bearing the letters A. O. U. W. The Knights of Honor presented a large choice bunch of roses, while there were several small wreaths and bunches of flowers from friends. Those who served as bearers were John Messerschmidt, Fred M. Slater, John Fellows and S. P. Williams. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

SHOT DOWN BY A DAGO; HELD UP BY ROAD PIRATES

Exciting Escapades at a Scotch Plains Italian Shanty and on a Public Thoroughfare.

Alexander Frazee Rescues a Companion From the Italian Resort and Falls a Victim to a Bullet From a Gun—John Hogan Runs Up Against Highwaymen at Night Time and is Clubbed and Robbed of His Money, Too.

Hardman Tom Burns was unceremoniously roused up at his home last Sunday night by a man who, with hands and clothing were covered with blood. He had the voice of John Hogan, of 428 West Third street, however, and he was just able to tell that while on Central avenue, near East Ending, he was set on by three men and cruelly beaten and robbed. Hogan fought desperately and downed one big highwayman, but the odds were too great and they obtained his watch and pocketbook, which contained a considerable sum of money. Hogan could not distinguish who his assailants were.

They clubbed him until the blood flowed freely and he was scarcely able to walk and then departed with his valuables. He managed to reach Burns' home and the latter took Hogan home in his hack considerably battered up by his rough treatment. His face was cut and he was covered with bruises, he was able to be around today however.

The police were not informed of the affair this morning, so Chief Grant states, and he did not believe anything had happened. A glance, at Hogan speedily dispelled that idea however. The latter did not care to state the amount of his loss.

A CIVIL MARRIAGE.

City Judge DeMeza Makes Fast the Knot of Love.

The home of James Bowman, corner of Westervelt and Brook avenues, was the scene Saturday afternoon of an unusual wedding when Miss Mary H. Peggie, of Scotland, and Bowland Long, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng., were united in marriage by City Judge George W. DeMeza. The contracting parties are members of the Plymouth Brethern, which denomination has no stated ministers to perform marriages. The ceremony solemnized at 4:30 in the presence of about twenty-five intimate friends. Those who stood up with the bride and groom were A. J. Pollock, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng., and Paul S. Cohn, of Passaic.

After the ceremony an excellent supper was served which was followed by a meeting. The service opened with a prayer and address by Frank Lock, of West Front street. Another address was given by Hughes Fawcett, of Grove street. Mr. and Mrs. Long received a collection of useful and handsome presents from their friends. They will reside at 213 West Front street.

Alls Won at the Plains.

Great things were expected of the Scotch Plains eleven in their game with the Alls football team, of this city, Saturday afternoon on the Scotch Plains gridiron, but the Plainfield boys sustained their reputation, despite the fact that their team was weakened by the loss of two of the regular players, and won easily by the score of 30 to 0. The Alls boys put up their usual excellent game and won by the superiority of their team play and interference. The quarter trick was worked very successfully while, on the double pass, Peck rounded the left end and ran sixty yards for a touchdown. Woltmann and McCullough were two new men, but both put up an excellent game and had no trouble in landing their opponents on the line. The two teams lined up as follows:

MANY REASONS ADVACED FOR THE YELLOW METAL

Gold Standard Democrats to Workingmen and Lawyer Runyon to Business College Students.

To Be Your End Questions Are Asked by Those Who Are Seeking for Employment or Else for the Purpose of Perplexing President Atterbury—Lawyer Runyon Has Seven Reasons Why He Upholds the Gold Standard.

The last meeting to be held in the West End under the auspices of the Edison Democratic Club was held last Thursday, and was a success in more ways than one. There was an extraordinary large crowd present, and there was people standing out side who were not able to get in the room. The speaker of the evening was C. P. Bull and he received the undivided attention of all present. He said in part as follows:

"Mr. Bryan in his speech at Madison Square Garden, New York, declared that the free and unlimited coinage of silver would raise the price of a silver dollar to $1 29 throughout the world, and his reason for so saying was that it would be regulated by supply and demand. That the greater the demand for a cheaper metal, the greater the supply. Mr. Bryan also stated that if you reduce the supply of silver you reduce the value and purchasing power. Now, the question presents itself, how are you going to double a dollar? We will go to a bullion dealer, and he will tell us that a grain of gold is worth four plus. But how about silver? He will tell us that one cent will buy seven or eight grains of silver. At that rate the market value of a silver dollar would be about fifty-three cents. Bryan's idea is that if you take sixty-five cents worth of silver, give it unlimited coinage and the price will raise to $1.29 to an ounce of gold the world over. You cannot destroy value and have it remain, for value is settled by the law of demand and value has got to have its equivalent. If Bryan was elected the whole world would feel it in an instant and prices would go up most surely. At the same time we would have a currency, half of which would be true and half false. You cannot legislate on the question of value. As soon as you do you would create a a universal bankruptcy. Up would go prices and down would go wages. I believe that our representatives have not been true to their convictions and in the time they exhibited political consistency. The law that United States bonds should be payable in silver is an unreasonable one. Today there is no country of any strength on a silver basis. There is a circulating medium, however, and that is silver. The intrinsic value of it is good the world over. Bryan has said that we shall not make any arrangement to demonatize silver. In Elizabeth a few years ago the officials started to create a demand for property by paving the streets into the suburbs. They thought that the people would be induced to locate along those streets, and thousands of dollars was spent. If I am not mistaken Elizabeth became bankrupt through the scheme. The rate of interest governs the value of money always, and it shows confidence. A depreciated currency is a dangerous thing and the Supreme Court should not be discredited."

Mr. Atterbury then spoke somewhat as follows: "I am confident that public men have steered clear of this important question of the currency, because they were too much afraid. If they had given it due consideration we would not today be fighting the question. Men in congress ever since 1878 have voted to sustain free silver, knowing it was wrong. The present campaign is bringing out the truth in the great question."

John James, the Socialist, then entered into a discussion with Mr. Atterbury in regard to the government making 47 cents on every silver dollar coined. Mr. Atterbury replied that if Bryan's scheme is adopted the individual would receive the profit where the government would ordinarily under the coinage of silver would receive the profit.

Michael Higgins would not understand why the government would be foolish enough to coin silver free without a profit, but Mr. Atterbury said that the principle for which Bryan was fighting was just that same foolish idea.

After a short discussion pro and con Mr. Pfeiffer offered the following resolutions which was adopted unanimously: "Resolved, That we extend Mr. Atterbury our hearty thanks for his untiring efforts to make these meetings a success and for his fairness in conducting them." A similar resolution was adopted regarding Mr. Pfeiffer.

Mr. Atterbury then made a few remarks in closing. He urged all to vote the right ticket. Continuing he said in part: "Our programme may seem tame to our Socialist friends, but this is a wicked world, containing fraud and misery. The gold standard will not change it altogether, nor will it make us all rich. It is essential however, in order that we get along well, that we have the honest dollar.

I urge you to vote against Bryan and a debasing currency. Stamp both of them out at the polls in November. To my Democratic friend I would say that our party has been captured by the Populists. The Democrats have for one hundred years sustained honest money and this is the first time that a departure has been made. Bryan has said that he was not a Democrat and for several years he has fought against the party on the side of Populism, which will ruin this country if given its way. Palmer and Buckner, our candidates, are real sound Democrats and I urge you to throw one side your support of party and vote for Palmer and Buckner and the Indianapolis platform." The announcement was then made of the mass meeting to be held in Music Hall next Friday evening when Edgar M. Sheppard, of Brooklyn and R. V Lindabury, of Elizabeth, will speak. The meeting then came to a close.

Harry C. Runyon spoke in the Plainfield Business College last night to a large audience, in favor of a gold standard. S. S. Swackhamer will speak this evening in the college in favor of silver. Beside the student's there were a number of outsiders. Everyone is welcome to these lectures, and it is needless to say that they are highly instructive, as both Mr. Runyon and Mr. Swackhamer are good talkers. Mr. Runyon handled his subject last evening in a masterly way, holding the closest attention of his audience for over an hour. His delivery is good, his points are concise and well taken, and there is a grain of humor underlying all that never fails to please. Mr. Runyon, in conclusion, said he was opposed to the free coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1. First, because it would alter prices and values, defeating the wage earner and those living under fixed incomes; second, because it would make dishonest silver dollars; third, because it would place in the hands of the rich an unequal advantage over the poor; fourth, because it would drive gold out of circulation and thus reduce our currency by one-third; fifth, because it would enable dishonest debtors to defraud their creditors; sixth, because it would benefit a few at the expense of the many; seventh, because it would dispel confidence and thus continue the hard times.

For Abusing a Cow.

Harry Wiedner, of the New Jersey Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, caused the arrest on Saturday, of Charles Stilp, of Westfield, on the charge of cruelty to animals. The specific accusation was that Stilp had beaten his cow with a fence rail. He declined to be sworn or to testify in his own behalf, and Justice E. B. Collins, of Westfield, imposed a nominal fine of one dollar with costs.

Ed. Maynard, of North avenue, is seriously ill at his home.

DON'T FAVOR BAG SYSTEM

STREET COMMISSIONER MEEKER ON THE DISPOSAL OF LEAVES.

He Fails to See the Practicability of the Methods Proposed by the Town Improvement Association—Street Work.

The Plainfield streets are receiving another cleaning and the residents thereof are exceeding glad. It has heretofore been Street Commissioner Meeker's custom to have several men continually at work, picking up scraps of paper, cleaning up the mud and keeping the streets in good order but the appropriation for that department has now run low and he has been unable to continue the good work.

A Daily Press reporter saw Mr. Meeker yesterday afternoon and questioned him regarding his opinion of the plan of the Town Improvement Association to burn the leaves. If the Association could raise a fund to pay for the gathering and carting away of the leaves, that was all right, he said, but otherwise he was very frank to say that he did not favor it at all People, he declared, would not cart away the leaves themselves and they would be left on the ground and in the gutters to rot which would be very unhealthy to all residing in the neighborhood. As to the smoke from the burning leaves injuring those who are afflicted with asthma, Mr. Meeker said that was a mistake. He cited several instances of Plainfield firemen, suffering from asthma, who have been able to go in rooms so filled with smoke that others could not enter.

A Bit Sarcastic.

Now that Mr. So-and-So, the druggist, of Plainfield, has announced to an awe-struck world his confident belief that the Democratic Presidency will carry twenty-nine different States (naming them atthe length of ten lines of Daily Press space) it is in order for Mr. Timothy Whatsisname, of Elderberry Corners, to express his opinion also. After him should follow Mr Reuben Smith, town clerk, of Frogville Center. Speak up, gentlemen. America awaits breathlessly. This is a campaign of education. Stop the press!—New Brunswick Home News.

Changes on the Police Force.

Several changes were made this morning in the arrangement of the police force. Roundsman Mattox returned to duty while Patrolman Totten who has been acting-Roundsman returned to his regular position on the day squad. Patrolman Hartpence has been suffering a little from malaria and was transferred from night to day duty. Patrolman Freleigh was changed from the day squad to the night squad.

A WESTFIELD WEDDING.

A Pretty Nuptial Event Solemnized in a Westfield Home.

Thursday was most beautiful, the full October moon at its best, and everything fitting for the performance of a nuptial ceremony. And in keeping with the outside surroundings was the event that took place at the handsome residence of Mr. and Mrs. John M. C. Marsh, Lawrence avenue and Walnut street, Westfield, the marriage of their daughter, Jennie Prentiss Marsh, to John S. Burbans, Jr., also of Westfield. The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Ruth, pastor of the M. E. church, officiating. The bride was charmingly attired in white bengaline silk, pearl and lace trimming. She was attended by Miss Lillie Hacey, of New York, as bridesmaid, and Miss Mildred Marsh, sister of the bride, as maid of honor, the latter two also dressed in white silk. The groom's best man was Bert Pearsall, of Westfield. Fred Hacey, of New York, acted in the capacity of usher. The wedding march was rendered by Miss Ferris, of Westfield. Guests to the number of two hundred were present, and an elaborate supper was served. The bride and groom left about 10 o'clock for Washington on a wedding trip. This article would not be complete without making mention of one particular guest—little Miss Gladys Searing, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Searing, of New street, this city. She was dressed in white silk and white kid slippers, and was the pet of the evening, sharing honors with the bride.

Guests of Mrs. Ackerman.

A few of Plainfield's young society were invited on Saturday evening by Mrs. Ernest B. Ackerman, of West Eighth street, to meet her sister, Miss Weber, of Cumberland, Md., and to see the naval procession in New York Harbor. They left here on the club car "Evona," attached to the 7:09 train and upon its arrival in Jersey City they boarded the tug Idlewild, which secured a favorable position for viewing the fireworks. Among those accompanying the party were: Messrs. Beebe, Wests Cooley, Will Runyon, Munger, Tiffany, Hinks, Warings, Van Buren, Stewart's, Wals, Dr. Ard, Misses Dumont, Tracy's, Stewart, Morgan, Ackerman, Walz, Cooley, Andrews, Munger, Dr. and Mrs. Hodges, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Van Beren, Mr. and Mrs. Timpson, Mr. and Mrs. Clay, Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Townsend Bushmore, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rushmore and Mrs. Weber.

CHURCH PEOPLE DUPED.

FAKIRS WITH A MINISTERIAL BEARING PLY THEIR TRADE.

Claimed to Have Been Recommended by Two Local Pastors, and in This Way Imposed on the Charitableness of People.

One of the many things to which Plainfielders are subjected is a class of men who come here and obtain money under false pretenses. The Daily Press has occasion to record these deceptions from time to time, but people will be deceived just the same.

The latest scheme in this line occurred last Tuesday afternoon. Two strange men, bearing a ministerial appearance, came to town with a number of pictures illustrating Bible stories. The pictures are said to be worth about fifteen cents at the most. They learned the names of Rev. Edward Klonka, pastor of St. Peter's German Lutheran church, and Rev. W. H. Hauser, pastor of the German Reformed church, and then obtained the names of several persons who are members of either of the churches. They called on the different families and said that they had come from Ohio where they claimed to have charge of churches that were in need of help. They said that Pastors Klonka and Hauser had recommended them to their parishioners, and they felt quite sure they would be willing to help a poor church.

In most cases they entered the house where they exhibited the pictures. No picture was sold for less than $1.50 and for some they received as high as $4. The people called upon were willing to help the strangers. They were only in town about four hours but during that time they collected about $20. Rev. Mr. Klonka was the first to learn of the deceptive practice, when he met his parishioners and the latter inquired about the men he had sent to them.

Mr. Klonka says that he has heard of these same men who worked their nefarious scheme in Philadelphia. Both pastors feel highly incensed that the members of their churches should have been deceived in such a way and have warned them not to give to anyone for church purposes unless they have an authorized letter from them.

A PARLOR SALE.

Ladies' Aid Society of the German Lutheran Church Conducting It.

The Ladies' Aid Society of St. Peter's German Lutheran Church, have taken possession of the pleasant home of the pastor, Rev. Mr. Klonka, on West Second street. They are holding a parlor sale for the benefit of their church and judging from the attendance Friday afternoon and evening, the affair will be a great success. The parlor presents a very attractive appearance, and the ladies have certainly won credit for the arrangement of the various articles. There is a complete line of useful fancy articles which were made by the ladies' themselves and the demand for them has been phenomenal. Mrs. Ebel and Mrs. Kuntz are in charge of this department. Miss Bartels and Mr. Ebel preside at the dry goods table and found many purchasers for the articles on sale. Those who like sweets can find a choice assortment of candies in charge of Mrs. Ruppert and Mrs. Zeisz. A full line of groceries are to be found under the care of Mrs. Yaeger. In another room refreshments are served by Miss Seipel and Miss Miller. Here one can find coffee, cake, ice cream and soda water, and especially commendable is the old fashioned German cake. In the same room there is a supply of various kind of vegetables such as squash, pumpkin, potatoes, apples, etc. Miss Mamie Mehl has charge of the grab-bag and secures many coins from those who are anxious to help. Miss Lizzie Scheidecker very carefully guards the door and receives the admission fee, while Mrs. Scheidecker is the efficient treasurer. Rev. Mr. Klouka has general supervision of the affair and looks after every detail in his usual careful manner. The handsome sign placed outside to attract passers by was kindly made by Mr. Henzen. The sale is being continued this afternoon and evening and those who visit the house will have no cause for regret, for they will be pleased.

Travelled Sixty-seven Years as a Gypsy.

The tortures and hardships of a band of itinerant gypsies are told in a few words. Valentine Stanley was born in England sixty-seven years ago of gypsy parentage and this pursuasion he has ever since followed travelling throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland, and finally twenty years ago coming to this country. Stanley was in town with his rolling residence, wife and child on Saturday. The family had camped the two previous nights near Elizabeth, and from here they went to Bound Brook to remain over Sunday, where they were to proceed to Philadelphia and anchor for the winter. The owner of the caravan is 63 years of age and when he stopped over in this city, he was so crippled up with rheumatism that he could not get out of the wagon.

ENDEAVORERS HAVE AN ECHO; EPWORTHS RALLY

Meetings Calculated to Keep Up the Interest of Young Christian Workers Hereabouts.

Several Reminders of the Recent Big Convention, Among Which Was a Portion of the Big Choir—Epworth League Members Hear Some Very Inspiring Prayers and Listen to a Number of Worthy Testimonials.

The Christian Endeavor state convention of '96 has come and gone but its memory remains. The same spirit that so pervaded that vast assemblage of Christian workers was echoed last evening at the rally, held in the Trinity Reformed church.

There were several reminders of that great event, the convention. Many of the choir, that rendered such inspiring music during these three days, were seated on the platform with the same leader, Horace J. Martin, in charge. A railing, formed of orange and black bunting the state colors, was arranged along the edge of the platform while two large C. E. monograms, one in orange and black and the other in green and white, were placed on the front of the organ.

The meeting opened with the usual rousing service of song led by Mr. Martin, A. L. Titsworth presiding at the organ. Then came an earnest prayer by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., and E. E. Anthony, president of the Local Union, read the fifty-first Psalm. Mr. Anthony next announced that the Evangelistic department of the Local Union had determined to do something and that as soon as the plans were perfected, it would be announced. While the ushers were taking up the collection, Mrs. John Manley sung the beautiful selection "Consider the Lillies" in her clear powerful voice.

A short talk by Mr Anthony followed. He dwelt on the three verses in the fifty-first Psalm beginning with the tenth verse. He spoke of the qualities needed by a Christia , told how necessary a clean heart and right spirit were. A gloomy Christian repells people from the church. An invitation to come to Jesus Christ must be backed up by a spirit of Jesus Christ within us, he said. It is failing to fulfill our duty to Him not to have it so, he declared. People are not saved just for themselves, but they are saved to be useful to serve Him.

Another hymn was followed by ten minutes of earnest testimony. The speeches followed each other quickly with a few words on the all important question of saving souls, telling of their own experiences or the experiences of others. Then Mr. *Anthony asked all who had ever ex*perienced the joy of bringing any one to Christ to rise and quite a number responded to the invitation. Requests for prayer were made and then, one after another, the Christian Endeavors joined in short heart felt prayers. A particularly earnest one by Mr. Anthony closed the season of prayer and then Rev. Cornelius Schenck dismissed the congregation with the benediction.

Senator Stewart to Speak Here.

There is no better known advocate of free silver, unless it is William J. Bryan himself, than Senator William M. Stewart, of Nevada. He has always supported the bi-metalic theory and has played a prominent part in the United States Senate during the last few years. This great silver man will appear in Plainfield on Thursday night when he will speak at the Democratic mass meeting to be held in Music Hall that evening. The Democrats expect to have a big time then and have provided a band for the occasion. Senator Stewart will, of course, be the drawing card. Ladies are invited to the meeting.

Walter Leland, of Central avenue, is very ill with pneumonia.

Very helpful and interesting was the union meeting of the local Epworth Leagues held in the Monroe Avenue chapel, Thursday evening, and large was the gathering of members despite the many other events happening in the same night.

Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, pastor of the chapel, presided, and after stating the object of the meeting asked James McGee to lead in opening prayer. After the prayer Rev. Mr. O'Donnell read a letter from E. E. Anthony, president of the Local Christian Endeavor Union, who on behalf of the Christian Endeavorers of Plainfield expressed their appreciation of the hearty and cordial co-operation in the work of caring for the recent convention. Then Fred Smith, as representative of the local union, expressed pleasure in the harmonious relations of the two grand organizations, and hoped for a further spiritual awakening of the people.

Lewis E. Potter of Woodbridge, president of the Elizabeth District League, then took charge of the meeting and conducted a song service, singing several solos. He also spoke a few words regarding the approaching Epworth League convention at Perth Amboy next week.

Short addresses then followed by Rev. H. K Carroll, D. D., Rev. H. J. Johnston, Chas. Hummer, and Elder B. W. Rand, who spoke words of encouragement and exhortation for more activity in Christian wo k. The meeting then closed with singing and prayer.

BID FAREWELL.

City Missionary Herndon Goes From Plainfield to Trenton.

The Plainfield branch of the Christian Alliance Thursday said farewe to Miss Noah Mildred Herndon, who for the past six months has been their city missionary. In a few days she will leave for Trenton, to continue her work. The farewell meeting was held as usual in the W. C. T. U. rooms, and was well attended. The opening exercises were conducted by F. W. Morse, president of the Plainfield branch, and consisted of a short song service, a Scripture lesson, prayer by Mrs. Winter, and a song, "There'll be no dark valley when Jesus comes," by a quartette from the First Presbyterian and Congregational churches. Miss Herndon was then introduced and after a very earnest, heartfelt prayer, said a few farewell words. She told how much help and happiness her summer in Plainfield had given her, and of her earnest desire to accomplish more in her new field of work than ever before. She gave as her farewell message to her Plainfield friends, Ephesians 1: 2-3, and closed by singing a very sweet song entitled "Consecration," the words of which expressed her wish to go wherever her Master should send her, and to be and do only what He would have her be.

Resolutions telling of the appreciation of the work done by Miss Herndon were introduced by Mrs. J. M. Middledith and unanimously passed. Then followed a number of testimonies regarding the help and assistance the city missionary had given, and the meeting closed with singing.

FAILED TO FILE AN ANSWER.

Winkler Arrested for Not Paying a Fine or Saying Why He Shouldn't.

On October 12th, Game and Fish Warden Sebring, of Somerset county, arrested Theodore Roantree and Joseph Winkler, of New Market, for illegally taking fish from the mill pond with a spear after the water had been drawn off. The men were taken before Justice Storms and fined $20 a piece. Winkler filed a bond to the Middlesex County Court, appealing from the decision of the justice, and claiming that he was not guilty of the charge.

Awaiting the disposition of the matter by the county court, Winkler's name was not paid. After the appeal had been made, it is said that Winkler disappeared, and did not file an answer to the appeal. Thursday the ten days were up and Warden Sebring found Winkler staying at a farm house near Chimney Rock. He was arrested and taken to the Middlesex county jail at New Brunswick, where he will be incarcerated till the fine is paid.

NOT PLEASANT.

It is disagreeable for life-long Democrats to be compelled to realize weeks before election day that New Jersey heretofore almost considered invincible to Republicanism is bound to give a substantial majority for McKinley and Hobart. But it is the natural course of political events in his campaign. Putting themselves on record as unalterably opposed to the free coinage of silver, then having their principles trampled down in the madness of a convention dominated over by men bound to rule in defiance of party precedent, and later on a portion of those bowed down with the false idea of party regularity gathering in convention and unreservedly approving everything expliciting condemned but a few months before, the Democrats, or at least a portion of them, were in a bad way in New Jersey, so far as chances of success at the polls went. This election, however, should effectually stamp out that spirit which moulded the platform that has caused this wonderful change, and another four years will again re-establish the party of Jefferson and Jackson in the suffrages of New Jersey's freemen.

A DISGRACE TO THE CITY.

The story printed in the news columns of The Daily Press today concerning the experience of a prisoner who was locked up in the station house last night is a frightful one, and there is but little doubt that every word is true, in which the horrors of a night spent there are told. Time and time again this paper has called the attention of city officials to the disgraceful condition of this place, but there seems to be no effort to make any change. It is time that a decent place is provided for the confinement of city prisoners.

ALL BUT ONE NATIVE JERSEYMEN.

Seven of the eight Republican candidates for Congress in New Jersey are native Jerseymen, and only one, Charles Newell Fowler of the Eighth district, was born outside of the State, his birthplace being Lena, Ill. All are comparatively young men. Two candidates, Parker and Pitney, were born in Morristown, and two, Stewart and McEwan, were born in Paterson. The oldest man in the delegation is Benjamin F. Howell, who was born in 1844, and the youngest is Mahlon Pitney, who was born in 1858.

When the boys asked James E. Martine for the privilege of playing on his field and told him that they were were going to put up goal posts, he immediately suggested that they should erect silver posts.

The New York Herald also made a canvass of every Congressional district and predicts the election of 224 Republicans, 127 Democrats and 6 Populists, which it reclassifies into 215 votes for sound money and 142 votes for free silver.

ALL THE COUNTY CANDIDATES.

All of the political candidates have filed their acceptances, and below is a list of those who will call for the votes on Nov. 3d. With the exception of Dr. Silvers withdrawing from the Democratic ticket as a candidate for coroner, and the appointment of John M. C. Marsh in his stead the tickets remain as they were at first.

A BRIGHT OUTLOOK.

By the time another issue of the Constitutionist is printed the will of the people will have been recorded at the ballot boxes, and unless all indications are swept to the winds it will be for the maintenance of national credit and honesty. At times assuming threatening proportions in some parts of the country where isms seem to flourish with as much thrift as the people themselves fail to prosper—principally because of their lack of stability and constant shifting to try one thing and another in the problem of living—the support of free silver and other features of the Chicago platform and the leaders of whom it is a faithful reflex in rashness and extremities proposed in a peaceable government, has dwindled down to a mere handful of Western States whose mining interests would temporarily profit by the election of Bryan and Sewell. Of the east there has not been a doubt at any time as to where it stood, a portion of the South is now seeking the path it will support McKinley or Palmer with patriotic devotion and of the middle west where the pivotal States are located the constant and efficient education of the masses up to a realization of what the Chicago platform means has made them practically sure for sound money.

Since the last Presidential election almost every State which had not then adopted the Australian ballot system has, by State enactment, prescribed some form of secret blanket ballot, either based on the Australian plan or closely resembling it. The only exceptions are Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina and South Carolina. In the first three States named the old open ballot system prevails, and the election machinery is in the hands of the State authorities. In South Carolina there is what is called a "reform ballot," the avowed purpose of which is to restrict the votes of illiterate negroes. In nearly all the other States blanket ballots will be cast and many of them will be complicipated by the fact that State, legislative and county nominations are printed on the same ballot with the names of Presidential electors Should the election be in anyway close it is, therefore, quite possible that it may twenty-four or forty-eight hours after the polls close before the result is known with absolute certainty.—True American.

THE ONES TO SUFFER.

It is not the men whose wealth stands in gold or gilt-edged securities, who are the most concerned, who have the most reason to be concerned, about the election. These men have been trying, many of them at least, to protect themselves by gold clauses and contracts. They can look up their cash for awhile and submit, if necessary, to loss of interest. It is the class of men who have their money invested and their credit staked in the sort of enterprises which men work and employment for others, the varieties of business which trade depression and widespread distress fairly throttle, that realize most keenly all that is the stake in the coming election.—Newark Evening News.

A JOINT DEBATE.

A joint debate on the silver and gold question was held last night at Montclair between Freeman O. Willey, the free silver Congressional candidate and Alexander Noyes, the gold standard and Congressional candidate in the Eighth district. The audience was a representative one and each debater made points that were favorably received by supporters.

The Montclair town counsel, to whom were referred last week question of the sale of lapel buttons to children with questionable or vulgar inscriptions, reported that the act is liable to heavy penalty by a fine of $1,000.

Starving children

There are children without food. They cry for it, and are not answered. The pity of it! But often nature cries out in other ways that her children need nourishment. Is your child thin; actually poor in flesh? Does it get no benefit from its food? Then give something which produces flesh and makes rich blood.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites does more than this. It changes the unhealthy action to one of health, thus removing the cause. It acts on the nervous system, which controls all the processes of the body, toning it up into sound and vigorous activity. It is food for growing bone and brain. It makes the thin plump; the pale, ruddy; the weak, strong; it feeds and cures.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been indorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50 cent and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby. All druggists.

JUST AS GOOD IS NOT SCOTT'S EMULSION.

A HASTY ENGAGEMENT.

It is difficult to feel much sympathy for Miss Mary A. McNamara of Elizabeth, who recovered only $75 and costs last week in her suit for breach of promise against Capt. James Cox, when we read that she was the bridesmaid of the first wife of the defendant, and that the alleged promise of marriage was made only three days after the first wife died

IN HEALTHFUL EXERCISE.

Business Men Give an Exhibition in the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium.

Visitors were given some chance to see the work of the business men's class at the Y. M. C. A., Monday afternoon, and they found the exhibition very creditable. It was the first of a series of receptions to the friends of the class and association in which the regular routine of the class was followed under the direction of Physical Director Haywood.

The members are divided into two squads, one under the leadership of Street Commissioner Robert A. Meeker, who is, by the way, a very good athlete, and the other directed by Mr. Haywood. They exercised on the parallel and horizontal bars, the German horse and with dumb bells. Then followed a basket ball game between the business men's team and a scrub team. The business men, captained by John H. Doane, won by two goals to none. Rev. W. C. O'Donnell threw them both, one from the field and one on a foul.

Among the other members of the class were School Superintendent Henry M. Maxson, Rev. J. H. Johnston, G. M. Griffin, F. B. Joseph, A. C. LaBoyteaux, J. A. V. Craighead, George Fuller, Mr. VanFleet, J. A. Stafford, Gilmore Drayton and Fred Smith.

—All the old trolley cars are to be painted yellow the same as the new ones.

—There is some talk of a "sound money" demonstration to be held in this city Saturday night.

—Justice Mosher has issued summons in this case of the Plainfield Beef Company against John Coffey, on contract, which is returnable November 3d.

REST ON THE MOUNTAIN.

SECOND SERMONS FROM TEXTS SUGGESTED BY A CYCLE TRIP.

Rev. C. E. Herring Sunday Night Made an Interesting and Inspiring Discourse From the Subject of "Resting Places."

"Resting Places" was the text of Rev. C. E. Herring's second discourses on texts suggested by a wheeling tour through the continent. The sermon was delivered last Sunday in the First Presbyterian Church before a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Herring said:

"The son of man had no where to lay his head?" Never did any text of Scripture come so vividly to my mind as did this text one night last summer. My journey had been very long that day and at nine o'clock at night I found myself on a very high mountain in Northern Italy with no apparent possibility of reaching the top. It seemed as if the bleak mountainside would be my resting place for the night for there was not a house in sight. To my right I could see in the distance the beautiful Mediterranean, but there was no road leading from that mountain height to the valley below, I was beginning to be despondent when a turn in the road revealed two or three houses which constituted the city of Brecco, and in one of those was a light. I have great reason to remember the city of Brecco for it was a resting place after a long and tedious mountain journey. It was during that night that the rain descended and the floods came, which caused so much suffering in Northern Italy last summer, and I thought of my Master travelling in the wilderness of this world without a place to lay his head.

"He was the son of man. That was condescension, the Son of God becoming the son of man—not the son of Mary, but the like man, the man of no place or spot, having no peculiarity so that we could place Him in a particular age but belonging to us as much as He did to John.

"More than the son of man, He did not come into man's best estate but into his worst. All belonged to Him yet He made Himself of no reputation. He was homeless. He had no advantage over us in life because He was divine. He learned obedience by the things. He suffered; in all things He was made like unto His brethren. His divine Nature did not take the place of his rational soul.

"We are struck with the solace of Scripture regarding His home. Was His mother all she might have been to Him? Did she not deem Him beside Himself?

"Christ needed sympathy—needed it because He was human yet His disciples did not realize His plans and they therefore could not sympathize with Him.

"Yet Jesus might have had a home if worldly policy would have secured it. Worldly policy would have secured this eminent lawyer who wanted to follow Him. It was to him Jesus said 'I have no home, My religion is one of self-denial.' The scribe was emotional —too quickly enthusiastic; that which which is soon ripe is soon rotten. Jesus left these three thoughts on the minds of His hearers.

"'My followers must deny self even if it means homelessness, immediately surrender themselves to Me, and give Me an undivided heart.'"

BURNED OUT OF HOUSE AND HOME.

Alexander Dunn Loses Heavily by the Flames Last Night.

Alexander Dunn, who lived on the main road leading from Dunellen to Bound Brook, was burned out of house and home at an early hour Monday a. m. The house was one of those old-fashioned and sturdy farmhouses, and had stood in its present position for fifty years or more.

Just how the fire originated has not yet been fully explained, but it is presumed that it started from a kitchen stove, probably overheated. The family escaped, but saved nothing of value. Considering the lateness of the hour, and the somewhat isolated part of the town, only three or four neighbors saw the fire, and they quickly responded and did all in their power to keep the fire from spreading to adjoining buildings.

The Dunellen fire department were not notified and consequently did not report. Mr. Dunn's loss, it is said, is total, as he had no insurance on either the building or contents. The loss will amount to about $5,000.

J. H. Johnson, who is in business in this city, was on his way home to Bound Brook and noticed the fire being around the chimney. Mr. Johnson aroused the sleeping inmates with much difficulty and with their assistance managed to save much of the furniture.

About F. X. Schoonmaker.

The following item of interest concerning a former Plainfielder appeared in the Bakersfield (Cal.) Journal of a recent date: "F. X. Schoonmaker, a big gun of New Jersey, will be the next Republican speaker to appear on the Bakersfield hustings after this evening. He is programmed for the evening of the 12th inst. He is said to be an exceptionally fine orator."

You Can't Do It

It isn't possible to boil any oatmeal long enough to break the starch-cells, and so render it digestible. Starch is not converted into digestible material until 250 degrees is reached, and 212 degrees is the maximum boiling temperature. Oatmeal can only be made digestible by dry heat, and is the only oatmeal in which the starch is rendered soluble by bursting the starch granules. This makes it the only safe oatmeal for infants, children, and those of weak digestion.

Be sure and get the package with the big H-O on the end.

THEATRICAL.

Manager Willey has secured Emmett Corrigan, the talented young actor, for a three nights engagement beginning Monday, November 2d. Mr. Corrigan repertoire will consist of "The Mountebank," "John," "Turned Up" and "Lady of Lyons," with beautiful costumes and necessary scenery. In addition to the above plays he will introduce Augustus Thomas, the well-known tenor, who will render in an unapproachable manner all the latest ballads, with stereopticon views. Mlle. Victoria Dana will introduce the latest French and Spanish dances between the acts. Election returns will be given from the stage Tuesday evening. A private wire having been put into the theatre. Popular prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50 cents.

"El Capitan," the new comic oper a by Sousa and Klein, in which De Wolf Hopper and his company will appear at the Newark Theatre this week, has been a pronounced success. The part in which the tall comedian appears is said to give him ample opportunity to display all his skill as a fun-maker. Among the members of the company are Alfred Klein, Thomas S. Guise, Edmund Stanley, Edna Wallace Hopper, Alice Hosmer and Flit Raymond. A large and well-drilled chorus, a reinforced orchestra and fine scenery and costumes will mark the production. The only matinee of the week will be that on Saturday afternoon.

The dramatic profession is one of pecular influences of chance and luck, and there is no more significent or apt demonstration of this than the clever farce "My Friend from India," at the Bijou Theater in New York. The author had never been heard of before its production, and its managers, though well known and highly esteemed, had never been associated as proprietors with any metropolitan success. The success of "My Friend from India" means many things. Several theater parties of Plainfielders have seen this piece and are loud in praise of its entertaining merits. Several theater parties for the future are also being arranged.

—A new fife and drum corps has been organized in this city and will be known as the Queen City Fife and Drum Corps. The corps has been given permission by Mayor Gilbert to practice on the street one night each week, and before long the corps will be in shape to furnish first-class martial music.

An Election Bet.

An interesting and novel election bet has just been made by George Flammer and William Wright, both employes of W. J. Conroy, the Somerset street carriage manufacturer. Mr. Flammer is for gold and McKinley while Mr. Wraight is for free silver and Bryan. Both men are loyal and true to the cause they espouse and each one is willing to do most anything for his champion, so they decided to make a bet on the election result. The losing man is to wheel the winner from Linden avenue down Somerset street to Front street and back again in a wheelbarrow. Of course, both men are equally sure of getting a free ride, and as Wraight declares he will have Guttman's Band to head the procession, while Mr. Flammer thinks the Independendent Fife and Drum Corps would just suit him if he wins. Mr. Wraight is keeping a sharp lookout for the lightest wheelbarrow obtainable to use in case he loses the bet, as Mr. Flammer balances the scales at 180 pounds while he himself weighs only 135 pounds. Both men declare they will keep their word.

—Peter Seader says that he was not in the North avenue 'smoking room' at the station Monday night when the hack horses ran away.

—Misses Christianson and Duvernoy, shorthand students in Plainfield Business College, have secured positions with Reed & Coddington.

Mrs. John H. Kitchen, of Somerset street, has returned from a short visit in Paterson, where she was accompanied Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Taylor, who drove there from Dunellen.

FOR THE REINHART GOLF CUP.

The Preliminaries Played on the Course Last Saturday.

The first competition among the members of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club handicap play for the cup presented by J. W. Reinhart, took place Saturday afternoon on the golf links, Plainfield avenue. There were twenty-eight entries, and only eight members qualified to enter the contest which will take place next Saturday. The conditions were that the eight men with the lowest net scores should compete in match play next Saturday, and the winner is to hold the cup sixth months, and it must be won three times to become the personal property of a member. Those who qualified last Saturday and the scores made are as follows:

	Gross	Handicap	Net
Vinton, J. M. P.	96	9	87
Archer, J. S.	98	10	88
Reinhart, J. W.	99	10	89
Vail, Carl	108	20	88
Montgomery, T. R.	112	22	90
Ayer, Jr., Chas.	124	34	90
Vanderbeek, George	109	20	89
Green, Asbury	97	27	70

During the afternoon tea was served in the clubhouse to the large number present. Mr. Atterbury poured tea and was assisted by Miss Van Boskerck, Miss Tracy, Miss Gilnna and the Misses Holly. Already there is much interest manifested in the contest for the cup and who will be the first one to secure it. The fact that it will take a long time for a member to own the cup serves to create an increasing interest in the contest.

ON GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

Characteristics as Pointed Out in a Sermon by Dr. Yerkes.

At the First Baptist church Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. Dr. Yerkes, preached on Good Citizenship, taking for his text Paul's assertion that he was of Tarsus, "A citizen of no mean city." Starting with the congratulation that an American can claim he is a citizen of no mean country, he spoke of some of the duties to be exercised by the good citizen, actuated by patriotic principles, broader than party, above sectionalism, upholding righteous law, guaranteeing fairness, freedom and justice to every man, and on the side of God, either with or independent of party and policy. In view of the near approach of the time when the citizen's power can be wielded at the ballot box, he urged conscientious, thoughtful and prayerful use of that power.

—The Plainfield Board of Education will hold their meeting Monday evening.

—Perseverence Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., will hold its regular meeting Friday night.

—The Plainfield Cycle and Sporting Goods Company, of North avenue, have received a fine line of guns, all of the latest pattern, which they are selling at prices within the reach of all.

—A monster white oak tree, fully three feet in diameter, stands directly on the sidewalk line on the southeast side of West Front street, below Grant avenue, and it will have to come down in order to lay the walk ordered by the Council.

TO BE HUNG, AND SMILES

THE BOY MURDERER SEEMS NOT TO REALIZE HIS AWFUL FATE

Judge Magie Sentences Elmer Clawson to Be Executed December 10th For the Killing of Farmer Harry Hodgett.

Elmer Clawson, the eighteen-year-old boy who killed Henry Hodgett, the Bedminster farmer, last August, with a revolver, and was tried and convicted of murder in the Supreme Court before Judge Magie at Somerville, came into court Monday with a smile on his pale and somewhat wan face to hear the sentence of the Judge. The boy seemed to be totally oblivious of his impending fate and joked and laughed with those to whom he talked.

William Steele, of the firm of Stelle & Meehan, who defended his case in court, made an eloquent plea for clemency from the court in passing sentence. He spoke at such length that court asked him to close. The sentence was that Clawson should hang to death in jail yard at Somerville on Wednesday, December 16th. The sentence did not seem to affect the prisoner and he left the court room with the same smile that he had entered. He had nothing to say when the court asked him if there was any reason why the sentence should not be pronounced.

Steele & Meehan applied for a new trial but the Judge refused the motion.

NEW CHURCH FEATURE.

Congregational Sunday-school Officers Installed With Special Services.

A special service in the interest of the Sunday-school was held in the Congregational church last Sunday morning. The newly-elected officers of the Sunday-school were installed, and the teachers reappointed. After the usual opening of the morning service the roll of officers was called, as follows: Joseph A. Robinson, superintendent; Lucius B. Morgan, assistant superintendent; Stacy R. Ray nolds, secretary; J. Augustus Powlinson, treasurer; Charles Steiner, librarian; Mrs. M. E. Dwight, pianist. These came forward, and the pastor, Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich, addressed them briefly concerning their responsibility as Sunday-school officers, and Deacon George F. Raynolds read some words of Scripture which formed appropriate counsel for the occasion. The roll of teachers was then called, and the teachers all came forward and listened to their pastor's earnest words concerning their high calling, and their duty to be regular and prompt in attendance, and to watch over their pupils and lead them into the Christian life. The teachers repeated a covenant, promising to be true to their duties as teachers, to lead a consistent Christian life, and to counsel spiritually with their pupils, both in the classes and at other times. Scripture counsel was given them by Deacon Raynolds and Superintendent Robinson, the congregation joined in a Scripture benediction upon the teachers, then the latter sang together "A Charge to Keep I Have," and returned to their seats.

The sermon was in reference to the Sunday-school, of which the pastor gave three definitions: the church teaching the Bible, so doing the work Christ gave to his disciples; the church caring for its own, training up the young people who would soon be its strength; and the church studying the Bible socially and gaining from contact with one another's minds more help in Bible interpretation than could be obtained from solitary study. He earnestly invited the older members of the congregation to come into the adult classes of the Sunday-school.

This service was well attended and much enjoyed. It was something quite new to the Plainfield churches, and the effects of it will doubtless be seen in increased earnestness on the part of the Sunday-school workers.

Snyder Unjustly Imprisoned.

Seventeen days ago Robert Snyder, a resident of Fanwood, fifty-five years old, was arrested there on a serious charge preferred against him by his nineteen-year-old daughter. He was lodged in the county jail by a Fanwood justice of the peace under $1,000 to await the grand jury's action. That body took up his case Saturday, and after a thorough investigation, decided the prisoner had been wrongfully imprisoned, as there was no evidence to prove he was guilty. Without waiting for the court to take action in the matter, the grand inquest decided that Snyder had suffered enough and took the unusual step of ordering his immediate release. Snyder will not take any measures, it is thought, to obtain satisfaction for his unjust imprisonment.

WORLD OF KNOWLEDGE.

PUBLIC EXHIBITION OF BOOKS AT THE LIBRARY.

Presided Over by Society Leaders and Attended by a Large Assemblage of Plainfield's Citizens—The Library Decorated.

The art rooms of the Public Library presented a very charming appearance, last Saturday morning and afternoon, during the exhibit of choice books.

The picture covered walls made a very effective background for the decorations which had transformed the conventionally arranged art gallery into a very attractive drawing-room. The decorating was done under the direction of Miss Margaret E. Meredith, and pretty things for the room were loaned by the women who took part in the exhibit, and also by Mrs. Baldwin and Mrs. Craig A. Marsh. Prettily arranged tables, standing here and there, held the books to be exhibited, while smaller ones held plants, banquet lamps and bronzes. Comfortable divans, cosy with cushions, *stood at either end of the apart*ment, handsome chairs were scattered about, and in the very centre of the room was a large century plant, its standard draped with warm crimson.

In the alcove opposite the curtained entrance, at a table covered with very handsome scientific books, the guests found Mrs. Alexander Gilbert. This table was thronged during the entire exhibition with people fascinated with the fine plates and the interesting explanations given by the lady in charge.

At Mrs. Gilbert's left, Miss Van-Beskerck was seated at a table containing books on Egyptology, Shepp's "Photographs of the World," "Little Women," untinted in raised type for the blind, and other things of interest.

In the corner beyond Miss Van Boskerck, Miss Arnold presided over some charming books on Great Britain. In the opposite corner, Miss Dalziel exhibited a number of exquisite art books. Between this table and the entrance, Miss Leonard and Miss Munger's table was found, with some beautifully illustrated books on the Middle Ages.

At Mrs. Gilbert's right stood a table covered with art books on Florence, presided over by Miss Tracy, while in the corner beyond her Miss Thorn displayed some fine illustrated books on the cathedrals. A tall, draped easle at her left supported a large picture of Lincoln Cathedral, England.

At the right of the center, Miss Erskine's table held some very fine books on costume; at the left center sat Miss Ellis, exhibiting books on United States history, and the American.

Each lady had upon her table a dainty little list of the books which she was exhibiting, the covers charmingly painted in water colors by Miss Grace Flazen.

A steady stream of visitors flowed in and out during the exhibition hours the crowd in the afternoon being larger than that of the morning. The guests were charmed with the fine books, and it was evident that the exhibit had awakened a new interest in the treasures of the Public Library.

As it began to grow dusky, the lamps and candles were lighted, and the scene was even prettier. The guests remained long after the hour set for closing, and it was nearly six o'clock before the last ones departed, bring to a close a thoroughly successful afternoon.

Likes the West Better Than the East.

Frank Ianson, a former resident of East Third street, together with his wife and three children, left for their home in Hastings, Neb., this morning. They have been east visiting among relatives and friends for a few weeks. Frank is now a most trusted engineer on the Burlington and Missouri Railroad, and it was just five years ago last July since he visited his former home here. Frank says the west suits him exactly, and he has no desire to return east to live. Out there, he says, there is no extreme cold weather, although the winters are quite long but not severe. During this fall he reports that the crops were so abundant that corn sold for 8 cents a bushel, oats at 7 and wheat at 33.

RAID ON WAGES.

GOLD DOLLAR GUYS TOO MUCH, SAY PROMINENT SILVERITES.

Southern Pacific and Teller Would Reduce the Purchasing Power of Wages to Help Manufacturers—Boies to Help Big Farmers—Other Silverites Authorities Agree That Our Present Dollar Is Too Good For the Wage Earner.

If any wage earner thinks that free coinage at 16 to 1 would not reduce his actual wages and that it is not intended to do so by leading silverites, he should read the following quotations from speeches and letters of some of silver's warmest friends. Bryan is more guarded in his language than some of his friends, but he virtually tells the workingmen of the country that their wages are too high when he tells the western farmers that cheap money, and consequently higher prices, will help them to pay their debts.

The sole object of remonetizing silver, as I understand it, is to secure a cheaper dollar with which to measure and regulate prices. Our present gold dollar is too valuable; its purchasing power is too great; it will buy too much.—Senator J. K. Jones, Chairman Democratic National Committee.

I am confident that we shall very soon hear from the great industrial interests of Christendom, now threatened, as never before, by the competition of the silver using countries, especially the Asiatic countries, or what has been properly called the Asiatic peril." This competition cannot be met by tariffs and can only be overturned by a change in the monetary system that now is giving to Asiatic manufacturers the power to which we propose to render competition with them on our part impossible.—Senator H. M. Teller in New York World, Feb. 15, 1896.

I have myself in this state two farms, paid a handsome price for them, and I have earned as a lawyer. One is a farm of 2,500 acres of land, and the other contains 1,000 acres. With the present price of labor and the present price paid for farm products no man in the world could take either of these farms, even if I should present them with the ground, and make a dollar out of it. A farmer who works himself and is assisted by the labor of sons and daughters could make a small income pay; but no farm is profitable when conducted on the basis of a manufacturing business. Cheap and abundant money is the only remedy for this intolerable state of things.—Ex-Governor Horace Boies.

Wages in gold using countries have, through the appreciation of gold, become a hundred per cent dearer than they were relatively to silver wages, and the manufacturers in the silver standard countries can "obtain their labor at half the cost relatively to gold wages which he formerly paid."—Mr. George Jamieson, British Consul at Shanghai, 1893.

One of the greatest evils (referring to Mexico) at the present time is the existence of a scale of wages which defies all power of competition, which robs the laborer of all sense of dignity or feeling of association with the rest of their fellow citizens, and, having reduced them so a condition of abject abasement, deteriorates to a like extent their productive power and the measure of their ability.—Bureau of American Republics (Publication No. 9, 1891).

The silver standard is a great stimulus in developing home manufactures, because foreign commodities have to be paid in gold, and, owing to the high rate of exchange, their price becomes so high that it pays well to manufacture some of them at home. Our low wages also help to bring about these results.—Senor Romero of Mexico in a Recent Article in North American Review.

It is true that under an era of higher prices fixed salaries will not go so far as now, but now they go too far, and their purchasing power ought to be reduced. Salaries were mostly established before the hard times set in, and now represent vastly more than was intended when the salaries were created.—Detroit Tribune, a free silver paper.

It is true, as you state, that the laborer (in Mexico) gets only half as much from a gold standpoint as formerly, but what has gold to do with the case? Silver is his measure of values. He is paid for his labor in silver and pays it out for the necessaries of life, and he knows no difference, whether his silver dollar is worth a gold standpoint 100 cents or only 50.—H. S. Beattie (ardent silverite), President Board of Trade, El Paso, Tex.

I am for free silver because I am in debt, and if we get free coinage I can pay my debts with one-half of what it now costs under our present money standard. And another reason, I employ laborers on my farm. They are the creditors, I am the debtor. Under free coinage I can pay my labor with one-half it costs me now, for it will raise the price of products, and I can then hire my farm help for 50 cents a day and pay them in bacon at 5c cents a pound.—James Kitchen, an extensive farmer and stockman, of Grayson, Ky.

Goldbugs In the Wheat.

Goldbugs must have got into the wheat fields, judging from the way in which wheat persists in going up while the price of silver is falling.—The Bryanites must find some other standard of comparison than their favorite bushel of wheat, and they have not much time left in this campaign.—Boston Transcript.

It is no longer the 53 cent dollar against which we contend. It is the 50 cent dollar, with a tendency toward 49 cents of actual value.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

Absurd and Revolutionary Powers of the Chicago Platform Exposed in This Question.

The second revolutionary principle of the Chicago Democratic platform is contained in its final clause, where legislation is favored that will prevent the demonetization of any kind of legal tender money by private contract. This clause is aimed against private contracts whose terms require payment to be made in gold. However inaptly the clause expresses this aim, or how it would be possible for two individuals in making a contract between themselves, in which the public has no concern, to demonetize a kind of money which the law makes a legal tender are questions I will not stop to consider. It is enough to know that the Chicago Democracy favors a law which will prevent one man from agreeing to pay another in gold or prevent the payee from enforcing payment in gold. Farmers, it seems, are to be allowed, when they loan seed wheat to a neighbor, to receive back in good wheat as they gave. Livery men who hire horses and buggies, neighbors who loan implements and tools to another, are not forbidden to stipulate that the same articles shall be returned to them, or that what is returned to them shall be in as good condition as what they loaned, but the man who loans gold either for friendship or hire shall not be permitted to stipulate that gold shall be returned to him. The trail of the silver goldbug is over it all. The creed of the silver Democracy or of the silver mine owner seems to be as follows:

First.—The government shall coin into dollars all the silver bullion that may be brought to the mints, and those dollars shall be given back to the bullion owner.

Second.—The government shall do this work for nothing.

Third.—The government shall force all creditors to take these dollars at 100 cents each in payment of their claims, no matter what the dollars are actually worth.

Fourth.—Nobody shall be permitted to make a private contract for the payment of money which may not be fulfilled by the payment of silver.—J. T. Brooks.

The Workingman's Point of View.

The free silverites contend that free coinage will increase the price of bread, meat, butter, fowls and everything else the workingman buys.

There is no pretense or possibility of a pretense that it will increase the wages of the workingman in anything like the same proportion, if, indeed, it increases them at all.

The great majority of workingmen work for employers who, like the railroads, must pay their bonds, principal and interest, in gold. If the incomes of their employers must hereafter be in silver, how are they to pay their obligations in gold unless they cut down expenses either by reducing wages or by dismissing some of their men?

Blood cannot be got out of a turnip. Wages can only be paid from earnings.

What possible interest can any workingman have in voting for a debasement of the currency which will at the same time diminish the wage paying capacity of his employer and reduce the purchasing power of his wages?—New York World.

When Wages Are Paid In Silver.

Prices will be marked up at once. When will wages go up proportionately?

A Lack of Facts.

President Stryker of Hamilton college, Utica, N. Y., in a recent address, in which he paid his respects to Candidate Bryan as "the Absalom of finance," made this among other telling points:

"Silver went 'go to 41.29' upon the election of this day dreamer. Well, then, either the public does not think so or does not think his election possible. Why? Because if it did think it so and believed he would be elected, this same public would be buying silver, and in view of this miracle of a 100 per cent advance would be crowding to have a share in the huge profit."

The price of silver continues to decline.

The Crime of 1896.

The "golden" wheat and the "silver" white cotton will yield to you about $150,000,000 more of effete Europe's wealth into the pockets of the American farmers than last year's crop brought. A national convention of Populists should be called at once to denounce this terrible "crime of 1896," which has been committed just as Bryan's tears were melting the hardest heart as he sobbingly told of the sorrows and tribulations of the farmers.—Louisville Post.

In silver standard countries there are no savings banks and no building and loan associations. This is what serves to account in large degree for the patience with which the people of these countries submit to the spoliation and robbery of a depreciated currency. They have so much less to lose from this species of fraud than have the people of gold standard countries.

WALKING THE 16 TO 1 PLANK.

Labor's Commission to Mexico.

The report of the commission of inquiry sent to Mexico by the Chicago Trade and Labor assembly to investigate the social and industrial conditions that prevail under the silver standard in that country was recently made public.

This commission consisted of Messrs. Maas and Enright, members of the Chicago Trade and Labor assembly, who were selected with no reference to any predilections on the currency question which they may have entertained.

The report is a scathing and unanswerable arraignment of free money metallism as a currency system. It is a staggering blow to the free silver propaganda that seeks to deceive and betray American labor. The revelations it contains are a stinging rebuke to the republicans who are endeavoring to persuade American mechanics that their condition can be improved by Mexicanising our currency.

In the comforts and necessities of life the Mexican laborers, according to the investigations of Messrs. Maas and Enright, are down to the minimum, and in no time in history could their condition have been more deplorable, or the race would be extinct. Special stress is laid on the significant fact that the principal inducement offered capital to invest in Mexico is the cheap native labor to be found and the absence of all danger of strikes. This fact alone should be sufficient to impel American labor to resist with all its might every attempt to debase the currency.

Under the silver standard in Mexico labor is the cheapest commodity in the country. In Mexico "to don the raiment of toil is to wear the garb of servility." The toiler lives on a diet as veritable beast of burden and performs his tasks "with the impassive indifference of an automaton."

It deserves the careful study and consideration of every intelligent American wageworker. It is entitled to his respectful credulity, because it comes not from economic scholars or from dreamy sociological theorists, but from plain toilers, "inured to the hard knocks of the factory and workshop."

The Gold Dollar Measured by Labor.

The proper test of the value of an article is the labor required to produce it.

The test applies as well to the gold dollar as to everything else.

If less labor is required now to produce a gold dollar than was required in 1860 or in 1873—that is, if a given amount of labor will produce less labor, or if, in other words, wages are higher—then by the labor test, the only genuine test, the gold dollar must have gone down instead of up.

And no silver advocate has attempted to deny that wages have risen.

The senate report on wages and prices made in 1893 shows conclusively that wages have increased over 68 per cent since 1860 and nearly 24 per cent since 1870—in gold.

The purchasing power of wages has increased over 75 per cent since 1860 and nearly 23 per cent since 1870.

The cost of gold, measured by labor, has declined 31 per cent since 1860 and nearly 23 per cent since 1870.

The cost of gold, measured by labor, in 1860 as the standard of comparison, the cost of gold from 1870 to 1891, the last year included in the Aldrich senate report, has declined as follows:

1870	.73	1881	.823
1871	.694	1882	.854
1872	.629	1883	.826
1873	.670	1884	.864
1874	.695	1885	.842
1875	.745	1886	.843
1876	.745	1887	.859
1877	.738	1888	.823
1878	.719	1889	.814
1879	.717	1890	.804
1880	.800	1891	.820

The labor test confirms the result of the interest test, that gold has not appreciated in value.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

From Secretary Windom's Last Speech.

The quality of a circulation is even more important than the quantity. Numerous devices for enlarging credit may, and often do, avert the evils of a deficient circulation, and a redundancy may sometimes modify its own evils before their results become universal, but for the baleful effects of a debased and fluctuating currency there is no remedy except by the costly and difficult return to sound money. Like a poison in the blood permeates arteries, veins, nerves, brain and heart, so does a debased and fluctuating currency permeate all the arteries of trade, paralyse all kinds of business and bring disaster to all kinds of people.

How many hours a day, at 3½ cents an hour, Mexican style, would an American workingman have to work in order to own his own house? That is a free silver question.

There is the same difference between gold arguments and silver sophistries that there is between sunshine and moonshine.

What Makes Interest Low.

What keeps interest high is uncertainty. That means lack of confidence. That means low credit and high interest.

In Idaho, Montana and other far west states the average interest on farm loans is over 10 per cent. Idaho has had the severest laws enacted against usury, but these have not made interest low. Montana has failed to pay her own drafts. Those who have money to loan are afraid to lend in states where the state itself fails to pay its debts. In the older states where debts never have been repudiated the interest on farm loans averages from 5½ to 6½ per cent. This is because men who have money to loan believe that they will get their money back. They do not have to charge high insurance in the interest for fear they may lose the principal.

The reason western farmers have had to pay high interest is that those who had money to lend were uncertain what they would get back. They had been uncertain because they feared repudiation or debased money. Repudiation by southern and western states kept money out of the south and kept interest high. The free coinage movement at the west has had the same effect.

When sound money comes to stay, those with money to lend will be more ready to lend it and ready to lend it cheaper. This is truly "cheap money."

When the last bonds were sold, the secretary of the treasury stated to congress that he could save $16,000,000 interest if congress would say that the bonds would be payable not only "in coin," but "in gold." People expected they would be paid in gold, but they wanted to be sure. The difference between being half sure and being sure was $16,000,000 in interest.

It is "cheap interest" the western farmer needs, not "cheap money." He can get "cheap interest" with sound money, and in no other way.

That is true of all borrowers who need money.—New York World.

Swindling Old Soldiers.

The value of the pension secured by the wounded veterans, whose monthly payment from the government is in a great many cases their sole support, depends entirely upon its purchasing power. If that power be high, it will buy a much larger supply of the necessities of life than is created in the cheap dollars. It requires no argument to prove that, if this country adopts the silver standard, prices as based on dollars containing 50 cents' worth of silver will be just twice as high as they are now. Values will be no higher, and the farmer or worker will get no more than he does now, but nominal prices will be doubled. As the number of dollars paid for pensions is fixed, it follows that if paid in silver dollars the pensioner would receive only one-half as much, measured in commodities, rent, etc., as he does under the gold standard.

These are facts which the silverites have never attempted to deny. Now have they ever proposed to double the pensions which are paid to the old soldiers, their widows and orphans. Now, then, can they expect the country to adopt a financial system which would dishonestly rob the pensioners of one-half of their income?

The Workingman's Alternative.

If our workingmen think their wages are too high by 50 per cent and would rather have them paid in dollars that will buy only half as much in the markets and at the stores, they will vote for Mr. Bryan and free coinage of silver. If they think, as we do, that this would be "free and in many cases fully one-half of their pay will stand by Thomas Jefferson's common sense doctrine that dollars should be coined as near the market ratio as possible, so that they will buy 100 cents' worth of goods wherever they are tendered.—Baltimore Sun.

Why Not Call Frances Dollars?

As well might the farmer and laborer think to make a profit by selling his farm or labor for francs instead of dollars because it takes 5 francs to make a dollar, and he would consequently get five times as many of them, as to think that by selling his farm or his labor for silver dollars, two of which make a gold dollar, that he would make a profit by so doing.

Free silver in Mexico is a great institution. Wages averaging 35 cents among all kinds of workingmen are a great institution, for instance. They are not desirable enough, however, in American eyes, to be made part and parcel of our civilization.

Wheat has advanced 18 cents a bushel in New York since Mr. Bryan was nominated, and silver has declined in the same time about 4 cents an ounce. These facts do not agree with Populistic theories—but so much the worse for the theories.

INGERSOLL ON LAW AND MONEY.

He Makes Clear Some of the Absurd Arguments of the Silverites.

If you can make money by law, why shouldn't we be rich? If 100 people should settle on an island and form a government and elect a legislature, they could make laws. And if money is the creature of law, there is no reason why they should not be as wealthy as Great Britain. [Laughter and applause.] Law is inexhaustible [laughter], and if you can turn it into money no nation has an excuse for being poor.

Then there is another thing. If the government can make money by law—and I would like to have some good Bryan man answer the question—if the government can make money by law, why should the government collect taxes? [Laughter and applause.] Let us be honest. Here is a poor man, with a little yoke of cattle, cultivating 40 acres of stony ground, working like a slave in the heat of the summer, in the cold blasts of winter, and the government makes him pay $10 taxes, when, according to these gentlemen, it could issue a $100,000 bill in a second. Issue the bill and give the fellow with the cattle a rest. [Laughter.] It is possible for the mind to conceive anything more absurd than that the government can create money?

We—and remember it—have to support the government. Government cannot support us. And the idea that the government can create money in politics, in finance, is just as absurd as the doctrine of perpetual motion is in mechanics, just as idiotic as the philosopher's stone, and as absurd as the fountain of eternal youth.

Ah, but they say, "What makes gold valuable is that the law has made it a legal tender." Again, gentlemen, you are arguing backward. Because it was valuable the law made it a legal tender. Making it legal tender did not give it value; but, being valuable, the law made it a legal tender, recognizing its value. And yet these gentlemen say that it got all its value from the law making it a legal tender. It is exactly the other way. The legal tender law rests on the value of the metal. Why is gold valuable? I don't know. Why do people love oysters? I don't know. [Applause and laughter.] Why do so many people get idiotic about election? [Applause.] I don't know. But these are facts in human nature. For some reason, or for money, people give a value to gold. And that value is recognized by the law-making power, and that is all there is to the legal tender act.

That's right, Uncle Samuel, go ahead and try free coinage at 16 to 1. I shouldn't wonder a bit if it would work all right. Anyhow, it might be the means of forcing Europe to take up bimetallism again. Something should be done right away. Here's Germany, with $107,000,000 worth of silver whose value is rapidly declining, and I don't see any prospect of Europeans ever coming to the rescue unless you first try the experiment.

Kicking Against the Prices.

There is no doubt of the forceful and magnetic quality of Mr. Bryan on the stump. He has a wonderful facility for making things appear what they are not. He can, as the Irish say, "talk a bird off a bush." But who can contend successfully against facts? Mr. Bryan would have us believe that depreciating prices are due to depreciated silver and appreciated gold. He has been harping on this theme ever since he was nominated. But the markets give him the lie. The following figures showing the course of prices are more eloquent than a hundred Bryans:

	Wheat, Bushel. Cents.	Cotton, Pound. Cents.	Silver, Ounce. Cents.
July 9	67¾	7	67¾
Oct. 17	81	8	65¾
Increase	17¾	1	....
Decrease	....	....	1¾

As wheat goes up silver goes down, and with it go the hopes of the republicanists.

Free Silverite Logic.

Yesterday's World had a clever cartoon whose idea is applicable to the discussion of the currency question. It represents an aged farmer and wife driving their old nag at its topmost speed, which is slow at that. The farmer is represented as saying: "Why, she's going a mile a minute. All I had to do was to set the mileposts closer together." All the dairymen have to do is to make a quart half its present size to double the yield. When a bushel is worth a dollar, then the United States grain product will be twice as much. That is the way the free silver people propose to make more money.—Utica Press.

Are you insured? Free coinage would cut down the value of your policy one-half by making the policy payable in 50 cent dollars instead of 100 cent dollars, as now. Have you any money in the bank? Free coinage would reduce the value of it one-half for the same reason. Do you draw a pension? Free coinage would diminish the value of it one-half, again for the same reason. Free coinage would take away one-half the value of all the money you received.

PRICE OF SILVER

REASONS WHY IT WOULD NOT RISE TO $1.29 AN OUNCE IN A

Bryan's Opinion Versus All Known Facts—He Admits That a Panic Would Usher In His Millennium—As Free Silver Would Not Go Up, the Silver Would Be Unparalleled.

Mr. Bryan says he does not believe the silver dollar would decrease in cents or as all, but we do, because the world's 100 cents in gold, as now this view sound?

If the silver dollar under free coinage is to remain worth 100 cents it is apparent that silver bullion will become worth $1.29 an ounce, as worth less bullion holders would ask for the profit, and this process would continue until no profit remained, that is, until the value of the silver dollar was just the same as the value of the bullion in it.

To do this it is necessary to raise the value of the world's stock of gold, which exceeds $4,000,000,000, from 100 cents, its present price, to $1.29 an ounce.

Mr. Bryan admits this. In his speech of acceptance he said: "We contend that free and unlimited coinage by the United States alone will raise the bullion value of silver to its coinage value, and thus make silver bullion worth $1.29 per ounce in gold throughout the world."

The question, therefore, is, would the demand in the United States for silver dollars over and above the present stock of 427,000,000 of them be sufficient to double the value of the world's stock of silver?

Mr. Bryan says it will, but admits he can't prove it, adding, "Neither can you prove that it won't." In Brooklyn, on Sept. 24, he said: "You cannot prove to mathematical justice that we can maintain parity. Neither can you prove that we cannot."

The United States has had some experience in trying to raise the price of the world's stock of coin above its market value.

In 1860 the bullion in a silver dollar was worth $1.03 in gold, and the gold dollar, measured by silver, was depreciated 3 per cent. Our mints were open to the free coinage of gold as well as of silver. Did that raise the price of gold to par with silver? Not at all. Although the world's stock of gold is much smaller than its stock of silver, and although it was only necessary to raise it 3 per cent, we could not accomplish it.

This lasted from 1834 to 1860 and down to 1873. The price of gold bullion was not raised, and, being the cheaper currency, it drove the silver out of circulation. Gold and silver had been in circulation for over 35 years, in 1873, after full debate, this coin was omitted from our coinage list.

In 1792, under the ratio of 15 to 1 in force at that time, the bullion in a gold dollar was worth 3 cents more than the silver dollar, and the silver dollar, measured by gold, was depreciated 3 per cent. Silver, being the cheaper money, drove gold entirely out of circulation for more than 40 years—that is, from 1834—when the government changed the ratio from 15 to 1 to 16 to 1, with the effect seen above.

In 1860 we were a nation of over 30,000,000 of people and had no silver on hand. Now we are a nation of about 70,000,000 of people, but have 427,000,000 of silver dollars on hand.

If, with all our power, in 1860 we were unable to raise the bullion value of gold 3 per cent, how can we expect to raise the bullion value of a larger quantity of silver not merely 3 per cent, but fully 33 times 3—i. e., 99 per cent?

If, in 1860, with over 30,000,000 of people, we had been able to raise the bullion value of gold just 3 per cent to par, then, being 33½ times as great a people now as we were then, we might expect to raise the bullion price of silver 33½ times as high—that is, 7 per cent—with how much more ease to raise its price, not 7 per cent alone, but more than thirteen times 7 per cent—i. e., 99 per cent—especially when the only power we have to raise it with is our demand for silver dollars, and that is already amply supplied to the extent of $427,000,000?

Yet, unless we succeed in thus nearly doubling the price of the entire world's stock of silver, the price of bullion must inevitably fall the value of the silver dollar down, as bullion would be coined as long as there was a profit—i. e., while the values met.

Mr. Bryan has presented his beliefs on this subject. Opposed to them are facts and history, and each reader is judge of this country alone, but of all countries.

But it is to be noted that even if the silver dollar did not depreciate we would not escape a panic, as foreseen by Mr. Bryan, because it would depreciate, and would consequently ease its debts and force sales just the same.

Mr. Bryan fully admits that a panic must result even if the silver dollar does not depreciate. In the Chicago convention he said: "I have been pressed before us and tell us that we shall disturb your business interests, we reply that you have disturbed our business interests." And the St. Louis Globe-Democrat reported his saying: "I think it (success of the free coinage movement) will cause a panic. But the country is in a deplorable condition, and it will take extreme measures to restore it to a condition of prosperity."

Therefore a panic is confessedly certain to follow Bryan's election, whether silver depreciates or not.

If, as our own experience and all history show, the silver dollar must come to about 50 cents, the disastrous consequences which will follow will probably be unparalleled in our history.

We'll wager that the Kentucky fool hen which lays eggs stamped "16 to 1" is not a hen, but a goose.

NOW AND THEN.

Oh, now and then there comes a day
When all our skies are bright,
And all of life's appointed way
Is bathed in golden light:
When roses hide no thorns beneath;
When birds no longer build no allory;
When earth's full of perfume breathe
From out the hills of joy.

The present is a fleeting thing,
That vanishes for aye,
And all its stories of treasures bring
Forever and a day.
Then we shall the echoes come
From time's receding shore;
Each day will contain a pleasure from
The days that are no more.

Oh, memories of such, awake!
And gird the weary now;
A wreath of rebellious make
Upon the dreamer's brow.
Oh, silent voice and vanished hand,
Come back the golden sheaves!
The ripple of the waters and
The laughter of the leaves.

THE WOMAN IN BLACK.

Traveling recently from Chicago to New York, I found in the morning, upon awaking out of my berth, that the train was standing stock still. The porter told me it had been standing there for an hour and a half, while I had been sleeping the sleep of the just. I dressed and peeped out, and saw that we were alongside the platform of a country station. I took a good breakfast in the dining car and then went out to stroll up and down the platform.

In the cab sat the driver, or engineer, as they call him, alone, waiting. With the natural fondness of an Englishman for machinery, I stopped and gossiped with him a moment about the engine.

Then I offered him a cigar, which he took with thanks, and asked me to come in. I swung myself into his cab.

The engineer, a bright, pleasant-faced man about 40 years old, explained to me the various valves and levers about him. They were all as bright and shining as polish could make them, for an engineer is as proud of his engine as any housewife is of the contents of her dwelling. I glanced at his two shining steam gauges with the clock between them, and then I noticed what seemed to be an ordinary white moth, mounted in a gilt frame, hanging against the wall of the cab.

"Is that for an ornament?" I asked, pointing at the moth.

The driver smiled. "Well, partly for an ornament," he said, "but a good deal more for sentiment. I put that moth there because it saved my life, and the lives of 350 people as well."

"How in the world could an insect save human lives?" I asked.

"Well, I will tell you, if you want to hear the story. I reckon there's time enough before we are able to get out of this."

I settled myself in the stoker's seat and prepared to listen. "It wasn't much of a long time back," said the engineer; "only a year last spring. I was running this very train, and with this very engine—old 449. My stoker was Jim here, the same fellow as I have got now. You can see him over there, leaning up against the telegraph office.

"Jim's a good boy, but he's very superstitious; believes in ghosts, dreams and warnings. I used to laugh at his notions, but I don't make so much fun of him as I did—not since we saw the Woman in Black.'

"We were timed to leave M—— about one o'clock in the morning, and to arrive in S—— about six o'clock. On the night when the moth took place a fearful storm of wind and rain had been raging since early evening, and was at the height of its fury when I started from the engine shed.

"It was about midnight and the wind seemed to sweep clear round and through the building. It was terribly dismal. Jim was there, and the engine was all ready, so after getting my working clothes on, I ran the engine down to the station, and, the train being somewhat limited, was an hour late. I gave the engine a thorough oilling, and made sure that all was in order.

"As we sat in the cab we could hear the storm raging on the outside, while the rain, driven by the gusts of wind, beat fiercely against the windows.

"'It's going to be a bad run, Frank,' Jim said. 'I wish we were in S——, safe and sound.'

"I laughed. 'What makes you feel so terribly glum, Jim,' I said.

"'Oh,' said he, 'I feel creepy, somehow. Seems like there's something terrible going to happen. I can feel it in my bones.'

"I laughed again. 'You got a little wet coming over, I guess, Jim,' said I. 'And the sound of the wind isn't very encouraging, that's a fact.'

"To tell the truth, I was a little nervous myself, notwithstanding my easy way of treating Jim's fears.

"Presently our train came in, long and heavy, consisting mainly of sleepers. It used to make me nervous to know that the lives of hundreds of my fellow men were in my keeping, but now I think nothing of it. That night I was nervous. What if the frightful storm had made a signalman careless, or if a rail had been loosened by the settling of the track somewhere? On these fast trains a man must rely on the vigilance of the employes, for in order to keep to time he must run at such a speed that often he cannot see a signal before he is upon it.

"But I laughed at myself for my fears as I backed down and coupled on to the train. I see nothing, and found everything in good order.

"By and by the little gong above my head clanged sharply, and with a puff and hiss of escaping steam we were off into the night and storm, rattling over junctions, past signal lights, and between long lines of carriages with a roar and a rumble, we rushed over the long iron bridge and away through the hills, waking their slumbering echoes with our shrill whistle.

"Then I pulled the throttle wide open, and the clank and roar soon settled down to a hum, for old 449 was doing her best and we were making 50 miles an hour.

"The darkness was intense, save where the headlight, an electric device, cast its funnel of light into the gloom. Jim had a big frog and kept steam up to a high pressure, so that we fairly flew past sleeping hamlets and still farmhouses.

"At our first watering station I made sure that all was working smoothly, while Jim inspected the headlight. The station master handed out the orders, which showed that the line was clear as far as our next stopping place. On we went.

"The darkness grew more intense, if possible, while the wind shrieked by. The rain became more blinding, till nothing could be distinguished in the gray mist which enveloped us.

"Suddenly through the mist and rain I saw looming right in front of us the gigantic figure of a woman wrapped in a long, black mantle, which seemed to flutter in the wind. She waved great, spectral arms about in swift, jerking movements. As I stood looking in horror, the figure vanished with a final wave of the arms.

"I was too much astonished and stupefied even to make a movement of my hand toward the throttle. At that moment Jim had been bending over the fire. As he looked up he exclaimed:

"'Hallos, Frank. What's up. You look as though you had seen a ghost.'

"I did not answer. My mind was too full of the strange figure I had perceived.

"We were now nearing Red Creek, where there is a bridge over a deep stream. I felt more nervous than ever. We dashed around the curve and whizzed by the little station, which is only a mile from the bridge. As we passed I glanced at the steam gauge for an instant. A cry from Jim caused me to turn quickly toward him. He stood right in his cab, large and staring. His jaw dropped, the very picture of terror. He pointed with a shaking finger out into the darkness. I turned and looked, and then I began myself to shake. There on the metals was the same hideous figure of a woman outlined on the background of light from the engine, now motionless, now whirling in a witch dance, but all the time motioning us back.

"'Frank,' gasped Jim, but scarcely above a whisper, 'don't go over that bridge. Don't go, for heaven's sake! Don't go until you are sure it's safe.'

"I suppose I was pretty badly scared. At any rate, I put on the brake for all I was worth, and couldn't have resisted the impulse to stop the train.

"As we came to a stop I could hear the roar of the water in Rock creek just ahead. I stepped out of the cab and met the conductor coming up.

"'What's the matter? What's the matter?' he asked, impatiently.

"I felt decidedly foolish. There was no gigantic woman to be seen now. Only the engine could see more than a few feet away in the blinding storm.

"'Well,' said I, 'we're seen something. I don't know what it is—seemed like it was a great black ghost that was waving its arms and warning us not to go forward.

"The conductor looked at me curiously. 'Are you crazy, Frank,' he said. 'I should think you were. But we're so near the bridge we'll take a look at it.'

"We took our lanterns and went ahead, leaving Jim with the engine; he looked frightened to death. But I tell you, we hadn't gone five rods before we stopped in horror.

"There at our feet lay a black chasm, filled with the roar of the river, as swollen with the spring rains, it dashed down toward the lake. The bridge was washed away.

"Only a few splinters of wood and twisted iron clung to the abutment, while now, far out over the blackness, that awful black figure of a woman danced again on the thin air, relieved against the shaft of light that the headlight threw.

"It was flinging its arms about as if in wild glee. The conductor stared at the chasm and then at me.

"'Was that the thing you saw when you stopped the train?' he asked.

"'Yes.'

"'Well, it's something more than luck that saved us to-night, Frank.'

"We went back slowly to the train, feeling very queer and thankful, too, I can assure you. Several passengers had come running forward by this time. Among them was a young fellow from Chicago about 18 years old, who was smarter than the whole of us, as it turned out.

"When he was told of the woman in black he turned and looked at the locomotive headlight. Then he ran up toward it. I looked up as he did so, and I saw a peculiar spot on the glass.

"'There's your woman in black!' said the boy.

"And there it was, sure enough—that same moth miller that you see there in the frame. He was clinging to the inside of the glass. As I tapped on the glass the creature flew back and lighted on the reflector.

"That's the whole story, sir. The moth, by fluttering on the glass just in front of the illuminator, had produced a great black figure like that of a cloaked woman darting in front of us, and when he flapped his wings in his vain attempt to sail out through the glass he gave his mysterious shadow the appearance of waving the arms wildly.

"Then when he flew back out of the direct shine of the light, the figure disappeared, of course.

"We never knew just how he got in there, but no doubt he happened when Jim went to fix the light at the pumping station.

"Anyhow, he saved our lives by scaring us with that woman in black.

"So you see why I have the moth in the frame. It's to remind me of the way we were saved that night. Yes, you may call it accidental, but I call it providential."—Pearson's Weekly.

AUNT LIZZIE STUTELY.

Venerable Colored Woman Who Has Met Many Celebrities.

When Young, She Belonged to the Randolphs Who Were at the Head of the Four Hundred of Ante-Bellum Days.

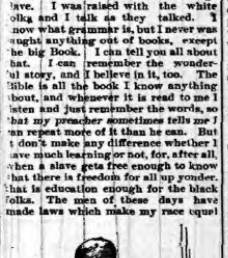
[Special Washington Letter.]

Stories of the body servants of George Washington are at last obsolete. When men and women, white or black, live beyond the age of usefulness, when their teeth disappear and their eyes grow dim; when their noses and chins hold rubicund meetings, they no longer claim to have seen and known George Washington. That test of old age has passed away with its mendacious adjuncts.

Elizabeth Stutely is very old, but she never claims to have seen Washington. She remembers the capture of Washington city by the British during the war of 1812, but she was only a little girl and remembers it mainly because it was talked about constantly for many years afterwards. Aunt Lizzie, as she is known to all her friends, does not know when she was born. She knows nothing of her birthday, but has selected the Fourth of July as her birthday, and always celebrates it from that standpoint, rather than as a national holiday. She says that some one told her when she was young that the Fourth of July was a better day than any other in the year, and she accepts it as her birthday.

SHE KNEW GEN. JACKSON.

"I belonged to the Randolphs," says Aunt Lizzie. "I was raised in the best family in Virginia, and my friends have always been white folks. I don't know how to read, but I know how to talk, for my old Mistress Brokenbrough used to make me talk right. I was a house servant, and of course I heard less of the talk of the field hands than the average slave. I was raised with the white folks, and I talk like them. I don't know what grammar is, but I never was taught anything out of books, except the big Book. I can tell you all about that. I can remember the wonderful story, and I believe in it, too. The Bible is all the book I know anything about, and whenever it is read to me I listen and just remember the words, so that my preacher sometimes tells me I can repeat more of it than he can. But it don't make any difference whether I have much learning or not, for, after all, when a slave gets free enough to know that there is freedom for all up yonder, that is education enough for the black folks. The men of these days have made laws which make my race equal with the white race, but I don't believe in those laws. God's law was that the descendants of Ham should be servants, and they are the best servants in the world."



THE BIBLE IS THE ONLY BOOK I KNOW.

That is the philosophy of a very intelligent old woman of the African race. She must be nearly 100 years old. She is growing stout, heavy, and finds it difficult to move about; but she has a wonderfully brilliant brain. She has beautiful gray kinky hair, and is as neat, tidy, cleanly and dignified as any of the white ladies with whom she was raised. She says: "One thing I learned was that it is never proper to speak ill of the dead. I was in the Lee family during the war, and I saw a great deal of the great general Robert E. Lee. If I should tell what I saw and heard and know of him, his home, it would spoil a pophular story that I learned in slavery concerning my people, and I never will. But Gen. Lee was not a perfect man. I suppose he was as good as other men who have opportunities and power to be bad; but few men are good, especially to women.

"I belonged to the Randolphs before the war," continued Aunt Lizzie, "and that is how I came to be with the servant in the family of Secretary of War John H. Eaton, whose wife was the great beauty who broke up President Jackson's cabinet. I have heard a great many wicked things read about this lady in the newspapers, but seldom heard good things read about her. She went to her grave very poor, and I was at her funeral. She was beautiful, and she was warm-hearted, too. She did the best she could in the world. Her beautiful daughter, Miss Madge, married Lieut. Randolph, of the navy, and her other daughter, Miss Virginia, married a foreigner in the diplomatic service and went to Europe to live. I never saw them again. She was a splendid harpist, a wonderful singer, and a woman of beauty in character, as well as in face and figure. People talked about her, too, but they talk about all women who are beautiful. I heard the play Hamlet once, and I remember that Hamlet told a beautiful lady in the play that no matter what she did, she could not escape calumny. That is true. Indeed it is. Generally, however, it comes from women about women. That has been my experience.

"I never had much trouble as a slave. The good negroes were well cared for; I mean all of them were better off always than since they became free. They are servants by nature, and by the Bible, and it is hard for them to get along without the help of the white folks. I was punished sometimes, but generally when I did something to deserve it. Mistress Eaton once got after me when I interfered in the punishment of one of the children, and I went and had myself locked up in jail. That was a sure way for any intelligent colored person to call attention to his or her rights.

"I knew Gen. Jackson very well. Mr. O'Neill had a fine farm way out in the country. It is now covered with the finest residences in Washington, and Connecticut avenue, the fashionable street of the northwest, runs through the old farm. There is Dupont circle, the British embassy, the Stewart castle, Blaine's mansion, the home of Senator Sawyer, and the palaces of Leiter and others who have come here with their millions. The old farmhouse is gone; but I remember it very well. There was a splendid well near the house, with an old-fashioned pump. Gen. Jackson used to ride out there on horseback, take a drink from the pump, and then sit on the veranda by the hour talking about everything that was going on.

"President Van Buren was a peculiar man. He was always very solemn, and seemed to have too much on his mind, or else that his mind wasn't big enough to carry all the things that were in it. President Polk was speaker of the house of representatives, and he was a jolly man with his white friends. He seldom noticed any of the servants. Gen. Jackson was very fond of colored people, and called me Lizzie whenever he saw me. He knew the other servants by their names, too. We all liked him. President Pierce was a handsome man, and very popular, but he sometimes got too much liquor into him, and then he was not so handsome. He was always gentlemanly and polite to everybody, and I often heard people who admired him say: 'What a pity he drinks too much.' I would like that. They said that he was a great orator and a good president.

"I saw very little of President Buchanan. He was not much of a man to go calling. I suppose he seldom called at our house, and folks said that he stayed most of the time at the white house. I only saw President Lincoln once, and that was when he was inaugurated. Soon after that I was taken to Virginia, and lived with the Lees until after the war. I was in Richmond when the Yankees came there, and it was an awful time. Everybody was crying. I have heard the awful stories of what the Yankees would do if they ever caught us. But when the Yankees came into Richmond they didn't do anything but march in and take possession. There was a great deal of excitement, but the Yankees were not bad men at all. They were simply soldiers like our poor rebel soldiers; but they had plenty to eat and good clothes to wear, while our poor rebels were ragged and hungry almost naked. I never thought the Yankees ought to be so very proud of whipping the rebels at Richmond, for our people were almost famished, while the Yankees had everything that soldiers could need.

"I never felt so bad in my life as I did when the news came that President Lincoln had been killed. I cried, and all the colored people cried. We didn't know then why we cried, but all of us felt that Mr. Lincoln was our friend, and we were looking for good times as soon as the war was all over. Gen. Grant was a great man, and we all felt that he was a friend of us; but the colored people believed that Mr. Lincoln was our best friend.

"No, I never saw Gen. Grant when he was in Virginia; but I saw him in Washington often when I was there and when he was president. He used to drive about the city with his fast horses, and he was very fond of having pretty girls with him. I think he was the last president who has gone driving about the city with pretty girls. The others all keep themselves away from the people, so that nobody knows them even by sight.

"Yes, I am growing very old. I feel that I have done my work, and that the good Lord will take care of me when I am called away. I have been a Christian for many a year, and whether free or slave, I feel that I am under the shadow of His wing, and that He will take care of me as He will my children, who will be known as His children. Somehow, in His own way, on the other shore, the nations will be changed and be equal as His children; but they are not all equal here, and they ought not to think so."

Aunt Lizzie evidently descended from one of the best tribes in Africa, for she is of superior mental fiber. There is no white blood in her veins. She is black, but her head is finely formed, and her eyes are as brilliant and expressive as the eyes of any of her elderly white friends. She belongs to the Baptist church, and is a regular attendant. But, aside from her church associations, she seeks the society of the white people, and she is evidently a favorite of the old families of Washington.

QUITE MISTAKEN.

Characters: Capt. Vivian, Evelyn Winter, and Algernon Drummond.

Scene I.—Tea Station. Scotch express just starting. Guard (opening door of carriage, in which Miss Winter is sitting alone)—Now then, sir, get in here, please, can't keep the express waiting. Capt. Vivian jumps in, in a great hurry. Train moves off, he starts and looks doubtfully at his companion.

MISS WINTER (mischievously)—I was wondering how long it would be before you became aware of my existence.

Capt. Vivian (much bewildered)—Oh! I beg your pardon, I'm sure. Awfully sorry. (Aside) Great Scott! I know her face as well as possible, and yet I can't for the life of me put a name to her.

Miss Winter (pleasantly) — I hate traveling alone; I'm so glad you got in.

Capt. Vivian (heartily) — I'm very glad, too. (Aside) If I'd the faintest glimmering of an idea who she is, I should feel a good deal happier.

Miss Winter—It's quite a long time since we met.

Capt. Vivian (with conviction) — I should rather think it must be.

Miss Winter—Not since you stayed with us last.

Capt. Vivian (aside)—This is getting pretty hot. (Aloud, reflectively) See, when was that?

Miss Winter—Last summer. What fun those theatricals were.

Capt. Vivian (laughing constrainedly)—Yes, capital fun. (Aside) It's confoundedly odd, I don't seem to remember them a bit. (Aloud) You've not been in town lately I think.

Miss Winter (distantly)—No, not just lately. (Relaxing somewhat) I met your sisters very often the last time I was there.

Capt. Vivian—No, did you really? (Aside) Now, how on earth did she manage to do that, when I don't happen to possess any. By Jove! I've got it. She must be taking me for some one else.

Miss Winter—O yes, and your sister Amy told me all about you going out to India. How soon do you start?

Capt. Vivian (in confusion)—I'm not going, after all.

Miss Winter (deeply interested)—Really! But I thought it was such a splendid appointment, and your people were so glad you'd got it?

Capt. Vivian (regretfully)—Are you quite sure you're not making a mistake? Perhaps you are thinking of some one else?

Miss Winter (positively)—O no, I'm not. I'm very good memory.

Capt. Vivian (gloomily)—Wish I had.

Miss Winter — By-the-bye, do you know, you've never asked after poor dear "Doddles?"

Capt. Vivian (aside)—Now what can "Doddles" be! (Aloud) What a horrid shame of me. How is she?

Miss Winter—O, she's pretty flourishing, thank you, but I am surprised you forgot her, you were so very devoted to her.

Capt. Vivian (helplessly)—Was I?

Miss Winter (reproachfully)—O, Mr. Ogilvie! How can you! When you sent her such a lovely present only last Christmas.

Capt. Vivian (with studied carelessness)—Do you know, I think there must be a slight misunderstanding somewhere.

Miss Winter (looking much startled)—What do you mean?

Capt. Vivian (categorically)—Well, it's about like this. I've never acted in my life—I've got no stature—I don't know who "Doddles" is—and my name isn't Ogilvie.

Miss Winter (pathetically) — But you're just like him.

Capt. Vivian (meekly)—I'm awfully sorry, but I really can't help that.

Miss Winter (with rising indignation) —But why, why didn't you tell me all this before—O, it was disgraceful of you!

Capt. Vivian (eagerly)—O, please let me explain. You see I was quite sure I knew you, and as you seemed to know me so well, that made me all the more certain. Don't you understand?

"I'M SO GLAD YOU GOT IN."

Miss Winter (desperately) — No, I don't understand at all. If you are not Mr. Ogilvie, why I've never seen you before, so you can't know me.

Capt. Vivian (despondently)—I suppose not; and yet—would this be any help? (Extricates card and hands it to her.)

Miss Winter (glances at card and shakes her head)—No, your name is quite unknown to me. But (with consolation) I see you are in the same regiment as my cousin, Algie Drummond.

Capt. Vivian (excitedly)—That's it. I remember now, it's your photograph I've seen.

Miss Winter (skeptically)—My photograph! You must be thinking of someone else, too.

Capt. Vivian (earnestly)—Oh, no; I'm sure you not. I remember quite well now. You see, your cousin's got a whole lot of your photos and I—I suppose I've noticed them.

Miss Winter—How very impertinent of Algie. He must have stolen them. I wonder what he's got?

Capt. Vivian (regretfully) — Well, there's one with a rough-haired terrier on your knee.

Miss Winter—I certainly didn't let him keep that. Why, it's the only one I've got my darling "Doddles" in!

Capt. Vivian (looking in alarm)—We can't be getting into King's Cross. We are, though, by Jove! (Turning to Miss Winter) It's awfully good of you to believe me so naturally. I didn't discover it a bit for keeping up the mistake so long, but you've no idea what a fright I was in.

Miss Winter (laughing)—I'm very sorry; I didn't know I was playing a trick on you. Thank you, that's all. Good-by.

Scene II.—Regimental Sports. Miss Winters and Alice Drummond looking on.

Miss Winter (enthusiastically)—O, well run, well run! Wasn't that splendid, Alice? I'm so glad that man won. What's his name?

Algie (airily)—Blest if I know. Takes all my time to remember my own. O, here's Vivian coming, he'll tell us. Vivian, tell us generally, didn't Jimmy of that Tommy who's just won the race?

Capt. Vivian—Parker, I think. How do you do, Miss Winter?

Algie—Oh, I forgot! You know Vivian, don't you, Eve? (Chuckling.) Give you my word I never laughed so much in my life as when I heard the muddle you two got into. I simply yelled. (Laughs immoderately.)

Miss Winter (sharply)—Well, don't yell now, please, everyone's turning round to look at us.

Algie (complacently)—Let 'em; I don't mind, bless you.

Miss Winter—No, but I do. By-the-bye, Algie (severely), I should like to know how you got hold of my photos?

Algie (quite unabashed)—Boned 'em all, last time I was at Kirkleigh. I was awfully hard up for something to stick about the place.

Miss Winter (affronted)—Well! really, if that's all you want them for, I may as well have them back; I must have the one with "Doddles."

Algie—Awfully sorry, Eve, but, you see I haven't got it, have fallen bagged it the day I brought it back.

Miss Winter (indignantly)—What a shame! Don't you know who it is?

Algie (vehemently)—Wish I did. I'd make him fork out, that's all.

Miss Winter—Perhaps you could find out, Capt. Vivian, as you know it.

Capt. Vivian (red and embarrassed)—

"DARLING!"

O yes, perhaps I might. At least—(Turns away in confusion.)

Algie—Hallo! there are the Fairies. I say Eve, I must go to them, Vivian 'll look after you. He knows lots about the sports. (Going.)

Miss Winter (hurriedly)—Stop a minute, Algie—where's mother?

Algie (cheerily)—O! she's all right; don't you worry about her—the colonel's got her in tow. (Exit.)

Miss Winter (with a sigh)—O dear! how dreadfully hot the sun is; it comes straight down upon me.

Capt. Vivian—Suppose we go over there—under those trees.

(They leave the crowd, and go off to quiet part of the ground.)

Capt. Vivian (with an effort)—Miss Winter, I took that photograph of yours.

Miss Winter—Oh, but why did you?

Capt. Vivian (drawing closer)—Why? Shall I tell you why? Because I fell in love with it at first sight, and I couldn't bear to part with it. But (with a heavy sigh) if you really want it I must give it up.

Miss Winter (nervously) — O, it doesn't matter very much.

Capt. Vivian (delightedly)—Then I may keep it? O thank you! You don't know what it is to me. (A short pause; then recklessly)—I'm not much of a hand at making speeches, but, you know, I seem to have known you so long from having seen that—that—Evelyn—I love you so much, with all my heart. Could you, do you think, learn to love me?

Miss Winter (very low)—I don't think I need learn.

Capt. Vivian (rapturously)—Darling! —Black and White.

Deeply Interested.

Few people can claim to have outwitted the late Sir James Hannen, the well-known judge. His lordship, however, was curiously "done" by a somberly-dressed juryman in his own court. In a melancholy tone the juryman claimed to be exempt from serving on the jury which had been impaneled. Sir James very sympathetically asked on what grounds he claimed exemption.

"My lord," said the applicant, "I am deeply interested in a funeral which takes place to-day, and am most anxious to follow."

"Certainly, sir; your plea is a just one," remarked his lordship.

The man departed, and the next day the judge learned that he was the undertaker.—Spare Moments.

—"Papa," said Jackey, "would you like to have me give you a perfectly beautiful Christmas present?" "Yes, indeed!" "Then you'd better give me a double my allowance, so's I'll have the money to buy it when Christmas comes."—Harper's Bazar.

INTERESTING NOTES CONCERNING THE FOOTBALL PLAYERS.

Comment on Local Players and What Their Chances Are With the Teams That They Are Matched to Play Against.

The South End Athletic Club's eleven defeated the Crescent Juniors Saturday afternoon on the Herring's gridiron by the score of 8 to 4. A. P. Odam is the captain of the South Ends, and V. W. Nash, Jr., is captain of the Crescent Juniors.

Wyckoff, one of Westfield's guards, Saturday, was a special importation from Rutgers College for the Plainfield game. He has been playing on the Rutgers "Varsity" eleven, but he didn't astonish anyone by his wonderful playing. The odds against him were too great.

A very important meeting of the Y. M. C. A. eleven will be held on Friday evening at the Cycle Academy when Coach Waring will introduce the new plans for the return Westfield game. It is very important that all candidates for the team should be present at that time.

The team that will probably represent the business men's gymnasium class in their match with the regular Y. M. C. A. team Saturday evening will probably consist of John H. Doane and Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, forwards; Rev. H. J. Johnston, centre; George Fuller and Prof. Henry M. Maxson, guards.

Two members of the Plainfield team, Thomas U. Smith and Fred H. Freeman, were invited by Captain Masterson, of the New Jersey Athletic Club's eleven, to play the end positions for that eleven next Saturday in the game with the New York University. Smith's accident will effectually bar him from playing, and Freeman will probably not go alone.

The Plainfield Y. M. C. A. eleven will not play on Saturday, that is decided. The next game will be on Election Day, which comes on Tuesday of next week, and will be against the Rutgers "Scrubs." The game will be played on the Martine gridiron out Park avenue and will be played in the morning. On Saturday almost the entire team expect to go to Westfield and see their victims of last Saturday meet the team from the Passaic High School.

Crooks, who played fullback for Westfield Saturday, is not a full fledged Westfielder by any means. He comes from Orange and has been playing on the Montclair Athletic Club eleven. Westfield secured him, however, for the San Remo and Plainfield games, as their old fullback, Voight, is now playing with a Connecticut team. He wanted to play in Plainfield in the early part of the season, but the local management had decided to make it a strictly Plainfield team, and Voight's offer was refused.

THE "G. O. P'S LAST SHOT.

Roswell G. Horr to Speak Next Monday Evening.

The Republicans of this city will continue the campaign up the very eve of the election. The young and progressive members of the Young Men's Republican Club will take charge of the last shot to be fired before the real contest on Election Day. On Monday night, under the auspices of the above club, a mass meeting will be held at Music Hall, when Plainfield's well known citizen, Congressman Roswell G. Horr, who has been on the stump for McKinley and Hobart, will speak. He is known to Plainfield audiences, and it is probable that Music Hall will be packed that evening with those who wish to hear the bright remarks of their fellow townsman. There will be no other Republican mass meeting before election.

A Course of Five Lectures.

The Monday Afternoon Club will give a course of five lectures during the season of 1896-'97, the first taking place Monday, November 2d, when Prof. George McLean Harper, of Princeton University, will have for his subject "The Golden Age of the Drama" (Corneille, Racine, Moliere); December 14th, E. C. Perkins will lecture on "The Man With the Iron Mask;" January 4th, "Montesquieu, the French Political Seer," will be the subject of discourse by Prof. Woodrow Wilson, of Princeton University; Prof. A. M. Wheeler, of Yale University, will give a lecture on "Rousseau, Voltaire and Their Influence;" May 17th, the course will be finished by Louis F. Pilcher, of the University of Pennsylvania, on "French Architecture." These lectures will take place in the Casino on the above dates and desiring to put them within the reach of all the admission has been fixed at the sum of 25 cents each.

Like Plainfield's Beds.

City Engineer Brown, of Danbury, Conn., visited Plainfield today with Engineer Farquhar to inspect the city farm and disposal beds. Danbury has a sewer system, accommodating some 10,000 persons, draining into the river. After being sued repeatedly for polluting the stream, the city is now ordered to discontinue emptying into the river before next May, and a tract of 200 acres has been purchased for disposal beds, which are now being constructed.

The South End Athletic Club defeated the Crescent Juniors by a score of 8 to 0 yesterday.

Miss Thompson, of Connecticut, is visiting Mrs. E. Slape, of West Front street.

Captain "Ted" Freeman's hair came very near turning grey, and all because of Alex. Milne, or "Shorty," as he has been nicknamed on account of his six feet and three and an eighth inches of bone and muscle. Milne will not play in Plainfield on Election Day, and when he remarked on that fact there was general consternation, for Milne is one of the most valuable men on the team. He promised long before he joined the team that he would play on the Pacific Athletic Club eleven in Brooklyn on that date. The color of Freeman's hair was saved, however, when it was discovered that Harry Rand, Plainfield's last year's centre, would be able to show up on the gridiron on Election Day, so Rand will try his hand at guard on that day.

A Birthday Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter A. VanFleet, of East Third street, gave their daughter, Miss May VanFleet, a pleasant birthday party last evening. The time was most enjoyably passed in playing cards and games, while dancing was not the least of the pleasures. Those present were the Misses Lottie Meeserschith, Mabelle Force, Sadie Holmes, Libbie Joseph, May La Forge, Margaret Cordell and Misses Saxton; Charles Doliver, Fred Ross, Ray Carroll, Arthur Mills, Charles Buell and Charles Lyons.

TRIALS OF AN EDITOR.

CRANFORD CHRONICLE MAN SUDDENLY LOSES HIS MOTIVE POWER.

Had a Gas Engine Which Bothered Other Tenants and the Landlord Took Summary Action—Now in the Court.

J. Alfred Potter, editor and proprietor of the Cranford Chronicle, met with a a peculiar experience at his place of business last Friday, and temporarily he was obliged to stop his machinery. There is an amusing, though serious, side to the difficulty, and it has been ventilated in Justice Newcorn's court.

Mr. Potter rents a building in Cranford which is owned by Mr. Teet, of Elizabeth. Recently the former purchased a gas engine to run his presses, as the increase in his business required a speedy motive power. Of course, it was necessary to have an exhaust pipe and when the engine was at work there was a certain amount of noise which seemed to annoy other tenants in the building. The disconcerted ones complained to Mr. Teet, and he took the matter in his own hands. On Friday last he instructed Mr. Kirby, a Cranford plumber, to go to the building and remove the pipe which was causing so much trouble. Mr. Kirby selected a convenient time, which happened to be Friday noon, while the employes were home to dinner. He removed the objectionable pipe and plastered the opening through which it projected.

The work was accomplished in short order and when the men returned to work after their dinner hour they learned what had been done. Mr. Potter was soon acquainted with the state of affairs and immediately took steps to bring his landlord to justice. He brought action against Kirby, in Justice Newcorn's court, for tampering with his machinery, and the case came up yesterday afternoon. The latter waived examination and was held in $50 bonds to await the action of the Grand Jury. In the meantime Mr. Potter is obliged to use hand and foot power to run his presses until the case is settled.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIX. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1896. NO. 42

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

GREAT REPUBLICAN VICTORY!

ALL THEIR CANDIDATES SWEPT INTO OFFICE WITH MAJORITIES NOT EXPECTED BY ANY.

Billy Kirk Runs Two Hundred Ahead of His Ticket in His Own Home—Senator Voorhees Falls a Little Behind in Plainfield, While Ernest R. Ackerman Forges Ahead—The Vote by the Districts in this City and the Borough and Different Townships

The Republicans made a clean sweep of everything in Plainfield and Union county Tuesday with majorities greater than has ever been known before, or even expected this year. William T. Kirk, who has been a favorite for Sheriff, goes into office with 1,516 majority from his own home and a majority of over 4,000 in the county. Plainfield's other candidate on the Republican ticket, William R. Codington, for Assemblyman, is re-elected by an immense majority, though he was cut somewhat in the various wards in this city, but Ernest R. Ackerman, for Presidential Elector, received a large complimentary vote all through the county, and especially in this city, and his plurality considerably exceeds those of the other Electors.

In Somerset county Charles A. Reed was elected Senator by a handsome majority, though it was thought that he would have a hard pull. His own town, North Plainfield, gave him a big vote.

The results in this city and borough is as follows:

KIRK CUT IN ELIZABETH.

Has 1,200 Behind the Head of the Ticket at the County Seat.

In every town in the county the Republicans made great gains. In Elizabeth Kirk's majority was 330, while Voorhees and the head of the ticket was 1,000. Though many Democrats, it is said, voted for Kirk in Elizabeth, their support was more than offset by the large number of Republicans who bolted him and supported Sheppard.

Kirk ran well in all other towns of the county, and the loss of 1,300 in Elizabeth was made up so that he only ran behind his ticket about 500 votes on the general result. His majority in the county will be between 4,000 and 4,500, while the rest of the ticket will have close to 5,000.

In Rahway the Republican majority will be 500. Summit gives a majority of 100, while Cranford shows up with 210 for the Presidential ticket and about 290 for the county ticket. Roselle gave 215 majority and Westfield about 350, while the rest of the towns swelled the figures close up to the 5,000.

Death of Richard Merritt.

The death of Richard Merritt, at one time a resident of this city, occurred on Monday at Trenton after an illness lasting seven years. Mr. Merrit was born in 1869 he came with his parents to Plainfield where he lived until taken ill seven years ago. He held the office of city clerk for one year. Politically he was a staunch Democrat and at one time was identified with a tariff reform club in this city. He formerly represented the Wrought Iron Bridge Company of Canton Ohio. The funeral services will be held from the house of his father on Park avenue this afternoon at 3:30.

A Little Tot Missing.

Miss Richardson, 10 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richards of Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, who are stopping in Plainfield, was lost while out walking with her father. Mrs. Richards met Roundsmen Mattox and informed him of her daughters absence and the officer found the little girl on West Front street, near Somerset street. She was asking for her parents, and was returned to them by the officer.

Grand Officers Praise Sir Knights.

The grand officers of the New Jersey Commandery of Knight Templars visited Trinity Commandery, No. 17 Monday night for the annual inspection. The local sir knights were highly complimented on their work which the grand officers pronounced to be the best in the State. A grand banquet and speeches followed.

Pride and Prejudice in Tableaux.

The tableaux to be given Monday evening next in Crescent avenue chapel are taken from that most charming of Jane Austen's novels, "Pride and Prejudice." The book was written in 1796 when Miss Austen was barely twenty-one. The costumes are quaint and the characters are depicted in a most fascinating manner.

Scalded With Coffee.

F. B. Stevens, of Park avenue, accidentally upset a pot of boiling coffee over his foot and ankle Tuesday. He was severely burned by the hot liquid.

SCRUBS WENT DOWN EASY.

Y. M. C. A. Football Boys Gain Another Signal Victory.

Again the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. football team had no difficulty in defeating their opponents on the gridiron and this time it was the far famed college boys from Rutgers that met defeat. It was not the "varsity team but the "scrubs" that played all, through it is said that the latter players are able to hold their own with the first team. It was very evident that they couldn't do anything with the Plainfield boys although they were considerably heavier. The result was 26 to 0 in favor of Plainfield.

The teams lined up as follows:

PLAINFIELD Y. M. C. A.		SCRUBS.
Sorrell	right end	Dellil
Williams	right tackle	Black
Brown	right guard	Haines
Cumming	centre	Smith
Corwin, McClure	left guard	Cadlum
Lovell	left tackle	Candleback
Peck	left end	Harrington
Freeman, (capt.)	quarter back	Morrison
Dupee	right half back	Hesch
Cathcart	left half back	Case
Darling	full back	Guthrie, (capt.)

Touchdowns, Lovell 2; Cathcart 1; Darling 1. Referee, Frank Haines, Esq. Umpire, A. Hammonds, of the New Jersey Athletic Club.

Plainfield had the eastern goal at Rutgers the kickoff. Dupee punted on the first play and then Guthrie's kick was blocked. The ball traveled down the field rapidly and Lovell went through tackle for a touchdown. He kicked the goal; score, Plainfield 6; Rutgers, 0.

Dupee again punted and Serrell tackled Guthrie so heavily that he dropped the ball and Peck fell on it. On the second play, Cathcart circled right and for 20 yards and a touchdown. Lovell kicked the goal; score, Plainfield, 12; Rutgers 0.

On the first play Peck ran forty-five yards assisted by splendid interferance especially from Dupee, who managed to upset three men. Several fumbles and then Darling made a touchdown around right end. Lovell kicked the goal score, Plainfield, 18; Rutgers, 0.

Another pretty punt by Dupee and then after several plays Lovell crossed the line on a tackle play and scored a touchdown. He missed the goal; score, Plainfield, 22; Rutgers, 0.

In the second half McClure was substituted for Lewis at guard. Rutgers braced up and her superior weight made her superior centre rushes effective. Plainfield gradually worked the ball down to Rutgers first yard line only to lose it on four downs. Heath ran twenty-five yards and the ball was pushed to Plainfield's twenty-five yard line when the later team took it. Dupee ran around left end for 30 yards and then Freeman carried the ball fifty-five yards on a quarter back trick crossing the goal line. The referee made him come back claiming Cuming was off side. Disinterested spectators thought the decision unfair. Dupee gained twenty-five yards on the next play and Freeman was pushed over the line for a touchdown. Lovell missed the goal; score, Plainfield, 26; Rutgers, 0. Time was then called.

Brief Council Meeting.

The City Council convened Monday night at 11:25 after the mass meeting which was held in the Cycle Academy. There were present Councilmen Barrows, Fisk, Dumont, Stebbins, Westphal and President See. On a motion the reading of the minutes and regular order of business was suspended and the claims were presented and ordered paid. Mr. Dumont offered a resolution that the notes, $4,000 general fund and $1,000 fire fund, be renewed and it was so ordered. The council then adjourned to meet Monday evening, November 9th, at 8 o'clock.

VICTORY, THEN CAME FUN

MARCHING AND SHOUTING REPUBLICANS CELEBRATE.

As Soon as the Result Was Known, Yells Rent the Air and Bonfires Illuminated the Heavens—A Parade Held

What a night it was! Not for many years has Plainfield seen such an election night, for, when bulletin after bulletin showed that McKinley was rolling up big pluralites all through the country, the many watchers became an army of cheering, dancing men, wild with enthusiasm over the then certain victory, and the quiet city of Plainfield was stirred as it has not been before.

Early in the evening the crowd began to gather in front of the Republican Association rooms on East Front street to watch the returns, which, with the aid of a stereopticon, were exhibited on a sheet hung on the front of the buildings opposite. Dispatches were received over the wires of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, and the crowd watched with wild enthusiasm. The sidewalk was soon crowded and likewise the street, so that the trolley cars had a hard time to get through.

The Democratic headquarters were located in the old Addis store, and a special wire, arranged by the Postal Telegraph Company, supplied the bulletins. The Crescent Wheelmen kept open house all night for the members and their friends. They had a private wire from the Postal Telegraph Company and kept the guests posted as to the election. An excellent lunch was served to all who cared to partake, and everything possible was done to give everybody a good time. The house committee, whose efforts were so successful, consisted of Messrs. Demarest, Pearson, Hanna, Coward and Tilsworth. Returns were also received by telegraph at the Park Club and the Union County Country Club, and many heard them at these places. Bulletins were read at the Jersey Cycle Academy and Music Hall.

The greatest crowd, however, assembled in front of the Republican rooms.

When the returns showed at about 12 o'clock that McKinley was certainly elected, the enthusiasm of the "Sound Money" men in the crowd began to bubble over and a wild scene followed. Cheer followed cheer, whistles, tin horns and bells added to the din and, at last, the band and drum corps were aroused and lent their aid. Colored fire illuminated the scene and then in different parts of the city huge bonfires blazed up. A gigantic one was started in Watchung Park, so large that the sky was illuminated and the North Plainfield fire department turned out thinking it was a fire.

Three parades of hurrahing, shouting men started in different directions, each headed by a band or drum corps, and tramped over the quiet city streets with the brilliant accompaniment of fireworks and red fire. Fresh returns aroused the enthusiasm still more and the cheers grew louder and shriller.

A big bonfire was started in front of the Crescent Wheelmen's headquarters and some of the more enthusiastic executed a war-dance by the light of it. The Independent Fife and Drum Corps marched by. There was cheering for McKinley, for Kirk, for Coddington and all the rest of the ticket. Someone apied James E. Martine coming down the street. There was a rush and the delighted Republicans carried him off to the Crescent Wheelmen's clubhouse where he was feasted in honor of McKinley. There were shouts of "speech," but he did not respond. The crowd gave three cheers for him with a will and then returned to cheer for McKinley.

The fire burned low and the center of the excitement returned to East Front street, where news of McKinley's sweep were being received, and there the crowd remained until 3 o'clock this morning when most of the celebrators went to their homes. All through the night, however, cheers could be heard about the city for the Republican candidates. Some of the midnight watchers had partaken too freely and were inclined to be noisy, but everybody was good-natured and no arrests were made.

The telephone exchange was a busy place all night. The best and most complete returns were received there and instantly transmitted to 180 subscribers in this city, besides furnishing bulletins to the Republican Associations in this city, Westfield, Bound Brook and Somerville. Manager Runyon had everything all prepared for the rush and the service was excellent.

SOME SCHOOL MATTERS

BOARD OF EDUCATION HOLD THEIR MONTHLY MEETING.

Sanitary Arrangements in the New Lincoln School Building Completed—An Applicant for Musical Director.

The City Board of Education met Tuesday evening in the High School building, and the members present were President J. B. Probasco and Messrs. Abbott, Jenkins, Lovell and Lounsbury.

Contractor Carr, in a communication, asked the Board for a payment of $250, on account of his contract, and it was ordered paid without a dissenting vote.

Two old claims of A. M. Griffen and George White were ordered paid when approved. Collector Johnson reported his recent collections for school purposes as $2,360.96.

Mr. Lounsbury, from the building committee, reported that the sanitary arrangements in the Bryant School building had been completed, and that in the new Lincoln building water pipes will be put in before freezing weather sets in. Bids for wiring have been received, but no definite action was taken. The report was accepted. The report also stated that curbing and flagging was at this time very essential, and it was left at the discretion of the building committee to have the work done as soon as the bids are all in.

It was also reported that $411 had been received and deposited to the credit of the Board of Education, from pupils residing in Dunellen, Bound Brook, Somerville and Roselle. Here the question was asked by a member of the Board why the pupils came here from Roselle, when Elizabeth was much nearer, and it was stated that the school facilities were much better here.

John T. Odam, in a communication to the Board, asked for the appointment to the janitorship of the new school building, stating that he was capable and willing to keep the slate roofing in repair and also to do what painting was necessary. The communication was filed.

C. L. Lewis communicated with the Board through the superintendent agreeing to act as musical director for the balance of the school year for $500. This is at the ratio of $625 for the year, but while the pay is a little more, the time is likewise increased. The communication was received and its recommendation accepted.

Superintendent Maxson brought up the matter of purchasing new maps for use in the school. He submitted for inspection a cardboard map about 2x3 feet in dimensions, which had done service in the schools for the past twenty years. The action of the finance committee in borrowing $1,000 at a recent meeting, in anticipation of taxes, was ratified by the Board, Supt. Maxson's report was referred to the president and secretary, without reading, and it was decided to have 2,000 copies printed and distributed.

GAY TIME HALLOWE'EN.

YOUTHFUL PRANKS AND PARTIES MADE UP THE FESTIVITIES.

While There Were Some Tricks That Were Aggravating to the Staid Citizen, Social Gatherings Marked the Celebration.

Youthful pranks and festivities made gay the night of Hallowe'en. Gates, horse blocks, cabbage and other things not securely fastened to their moorings seemed to take wings of flight and suddenly disappear from their proper place to turn up a few minutes later in sequestered nooks where the owners exploded unpublishable invectives in the endeavor to regain possession of them and juvenile forms slunk off in the darkness of the night to meet companions and laugh over their fun. Much of the festivities, however, were in the form of less aggravating parties, and among them were the following:

Among the pleasant Hallowe'en parties, on Saturday evening, was one given by Miss Florence Hawkins, of LaGrande avenue. The affair was very informal, and games furnished the chief amusement, after which refreshments were served. Those present were: Miss Mabel Winton, of Hackensack; Miss Genelveve R. Hoyt, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Anthony, Mrs. Hawkins, Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Miss Elizabeth Dunn, Miss Florence Hawkins, Miss Emma Fish, Miss Jennie Jeffers, Miss Bonnell, Joseph M. Hawkins, Herbert Bonnell, of Plainfield.

There was no end of fun at the celebration of Hallowe'en at the home of Miss Bertha Thorn, of Craig place. The hall and parlors were lighted with jack o'-lanterns and Hallowe'en games kept the guests busy most of the evening. There was bobbing for apples, apple races, and sundry other games which were supposed to reveal the matrimonial prospects of the guests. As the evening advanced they tried the exciting experiment of running around the block with a mouthful of water. While this was being tried, Miss Mary Buckle stepped off the curb and sprained her ankle. She was assisted to Miss Thorn's home and Dr. Tomlinson summoned. When it was ascertained that the injury was slight, the fun was continued. A dainty lunch was served in the dining room and then the party returned to the parlors to tell stories by firelight, where Willard Case, a cousin of the hostess, showed his capabilities as an entertainer.

Hallowe'en was delightfully remembered at the home of Miss Edith L. Burt, of West Seventh street, when a party of her friends gathered and had a very pleasant evening. Games were played, various Hallowe'en tricks tried, and stories told. The party was an informal one and the guests made candy and roasted chestnuts and altogether had a most delightful time. A touch of excitement was added when the bicycles of two of the young men were discovered to be missing. Ghosts and thieves were both suggested, but as the missing wheels were found on top of a hedge some distance away it was decided that either the wheels had become tired of waiting for their owners and started home, or else some Hallowe'en jokers had been around. The wheels had nothing to say. Dainty refreshments were served toward the close of the evening, and at midnight the gay party departed. Among those who were present were the Misses Edith L. Pruden, Florence R. Beal, Louise Egan, Amy Burt, Maude French, Edna French and Carrie West, of Orange; and Charles Randolph, Allan Taylor, Raymond A. McGee, of Yale College; George A. Horne, of Lehigh University, and Everett J. Peck.

The "Seven Wonders" have done many wonderful things, but they eclipsed all previous efforts Saturday night when they held a Hallowe'en party at the home of Miss Bessie Baldwin, of Willow avenue. The hostess and the charming president of this delightful club received the guests and then followed an evening full of pleasure and fun. The "Seven Wonders," and by the way, there are nine of them, are a delightful set and very pleasant entertainers. Games were played and part of the evening was spent in dancing. Some of the guests prefered a tete-a-tete in some corner with one of the fair members of the entertaining club while others played all sorts of Hallowe'en tricks on each other. Refreshments, as dainty as the entertainers, were served and then the guests gathered in front of the spacious open fireplace in the back parlor and, by the light of the burning coals, told ghost stories. Then they sang, and roasted chestnuts and ate marsh-mellows at the same time and, at last, bid goodnight to their hostess and by the light of the bright stars overhead, went homeward to dream of the "Seven Wonders" and their Hallowe'en party.

Among those present were the "Seven Wonders," who are the Misses Evelyn M. Lewis, Bessie Baldwin, Mary E. Collier, Bessy Fitz Randolph, Eva Benton, Mabelle Smith, Clara Long, Lillian T. Glen and Katherine Nevius, and Miss Elsie Smith, Miss Eleanor Williams, Miss Bloomer, of New York; Miss Edith Colton, of Brooklyn; Miss Margaret Cave and Messrs. Nathan Lewis, McCrayer, William W. Coriell, Brereton Platt, Fred Bonny, George Snediker, Guernsey Nevius, Charles Hazeltine, Lindley Hillman, Walter H. Serrell, George Proctor Smith, Wilbur F. Cornwell, Robert Green, of Newton, L. I.; Eaton's, of Elizabeth, and Clark, of Brooklyn.

There was a great congregation of young folks at Percy Western's house in Washington Park on Saturday evening to celebrate Hallowe'en and a great time time they had, too, with games, dances and "snap dragon. Juna Tolles, Blanche Heidelolf, Clara Buckle, Inez Tolles, Jennie DeCamp, Jessie Stikes, Carrie Pangborn, Willie Hepburn, Irving Yerkes, Fred Martin, George Conover and Ed. Suffern were there, and so was the ice cream, cake, candy and all the other accessories to such occasions. It was near 11 o'clock when the gay party faced the dangers of the "flour dusters" and "bean throwers" and departed for their homes.

A few friends gathered at the home of Miss Cora Richardson, of East Sixth street, Saturday and participated in the festivities of Hallowe'en. All of the latest games were played and everyone thoroughly enjoyed the event. Those present were the Misses Richardson, Messerschmith, Force, Hayes, Randolph, Lunger and Giles, and Messrs. Ernest Mallard, William DeMeza, John DeMeza, Charles Hayes, Fred Phillips, Fred Batson, William Moore, John Steiner and Bert Steiner, of Plainfield, and Miss Freeman, of Jersey City.

Bryan G. Harman, of West Eight street, entertained a number of his friends on Saturday evening. They went to see Krieger, the magician, who gave an entertainment at the Crescent Avenue Church, and then returned to the house to spend most of the evening in dancing.

ROTATION IN OFFICE.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall Reads a Paper to the Federated Club Women.

The first paper read Friday at the State Federation of Clubs at Jersey City was that by Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, whose subject was "Rotation and Promotion in Office." Mrs. Hall's style of delivery was impressive, and the women liked her subject so well that she was warmly applauded. In part, she said:

"We all believe in rotation in office in women's clubs—that is, almost all of us do. It is one of our shibboleths, and the reasons for it are not hard to seek. The chief reason, no doubt, is derived from the unwritten law, whereby a President of the United States is eligible to office for two successive terms. We feel we are safe in following the footsteps of the revered Father of the Country. The advantages of rotation in office are familiar to all of you. The new broom sweeps clean, and the new officers bring in new life and vigor, new methods, fresh ways of thought, plenty of hope and enthusiasm. With rotation in office, a club does or should avoid setting into ruts, and does not grow sleepy and conservative."

Mrs. Hall added that another advantage of rotation in office is that if it is a good thing to hold as many as possible should enjoy this good.

The election of officers took place in the afternoon when Miss Cecelia Gaines, of Jersey City, was elected President and Mrs. Florence Howe Hall was made one of the Vice-Presidents.

BIRTHDAY SOCIABLE.

Pennies Contributed According to the Age of the Giver.

A novel and interesting entertainment was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church, in Vincent chapel Friday evening, and the arrangements were most successfully carried out in every detail. The entertainment was styled a birthday sociable, and each one present was requested to contribute to the ladies' fund a penny for each year of their age. The contributions were placed in attractive little bags, and as each month, designating the month in the year in which the contributors were born, was announced, the following young ladies responded with appropriate and well-chosen words: January, Miss Edna M. Harris; February, Miss Elizabeth Day; March, Miss Ida Woolston; April, Miss Eva Jenkins; May, Miss Lucie Davis; June, Miss Elsie Horne; July, Miss Edna French; August, Miss Madge Barnes; September, Miss Alice Jenkins; October, Miss Cora Shepherd; November, Miss Lizzie Stafford; December, Miss Susie Davies.

Henry McGee officiated as master of ceremonies, and Miss Adelaide Jackson gave several of her most pleasing recitations. Walter McGee also contributed to the evening's enjoyment with a recitation, after which chocolate and wafers were served by the ladies. The platform was prettily adorned with autumn foliage.

VARIOUS SPORTS.

The Park Club will enter the Journal League this year and some great bowling may be expected. The league has changed from ten men to five men teams this year, and a meeting will be held this evening in Elizabeth to arrange a schedule.

The New Jersey Athletic Club has decided to place an association team upon the gridiron this fall. The team is made up principally of the cricketers of the club. Among them are several who have played on the prominent teams of England. The season will be opened on Election Day, when the New Jerseys will meet a team from the Cosmopolitans of New York.

A large proportion of the members of the golf club, can only play the game on Saturday afternoons and on holidays, in order that the golf course may be not overcrowded on these days. The trustees, at a meeting held on Wednesday last, adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved that only members of the club, and ladies of their families over seventeen years of age, and non-resident guests, shall be privileged to use the golf course on holidays, and on the afternoons of Saturdays.

Among the principal games played this afternoon were the following: Yale against West Point, at West Point; Harvard against Carlisle Indians, at Cambridge; Princeton against Cornell, at Princeton; Montclair Athletic Club against San Remo Football Club, at Montclair; New York University against New Jersey Athletic Club, at Bergen Point; Rutger against Annapolis, at Annapolis; Trinity against Amherst, at Amherst; Tufts against Wesleyan, at Middletown; Staten Island Cricket Club against Newark Field Club, at Livingston; Irving Club against Yale Freshmen, at Eastern Park.

Many of the business men who reside in this city, but do business in New York will parade with their respective associations, many of whom have never taken part in a political demonstration before. The local business men will be represented by a company of sixteen men commanded by H. L. Van Emburgh, who will march with the Jewelers' McKinley and Hobart Club. Those that expect to join in this party are John E. Petrie, H. R. Ayres, J. A. Green, Herbert Schutt, J. Scranton, Bert Mundy, Frank Clarkson, Alfred Baker, Bedj. Levere, Clifford Miller, William Addis, H. Kesselring, Frank VanWinkle, Charles Howard. They began marching at 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. Tobin's Position.

A Daily Press representative interviewed George J. Tobin regarding his position as a resident of this county and being a legal member of the Grand Jury. Mr. Tobin said his position was all right, that he had seen Sheriff Kyte, who had given him assurances that this position was well sustained. "If there had been any question of legality" he said, "I would not have served, for it would not only have been perjury, but I was the loser every day financially while I served. Again, there are twenty four members of the Grand Jury and it only requires thirteen to convict or acquit, and my vote could be thrown out without affecting the work of the jury."

How to Prevent Croup.

SOME READING THAT WILL PROVE INTERESTING TO YOUNG MOTHERS. HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THE DISEASE.

Croup is a terror to young mothers and to post them concerning the cause first symptoms and treatment is the object of this item. The origin of croup is a common cold. Children who are subject to it take cold very easily and croup is almost sure to follow. The first symptom is hoarseness; this usually followed by a peculiar rough cough, which is easily recognized and will never be forgotten by one who has heard it. The time to act is when the child first becomes hoarse. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is freely given all tendency to croup will soon disappear. Even after the croupy cough has developed it will prevent the attack. There is no danger in giving this remedy for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Arm strong, druggist.

HIS CHASE REWARDED.

OFFICER TOTTEN HAS ONE OF THE BROWN BROTHERS FINED.

Edmund, It Was Charged, Helped William to Escape by Driving His Horse Fast and Leaving the Cop in the Rear.

The story of Patrolman Totten's famous chase of a colored offender several weeks ago was recalled in the city court Saturday when Edmund Brown, brother of the escaped William Brown, was brought up for trial on two charges, one for aiding and abetting in the escape of his brother, and the other of driving faster than an ordinary gait. Both charges were made by Totten, and Brown pleaded not guilty on both. Mr. Swackhamer was retained as his lawyer and ex-Councilman W. L. Hetfield appeared for the city in the absence of Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh.

Totten told his story in a straightforward manner of how he pursued the fleeing Brown to East Ninth street, where the latter jumped into the wagon with his brother, the one on trial, and was hurried along as fast as the horse could go, while Totton sprinted away on foot, and it was this brief rest, combined with his skill at fence jumping, that resulted in his escape.

The defence protested that Edmund didn't do anything. His brother, it was claimed, climbed into the wagon, seized the reins, and trotted the horse down the street, and that Edmund did not assist in the slightest but sat quietly by and merely told his brother that the officer was in pursuit. A number of witnesses were brought forward showing the excellent character of the accused and his high standing in the community. Mr. Swackhamer made an eloquent appeal for him.

Mr. Hetfield claimed that if Edmund Brown had done as he should he would have stopped the horse and that the evidence showed very plainly that he was guilty of both charges. The Judge declared him guilty on both charges and after stating that the officers must be supported in doing their duty he fined him $8 in assisting his brother to escape and $5 for driving his horse faster than an ordinary gait.

STOPPED THE MESSENGERS.

Package Expressmen Prevented From Using Passenger Trains for Business.

As outlined in The Daily Press the first of the week, the Central Railroad detectives have taken their first step towards compelling the package expressmen to stop using the passengers trains for the transaction of their business. Thursday last, the Somerville and Elizabeth messengers were stopped in the Jersey City station and warned not to board the trains with the bundles, which they carried. The messengers returned to the office of the United States Express Company and there had the packages shipped to their respective towns. Whitney Frasee, the Plainfield messenger, was permitted to board a passenger train with a few small packages last night without interference, though he ships most of the packages by freight. The railroad company will, however, take the same proceedings against Frazee that they have against the other messengers.

A YEAR OVER A DECADE.

TRINITY'S ENDEAVORERS OBSERVE THEIR ELEVENTH ANNIVERSARY.

Large Number of Young Christians Present to Enjoy the Special Services That Marked the Happy Celebration.

Eleven years ago a small band of Christian workers in the Trinity Reformed church gathered together and formed a Christian Endeavor society, the sixth to be formed in the state. Now, it is a flourishing society and among the leading ones in the state. It was the eleventh anniversary that was celebrated Friday night in the church and a very interesting service it proved to be.

Fred Willett, president of the society, presided and the singing was led by a quartette choir composed of Mrs. H. E. Rider, Miss Lizzie Dunn, Robt. M. Clark and Horace J. Martin. The meeting opened with several hymns and then President Willett read the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians and led in earnest prayer. Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph. D., was expected to give the address of welcome, but in his absence E. E. Anthony welcomed the visitors with a few earnest words. He referred to the grand address of welcome given by Mr. Smith at the Washington '96 convention and suggested the same thoughts then mentioned, welcome, worship and work.

The work of the society during the past year was told in a very interesting report made by Miss Cora E. Gardner. In the past year twenty-eight names had been added to the roll and eleven dropped for various causes. The total enrollment is now 126 active and 18 associate members. The average attendance for the forty-eight meetings held during the year was 86. The varied work of the different committees was briefly noted.

The missionary committee collected $56.37, $39.92 was contributed to foreign and home missions and $10 to the church building fund. The junior society has now entered upon its seventh year. Many members have graduated to the senior society and four have joined the church. $22.50 was given to domestic missions and $16.50 to foreign. The total enrollment is now 65, and the average attendance 44. Then the report of the treasurer, Elmer S. Garretson, was read by Edgard Shepard. The total receipts were $79.61, and the disbursements $69.10, leaving a balance there of $26.80. Mr. Anthony announced that $178 had been raised by the society toward the convention expenses and that the society was the first to contribute more than its quota. And the extra amount was the largest of any.

After another hymn, the ushers took up the collection while a well rendered duet was sung by Mrs. H. E. Rider and Robert M. Clark.

Rev. Titus B. Davis, of Bound Brook, was then introduced and made a short address. He congratulated the society on having reached its eleventh anniversary and on its past history. It was the first society in the state to be formed, he said, and was one of the first three hundred societies of the world while to-day of its members were of the first ten thousand members of the society. It has one of the largest memberships and has accomplished a grand work not only at home but in the missionary field.

A DRUNKEN MAN AND A RASH YOUTH TAKE WHEELS NOT THEIR OWN.

Bicycles Recovered, Culprits Arrested and Arraigned in Court to Explain Their Strange Actions.

Fred Fromkroth, a sixteen-year old boy living at Mountainside, has been placed under $200 bail bonds to appear and answer the charge of stealing a bicycle from Harry Ball of that place, last Sunday.

Ball on that day attended afternoon service in the Mountainside chapel, leaving his bicycle on the front porch as had been his custom. When services were over and Ball went to look for his wheel, it was missing. He sought the aid of Constable Holmes, of Mountainside, and together they made a long search which ended successfully by their discovering the stolen wheel in the possession of Fromkroth. The latter had removed the name plate evidently thinking that this would serve to cover up his crime.

He was arrested and Justice Perrine held him in $400 bail to appear for trial.

An overabundance of liquor had had very serious results for Albert Kruger last Thursday for, in his dazed condition, he took a sudden fondness for a wheel belonging to Sigmund Frucht and decided that he wanted it, no matter what the consequences were. Kruger, who is a colored man, came down town last evening and, after indulging very freely, walked along West Front street and past the bicycle store of Sigmund Frucht. A wheel was standing in front of the store and Kruger, Frucht claims, picked it up and walked down the street with it. Frucht ran after him and seized him and the wheel. He yelled for an officer and had Kruger arrested and locked up. He was going to have Kruger held for the Grand Jury but, as the liquor was clearly to blame for the trouble, Kruger was held on a charge of being drunk and disorderly.

GILDED PALACE OF SIN.

LIVELY TIME IN COURT OVER BOROUGH LICENSE APPLICATIONS.

S. S. Swackhamer Says the Manhattan Hotel Is a Gambling Den—Results in Another Postponement of the Case.

The borough licenses were again considered in the Somerset county court Friday last and both were adjourned, but there was a lively time, nevertheless, and more excitement is promised for the future.

The Sisser hotel license case came up and action was deferred for two weeks. Sisser desires to open a hotel and saloon on Somerset St. close to the county line but there seems to be an opinion that the license will be refused.

Then then license of J. H. Graceley for a hotel and saloon at 179 and 181 Somerset street, the Manhattan Hotel, was brought up. Graceley has been conducting the place about three months and the general opinion was that his application would be granted. Just as Judge Bartine was considering it, S. S. Swackhamer, one of the lawyers for the opposition, jumped up and asked the Judge not to grant the application as, he said, Graceley has been conducting a gambling den and selling intoxicants to boys.

Instantly there was a stir in the court room and City Judge DeMeza, *ad lib*itum, and Postmaster Alvah H. Clark, of Somerville, attorney for Graceley, were on their feet and in one voice challenged Mr. Swackhamer to present his proofs. James Meehan, of Somerville, was also for the opposition and he joined in the heated discussion. At last the Judge called the court to order and adjourned the matter for two weeks to allow the additional evidence to be procured if possible.

AN ANTI-SMOKER'S VIEWS.

He Writes of the Smudge Occasioned by Bonfires.

Plainfield seems to be taking a great smoke just now to the discomfort of a multitude of citizens who prefer pure air both inside and outside their dwellings.

To a visitor like myself on pleasure bent, the necessity of inhaling an atmosphere laden with the fumes of burning leaves robs one's perambulations of much of their enjoyment, to say nothing of having one's eyes blinded to many of the beauties of the landscape. Even when I got so far away from the nuisance as the heights about the Mountain Inn, the city from that attitude was seen to be enveloped in a cloud of smoke that concealed half its charms.

I understand that you have a Town Improvement Association which is seeking to solve the problem of removing the leaves in a more rational and Christian way. Cannot the people be induced to co-operate with the association in its most praiseworthy undertaking.

Anti Smoke.

The wife of Mr. Leonard Wells, of East Bloomfield, Mass., had been suffering with neuralgia for many days, not being able to sleep or hardly keep still, when Mr. Holden, the merchant there sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and asked that she give it a thorough trial. On meeting Mr. Wells the next day he was told that she was all right, the pain had left her within two hours, and that the bottle of Pain Balm was worth $5.00 if it could not be had for less. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by T. S. Armstrong, druggist.

A GENUINE SURPRISE.

MRS. ANTHONY SURPRISED ANOTHER TO BE AMAZED HERSELF.

First of the Happy Events to be Arranged by the '90 Committee of Arrangements for the Winter Season to follow.

During the recent State Christian Endeavor convention there was a committee which had the faculty of making everybody happy and comfortable, and that was the '96 committee, and they won praise for their efficient work. This committee did not disband, however, and after the great gathering they met and decided to hold at different times social conferences. The first opportunity offered itself when it was known that Mrs. E. E. Anthony, wife of the genial chairman, would soon celebrate the anniversary of her birthday, which happened last Friday. But the fact that the Christian Endeavor Society at Trinity Reformed church celebrated their anniversary this evening it was thought best not to have the two conflict, so the surprise was arranged for last Thursday. To mystify Mrs. Anthony so that the surprise would be complete, it was arranged that a surprise should be given Miss Elizabeth Dunn, of West Fourth street, who was acquainted with the scheme. The committee and their friends including Mrs. Anthony, met at the home of Miss Bonnell on East Fifth street, for the purpose of going to Miss Dunn's home in a body. In the meantime Miss Dunn, Miss Fenner, Miss Maud Winton and Wm. Crawford went to the home of Mrs. Anthony and took possession.

The party then took a trolley car and went to the home of the latter. This was sufficient to give Mrs. Anthony a surpise; with the rest of her friends she had a jolly good laugh over the joke. The evening was then devoted to playing all sorts of games. Two large pumpkins played an important part in the festivities. One was decorated with green and white ribbons, while the other one bore a card which read "Compliments of the Pie-Eating Squad, Assignment Committee." Another amusing feature was a large cake containing a ring, bell, button and penny. The one receiving the ring was to be engaged first and the one receiving the bell was to be the first one married. The one to secure the button, was to sew on his or her buttons and the one to capture the penny was to marry money. Rev. C. E. Herring secured the ring, J. M. Hawkins the bell, Miss Emma Fish the button and Miss Nettie Remsen the penny. Of course, all agreed the above would come true.

At a late hour the guests were served with refreshments, and when they left for their homes they wished their host and hostess many years of of happiness and joy. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Anthony and family; Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Martin, Miss Elizobeth Dunn, Mrs. Hawkins, Miss Spangenberg, Miss Pansy Herring, Miss Florence Hawkins, Miss Emma Fish, Miss Mabel Bonnell, Miss Nettie Remsen, Miss Nellie Fenner, J. M. Hawkins, J. G. MacLaughlin, Rev. C. E. Herring, David Runyon, H. Bonnell, William Crawford, H. C. Vanemberg, of this city, and Miss Mabel Winton, of Hackensack.

Concerning Madison Avenue Extension.

Chairman J. Fred MacDonald and Messrs Edward C. Mulford and William Sandford, constituting the Board of Commissioners appointed to assess benefits and damages occasioned by the proposed Madison avenue extension, met in council chamber Thursday evening. Only three persons, Messrs. Samuel Drier, Henry Piker and ——Stimpson were present to complain against what they termed an inequitable assessment. After consulting the map of the proposed widening and extension, at some length, the Board adjourned until Thursday evening Nov. 12th, at eight o'clock.

THE G. O. P. BOWL WELL.

DIVIDED AMONG THEMSELVES PARK CLUB DEMOCRATS ARE DEFFATED.

G. O. P. Has Its Rooters, But They Were Only Saved From Chagrin by the Wonderful Score of Councilman Peck.

The result of tomorrow's election is the all absorbing topic of interest, at present, and the bowling enthusiasts of the Park Club caught the fever. So it was that Saturday evening, the Republicans and Democrats of the club met in fierce conflict on the Park Club alleys, and the McKinleyites succeeded in snowing under their Democratic friends by 79 pins. The Republicans started in at once to accustom their opponents to defeat and led all the way, though not always by a big margin. The Republicans had most of the rooters with them, for there were lots of visitors present, including many of the ladies of the club, and cheers for McKinley and Hobart were always in order. The Democrats were divided among themselves, some being Bryan men and others supporters of the gold standard. Perhaps this was the reason for their low scores. The Republicans were out for battle. They would have been defeated, however, if it had not been for the phenominal bowling of Borough Councilman J. C. Peck. Everybody knew he could play baseball all right after that famous game on the July 4th between the Benedicts and Bachelors of the club, but they had not yet discovered his bowling proclivities. Imaganing the pins to be Bryan's adherents, he cleaned the alleys nine times with a single ball and brough out thunderous applause by his calm and deliberate method of sending the ball down the alleys. His score was 253, the highest score for this fall. Charles Dupee and A. Willis West acted as umpires. The individual scores:

THEIR LAST GUN.

Republican Campaign to End With a Big Parade.

Tomorrow is election day and one of the liveliest campaigns this country has ever witnessed will be over. Tonight the campaign will end with a blaze of glory in Plainfield, at least. The Republicans of this city are going to have the last say and they promise that it will be a roarer. The parade will be held early in the evening and will start from the corner of Front street and Park avenue and covering the following line of march:

The parade will start from the corner of Front street and Park avenue, to Somerset street, to Park place, to Grove street, to Central avenue, to West Seventh street, to Liberty street, to Eighth st., to Central ave., to 7th street, to Crescent avenue, to West Eighth street, to Central avenue, to West Ninth street, to Park avenue, to North avenue, to Watchung avenue, to Rink.

The formation of the divisions was published in Saturday's Daily Press. Then will come the mass meeting at the Jersey Cycle Academy at which one of Plainfield's distinguished citizens, Assemblyman Boswell G. Horr, who has been on the stump all this campaign, will be the orator of the evening.

The Plainfield High School cadets will turn out for the parade. They will be divided into a uniformed and an ununiformed squad.

What Rogues These Mortals Be.

The boys (?) certainly went on the rampage Saturday night, and they did not confine actions to harmless amusement but seemed bent on creating all the mischief they could. One hard-working woman on East Front street locked her doors and went to town shopping on that night, and when she returned she found that a pane of glass had been broken out of the kitchen window and through the opening a bundle of rags and rotten apples had been pushed, dropping on a basket of freshly-ironed laundry. Of course there was nothing left by which the miscreants could be apprehended and identified, but it was a contemptible piece of work, to say the least.

A half dozen or more street urchins dressed up as clowns made themselves obnoxious in the alley about the old bank building where the G. A. R. Encampment is in progress. Patroleman "Mat" Vanderweg stole the march on the boys by coming through the alley from French's mill, and the boys scattered in all directions at the approach of the officer.

"THE WAYSIDE CROSS."

THIRD OF SERMONS FROM A TEXT SUGGESTED BY A CYCLE TRIP.

Rev. C. E. Herring Tells of the Easiness for a Christian to Take up and Wear the Cross for Christ and Church.

An impressive discourse was delivered by Rev. C. E. Herring at the First Presbyterian Church last Sunday from the text, "The Wayside Cross." It was the third sermon in the series on texts suggested to Mr. Herring while on his wheeling trip through Europe. Mr. Herring spoke as follows:

"About half way up the St. Gotthard pass there stands an old crucifix by the side of the road. It is situated in a desolate and dangerous part of the Alps and because of its loneliness at once arrests this traveller's attention. Many a weary soul has stood before that silent messenger to worship. There was granted me all about that as I looked up to the magnificent heights of the mountains, but there was something so suggestive in this very humble and solitary crucifix. I thought of Christ leaving the majesty on high and humbling himself to prepare the way for me from earth to heaven. That was not the only cross I had seen in all the journey. I was reminded of it continually all the way from Cologne to the Eternal City—Rome. Never could I forget it; for it was always appearing in new shapes all along the road. I thought of Paul telling repeatedly of his conversion when he first saw the cross. He saw it all along his journey to the eternal city, and said 'God forbid that I should glory save in the cross.' Sometimes I saw these crosses with wreaths over them—evidently the donors meant to give evidence of their glory in the cross.

"In Italy there is a bridge with various crosses representing the Christ of the carpenter, mechanic, farmer, etc., and each laborer, as he crosses the bridge, stops to worship before his individual Christ. The laborers have time to worship in the midst of their business. Women, with baskets on their arms I saw kneeling before shrines at the roadside. Have you no time to stop even in the midst of your business, and lift up a thought to God?

"A beautiful picture is that in Italy where the cross by the roadside is decorated with mallet, hammer, pincers, etc. The former has been consecrating his labor. Religion is a very practical thing. The prophecy of Christ in the forty second chapter of Isaiah was that He should preach practical righteousness. Sacred and secular is not a Biblical division of things. Everything to a Christian man is sacred.

"Voting next Tuesday is as sacred a labor as attending a consecration service. Put on your Sunday clothes and vote for honesty and law. Your ballot should be holy as though it contained a verse of Scripture.

"The cross in the Alps seemed to say: 'The cross will stimulate a man when duty seems difficult.' Christ conquered, so can I. Prayer can do everything God can.'

"It was an old cross. Jesus Christ is the Son of God in the same sense in which the Christian church throughout the ages have regarded Him. Said Keshub Chunder Sen, 'None but Jesus Christ deserves to have the diadem of India.'

"That cross is the symbol of hope. Because He lives I shall live, Christ said to Martha, 'I Am the Resurrection.' There is no death for the Christian.

"Tonight it is the old cross I bring you. You have not fully apprieciated its power. Not a new remedy for the ills of humanity we need, but a more thorough application of the old. The church today is too much like a lifeboat going away from the sinking vessel. We are engaged in keeping ourselves unspotted from the world when we should labor to remove the spots from the sinner's character. A saint of old found a piece of the true cross and touched the dead with it, and life resulted from the touch. We need such a touch here to wake the dead. We need not galvanism, but life, and that is the gift of God. And workers for the Sunday-school and church shall be in abundance. When Christians are cleansed, sinners shall be converted."

Westfield Toughs Attack an Old Man.

John Spellman, an old farmer, who lives near Plainfield, was in Westfield Wednesday looking for a blanket which he claims he lost in town Tuesday night. It appears that a gang of boys stopped the old man at the drinking fountain on Broad street about 1 o'clock Wednesday morning and proceeded to have some fun with him. They loosed his horse from the wagon and turned the wagon upside down. Then they scattered the harness over the road and threw the reins over the electric light wires. Finally, when he could stand it no longer, Spellman took the whiffletree from the wagon and scattered his tormentors. Steps are being taken to find out who the youths were, and when identified they will be prosecuted.

CLAM SHFLL KILLED A PLAYMATE—WIFE FIRED AT FROM AMBUSH.

Somerset and Union County Courts Acquit a Boy and Man From Serious Charges.

The Grand Jury in Elizabeth having failed to indict William Spicer, thirteen years old, who killed William Crane, seventeen years old, at Trembly Point, by hitting him on the head with a clam shell several weeks ago, the boy was released last Thursday.

The boys were playing, and a clam shell thrown by Spicer made a wide curve striking Ernest in the lip and making a slight wound. Lockjaw set in, and killed him three days later.

The trial of Asher Fleming for the attempted murder of his wife in the woods near Peapack ended in the Somerset county court, Wednesday, in a verdict of acquittal. Fleming has been tried in the United States court at Trenton and in the county courts on several serious charges. His trial for sending "White Cap" letters through the mails to a member of the Smith family at Peapack resulted in his acquittal. Fleming and his wife have lived apart since June, 1895.

JURY WORK QUESTIONED

INDICTMENTS OF THE GRAND JURY MAY NOT STAND.

George J. Tobin, One of the Members, Said to Live Out of the County, and on That Claim a Contest Will be Made.

The startling announcement was made that there is a possibility that the recent work of the Grand Jury of Union county is invalid. The reason given for this assertion is that it is said that George J. Tobin, one of the members from this city, is not a resident of this county, nor has not been for nearly a year. Mr. Tobin formerly lived with his sister on West Sixth street, but when he was married about a year ago he took up his residence with his wife's parents who live beyond the intersection of Clinton and Sherman avenues, outside of the county line, which makes him a resident of Middlesex county.

The circumstances based on these facts would make it appear as though the business transacted by the Grand Jury of Union county was quite likely to be thrown out, and there is a possibility of the 83 indictments and three presentments being invalidated. It is understood that counsel for one of the Plainfielders indicted by the Grand Jury will attempt to have the indictment quashed by the court, and the result of the other cases will depend on this one. The news regarding the matter spread rapidly, and it has already caused a sensation in this locality. Mr. Tobin has registered in the Third ward. Mr. Tobin has in course of construction a new house in this city, but the residence is not yet completed.

HERMAN KELLER'S SIDE.

Says the Trouble Between He and His Uncle Was Simply a Partition Suit.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I read an article in The News' Friday's issue, entitled "Christian Keller Wins His Suit." It is of no consequence to me whether said article was written by Christian Keller or by some attorney employed by him, but I thought it only right that the public should know that the suit about which so much was said was simply an ordinary partition suit for the purpose of dividing up the lands of the heirs of Madeline Keller, deceased, (of whom I am one) and Christian Keller who owned the other half interest. I, and my brother and father and sisters, had been trying for a number of years to get an amicable division of the property with Christian Keller, and went to our lawyer, W. H. Allen Ingling, together with the papers drawn, but then found another obstacle in the way, viz.: one of the heirs of Madeline Keller being a minor could not legally execute the deed. We then instructed our counsel to proceed with the partition suit and get the desired result through a court of equity, which was done; and the court has granted a decree dividing the property between Christian Keller, who owned one-half, and the heirs of my mother, who at the time of her death owned the other half. The result was very satisfactory to me, my brother, sister and father, and the decree was granted without our counsel, Mr. Codington, being obliged to put a single witness on the stand, while Christian Keller called numerous witnesses to prove that my mother did not die intestate, but that she left a will; in this attempt, however, Christian Keller made a complete failure. If the alleged will had been established I would have been out in the cold. As to the scheduling of releases between Christian Keller and the heirs of Madeline Keller, this our counsel advised would be a good thing for us as it would perfect our title. We feel pleased with the result of the suit, grateful to our counsel, and thankful that we live within the jurisdiction of "Jersey Justice."

Respectfully,

Herman Keller.

THE TREASURY OF SONG

FRANK DAMROSCH TALKS ON THE ADVANTAGE OF SIGHT READING.

Art, He Says, is the Great Beautifier of Life Because it is Out of the Ordinary—Music Rich in Material.

An unusually interesting lecture was given Thursday afternoon in Seminary Hall, by Frank Damrosch, of New York, who is well known to musical people of this part of the country. The room was well filled with music loving Plainfield women, and the lecture was thoroughly enjoyed by every one present.

Mr. Damrosch's subject was "The Key to Unlock the Treasury of Song," meaning the advantage of a knowledge of sight-reading in music. "Art," he said, "is the great beautifier of life, because it lifts us out of our ordinary, humdrum life, into the region of the imagination. Music has the advantage over painting and architecture and other arts, that it is not limited in its materials. There is no end to the possibilities of musical composition." He then spoke of the difficulty of becoming a fine instrumental musician, but said that nature had given everyone a voice which could be used with a great deal of pleasure and profit. It was not necessary to become a finished singer; a slight knowledge of music will give one an entirely new pleasure in other's rendering of grand compositions. Choral singing, in which the individual voice need be neither fine nor well trained, gives a great deal of pleasure to the listener. It also is an inspiration to those who take part in it.

Mr. Damrosch now related briefly the history of choral music, and told of his own people's singing classes in Cooper Union, where people of the uneducated class, with no previous training, learned with perfect ease to sing eight-part choral music, in a manner both beautiful and touching. He said it was easier for children to learn than grown people, but it was a very simple matter for anyone. He then showed, by practical illustration, how easy first steps in sight-reading were, asking the audience to go through some preliminary exercises, ending with the singing of a pretty, easy little "round." Mr. Damrosch closed by saying: "A great many people get along without music; how they get along I do not see. If I were obliged to live without music, I should not care how soon I was translated to another planet, nor to which one. I believe that music is the great ameliorator of life, the one thing that blends all mankind together. It is the true language of the soul; we express through it what we could not express in words, and by means of it we feel what we had never really felt till it was expressed for us in music. The effect of music is often like a revelation. But we should prepare ourselves to let this beautiful angel in, and we should give our own little contribution if only to increase our own appreciation."

MYSTERY, MUSIC AND MIRTH.

The Three Entertaining Qualities of the Lecture Course Affair.

Mysterious working, recitations and instrumental music made up a very enjoyable programme at the second entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. Star Course, last Thursday. The audience was large and very enthusiastic, and called back the different entertainers for many encores. The Park Avenue Orchestra played with its usual excellence, and its selections were well chosen. A striking quartette, composed of members of the orchestra, gave several selections and was well received. The orchestra was composed of Joseph Sattels and Martin Korf, first violins; Dr. W. F. Gaston and T. Gaub, second violins; Geo. V. W. Moy, viola; Dr. J. F. Berg, violincello; C. R. Wallander, first corset; G. T. Dunham, trombone; Andrew G. Carpenter, pianist.

Miss Edith Nortoe, the reader, was delightful. Her selections were both humorous and pathetic, and she seemed equally at home with either. Her description of what the little boy saw after eating mince pie before going to bed was particularly pleasing.

The Japanese wonder worker, Soto Sunetaro, fairly captured the audience. He literally captured one of them, a young man, whom he beguiled on to the stage, and there performed some remarkable things with him. All of his tricks were good, and he received much applause from his delighted audience.

VICTORY.

The American people have again evidenced their patriotism when it comes to a point of establishing and maintaining National honor, and this time it was not on the battle field but at the ballot box, where the leaders of revolution and repudiation were snowed under with such majorities in most states that the spirit which they harbored will be effectually squelched.

It was a victory for Democrats as well as Republicans, though the latter receive the fruits of victory in the form of offices, but at the same time they cannot deprive the rest of the people of the benefits of a government to be conducted on honest principles.

The defeat of those leaders who proposed such undemocratic things under the garb of Democracy will strengthen real and true Democrats to go forth and battle with more confidence and earnestness in the next campaign, and so, while the party is temporarily set back, in the end it will be the gainer by having expunged those undesirable elements and be ready to again go before the people with a candidate and platform bound to win.

FACTS AND QUESTIONS.

Editor Frank W. Runyon professes to be a loyal and consistent member of the Republican party.

The Republican party's aims, as enunciated by their National platform, is to maintain prosperity for the people of the United States—that is, to so govern the country as to permit every citizen to be amply and reasonably compensated for their labor in earning a livelihood.

Of Mr. Runyon's loyalty to the advocacy of these tenets there is no question.

But of the consistency of his public advice as reflected by his private practice there is a wide chasm.

Does Mr. Runyon believe that the payment of $5.50 per week for typesetters is the conception of fair wages as intended by the Republican platform?

Does Mr. Runyon believe that a typesetter receiving $2.50 per week should be "docked" at the rate of $12 a week for lost time?

Does Mr. Runyon believe that an era of prosperity and good wages can come to the laboring masses of this country when girls are compelled to work in newspaper composing rooms for one month without pay, and then are compensated at the rate of seventy-five cents per week?

These are simple questions. If Editor Runyon can answer them with truthfulness and consistency The Press and an inquisitive public will be highly gratified.

END OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Tonight ends the most important political campaign ever waged in the United States. The issues relative to the circulating currency of the country have knocked down party lines, and on one side has been arrayed those who believe that the present system of finance in Government should be continued until such a time as other nations with whom we deal largely in a commercial way shall join in bimetalism, and on the other side are those who believe that this country shall adopt bimetalism, embodying the 16 to 1 ratio between silver and gold, without awaiting the action of foreign nations, whom, it is argued, will soon fall into line and adopt the same plan as soon as it is seen that this country is to operate its monetary system upon this principle. As a whole, the campaign has been conducted on education lines, each side endeavoring to win support with reasoning arguments. Every means for instruction in the ideas, practicability and justness on both sides has been utilized, and there is reason to believe that the voters will go to the polls tomorrow and deposit their ballots with a respect degree of intelligence and responsibility towards the Government under which they live than has ever been the case before.

SIGN OF POPULARITY.

In the fourth estate it is the common courtesy for members to congratulate one another with admiring adjectives when there is a special display of enterprise or improvement on the part of one newspaper. In the case of the Elizabeth Journal, which appeared Thursday in a brand new dress of type, with all the frills and cuts of modern typography, The Press accords it a privilege to say a pleasant word in recognition of an improvement which shows appreciation of a paper embodying all the best ideas of up-to-date journalism. The Journal is one of the best types of good newspapers that comes into The Press' editorial rooms, and we extend the warm word of congratulation on this new evidence of popularity.

WILD RUN OF HORSES.

DRIVER ALMOST DRAGGED TO DEATH IN TRYING TO STOP THEM.

Left Bleeding and Bruised by the Roadside — Collided With Another Wagon, and Ended in a Bad Wreck.

A plunging, rearing team of horses, dragging a plucky driver holding fast to the reins as his prostrate body was thumped over the hard road like a dog shaking the life out of a rat, until he was compelled to loosen his hold from sheer exhaustion and to be left bleeding and bruised by the wayside, the team continuing on its mad plunge and colliding with another vehicle, promiscuously emptying its occupant into the road, cutting a gash in his head and starting his horse on a reckless run without a driver, then rushing on to just graze another wagon with a mother and four little children, and finally one of the animals falling and breaking its leg and ending in a mass of equine flesh, harness and wagon as though a company of artillery had swooped down and wrecked everything in sight, were some of the exciting incidents of a runaway at Warrenville last Saturday afternoon.

Henry A. Voehl, the Somerset street baker, had just served his last customer, Borman's store, at Warrenville, Saturday afternoon, when he started towards his wagon standing near the store. One of the horses attached to the wagon was a nervous animal and for some reason or another became frightened and commenced to rear and plunge. Before he could hardly realize what had happened, Mr. Voehl saw the team start off at a rapid gate. He was very close to them and as quick as a flash made a jump for the reins. He caught them, but the team had got two much headway and he was jerked off his feet. He pluckily held on, however. The horses continued on their mad run, gaining speed at every step, while Voehl was dragged and thumped about the hard roadbed. He was cut and bruised at every jump but tenaciously hung to the reins for 250 yards before he was compelled to loosen his hold from sheer exhaustion. He was left bleeding and bruised in the road and the runaway team continued on their reckless course free from the weight of his body which they had been dragging at the end of the reins.

Down the road, Clarkson Murphy, a butcher of Martinsville, was driving along. He saw the runaway team approaching, but was unable to steer clear of the zigzag course of the wagon as it swerved from one side of the road to the other. The vehicles came in collision and Mundy's wagon was overturned by the force of the jar. His horse broke lose and ran for a short distance but was soon stopped.

Voehl's team kept right on, however, and a short distance beyond just escaped running into another wagon driven by a lady, who had four children with her. They continued their wild flight until one of the horses —a bay mare—stumbled and fell, breaking her leg. The crippled condition of the horse brought the team to a standstill.

In the meantime Voehl had picked himself up where he was left by the roadside and hobbled back to the home of Charles Austin, who did what he could to relieve his sufferings. Word was sent to Mr. Voehl's parents and, accompanied by Dr. Fritts, they soon went to his side. The doctor found no bones broken, but the bruises were very painful. He was conveyed to his home on Somerset street, and there rests as comfortable as could be expected after undergoing such a thumping as he received while trying to stop the runaways.

Mr. Mundy's head was also cut by being thrown out of his wagon, and Dr. Fritts dressed his wound. The injury was not serious.

It was found necessary to shoot the mare that broke her leg.

Couldn't Navigate Easily.

A man, giving the name of Rothrock and his residence as Philadelphia, was arrested by Night Watchman Hull on Somerset street early Monday morning. Rothrock was unable to navigate properly, hence his detention at the lockup. This morning he paid a $5 fine and was released.

Shrager left his place at about 11 o'clock last night.

JUST AS GOOD IS NOT SCOTT'S EMULSION.

MORE THAN EXPECTED.

One of the distinguishing features of the campaign just ended was the sanguineness of victory displayed on the part of the Republicans, and it now seems that they well judged the temper of the voters regarding the issues on which the battle of the two sides was fought out. To such a sweeping victory in the middle west and the whole of the east has ever before taken place in a Presidential election, and in the south and far west an oasis of Republican pluralities was found here, there and everywhere to surprise the Bryan managers and add to the satisfaction of McKinley supporters.

New Jersey, which in 1892 gave to Grover Cleveland a plurality of 14,974, has been carried by McKinley and Hobart by a plurality of over 55,000. Passaic county, the home of Vice-President elect Garret a Hobart, rolled up the plurality of 5,000 for the national Republican ticket, as against 536 for Harrison 1892. Sound money will be upheld in Congress by the solid delegation from New Jersey, its eight Republican representatives having been re elected by handsome majorities. Of the eight State Senators elected six are Republicans, one Democratic, and one district is in doubt. Of the sixty Assemblymen elected forty-five are Republican and fifteen Democratic.

State Comptroller Hancock reports that at the end of the fiscal year, October 31st, there was cash balances of $959,628.98, practically all obligations paid to date—an increase over last year's balance of $65,000. During the year there has been expended over $90,000 on improvements to State institutions.

Caught His Hand in the Machinery.

Fred Heffern, of East Third street, an employe of the stopper factory at Fourth and Washington streets, caught his left hand in the machinery while at work on a polishing wheel, Saturday morning, and lacerated the hand so badly that Dr. Simpson was obliged to sew up the wounds. The patient will be deprived of the use of his hand for some time to come.

The Case Appealed.

The case of Noel against Lambertson has been appealed from the decision given in Justice Mosher's Court. A. P. Miller and Walter Hetfield represent the plaintiff and H. C. Runyon the defendant.

Daniel Crowley has returned to this city after an extended absence in Boston.

UNCLE SAM IS RUSHED.

TICKETS FOR TOMORROW'S ELECTION CROWD THE MAILS.

A Handy Time Register is One of the New Improvements Postmaster Hetfield Has—Makes Overtime Claims Correct.

The Plainfield postoffice is one of the best second-class postoffices in the State; so say the Department officers and everyone else who has visited it. Postmaster Hetfield has just introduced an improvement, which was put in regular use Monday. It is a Bundy time register and is designed to do away with the old system of time-cards and the chances for unfair overtime claims. Each carrier as he goes to work takes a numbered key and registers. There is a clock connected with the time register, which is so arranged that the time is recorded as the key is turned.

Never, except at Christmas time, has the mail been as large as it is today. There seems to be an unusually large amount of outside mail, but three of the political parties have mailed each registered voter a ticket for tomorrow's election and the three sets for the 3,000 odd voters in this city has caused the mail to assume gigantic proportions. In the West End it was worst of all, and Letter Carrier Shea started on his rounds at 8 o'clock instead of 9 this morning, so as to cover his entire route. The other carriers had their hands full and it took them nearly an hour longer to cover their respective routes.

May be Prosecuted for Bigamy.

Albert Manning, colored, of Short Second street, tells a story which, if true, is likely to create trouble for his wife and Matthew Wallace. Manning says that he married Miss Annie Manning fourteen years ago this winter, and that one daughter, now thirteen years of age, has been the result of the union. The couple have been estranged for about six months, and at the request of Mrs. Manning their home was broken up. The daughter is employed with a family on Central avenue. Saturday night Mrs. Manning and Wallace were wedded in Westfield by Rev. M. J. Harkins. Manning says he is now looking about for legal advice with a view of prosecuting his wife for bigamy.

VARIOUS SPORTS.

The Dunellen football team defeated the Scotch Plains eleven Tuesday morning by a score of 10 to 0. In the afternoon the Dunellens were victorious over the Bound Brook boys by a score of 30 to 0.

For the first time since its organization the Alls football team was scored against Tuesday afternoon. They defeated their opponents, the Scotch Plains boys, however, by a score of 10 to 4. Cuming and Peck made the touchdowns for the Alls team, and Day scored for Scotch Plains on a quarterback trick. The game was a very exciting one and well contested.

The game of whist between the Park Club team and the New Jersey Athletic Club team was not played on Monday night owing to a death in the family of one of the members of the latter team. As the Jersey City team is the next in order an invitation has been extend to them by the Parks to play in this city next Friday and it is quite likely they will accept the invitation.

The large number of people present at the Hillside Tennis Golf Club grounds, yesterday, was evidence that some people had other things to think about besides election. All day the grounds and club house were crowded with lovers of golf, and the time was most pleasantly passed by them. In the morning the scratch play for the championship cup presented by Geo. A. Chapman was the event of interest. The game was commenced at nine o'clock, and the first eight men in the following table of scores qualified for the match:

Huntington, A. Z.	87
West, H. D.	89
Wharton, J. H. F.	89
Stockton, H. Reeves	91
Anthony, J. S.	93
Ryder, C.	96
Richards, Rev. W. B.	96
Kaufman, S.	97
Beebe, H. W.	97
Wain, A. Fred	100
Tracy, Evarts	114
Ackerman, J. S.	117

In the afternoon the result of the one round match medal play, eighteen holes was as follows:—

Huntington beat Anthony 7 up and 2 to play; West beat Wharton, 5 up and 3 to play; Richards beat Ryder 3 up and 2 to play; Stockton beat Kaufman 6 up and 4 to play. The semi-final of this round will be played probably Thursday afternoon and the finals on Saturday afternoon next when Huntington will play West, and Richards will play Stockton.

A delightful feature of the afternoon was the tea served in the Club House. The large number of Plainfield society women present gave a decided brilliancy to the affair. Mrs. F. D. Warren received, assisted by Mrs. W. H. Murray, Mrs. Mellick and Mrs. Rice. Mrs. W. H. Murray poured tea.

Fined For Fighting.

William H. Brown was fined $3 in the City Court Monday for fighting on Belvidere avenue. The case against Edward Saunders was adjourned until Wednesday.

The Difference

"I see no difference between H-O and any other oatmeal!" We know it. The difference is not to be seen. You taste, and smell, and feel the difference, though!

H-O

is different from all others, in that it is more sweet, smooth, delicate, digestible. Its preparation begins where the others leave off. It is twice cooked, once by steam, once by super-heated air. Thus half the work of digestion is done, and the system is never over-taxed or over-heated.

Be sure to get the package with the big H-O on the end.

ABOUT THE FRESH AIR CAMP.

King's Daughters Acknowledge the Many Favors Extended to Them.

The King's Daughters furnish the following for publication:

The ladies of the nurse committee of the city union of King's Daughter's, recognizing the fact that the appeal to the public for assistance in their work at the Children's Camp has received a most generous response, feel that it is only due to their friends that they make some report in regard to the summer work.

The manner in which the "Shelter" was built and furnished, viz: by voluntary contributions, both of time and money, delayed somewhat the opening of the "Camp" and this, coupled with the fact that it takes time to make any new work either known or appreciated, explains the seemingly small amount of work done there this year.

During the months of July and August, the "Camp" was in use on an average of four days each week, the children being carried up with an attendant and the nurse early in the morning and returned to their homes at night. During the day the nurse cared for her little charges, carefully administering medicine and nourishment in strict accordance with the order of the attending physician. In several cases the change of air and careful judicious attention given by the nurse seemed the only earthly means of saving the child's life.

The instruction given by the nurse to the mothers, during the days they were with her, must prove invaluable to them in the future care of their children. The ladies beg to express their gratitude to all who have given so generously to this charity, both of material aid and of sympathy. There is now on hand $116, which has been placed to the credit of this work and will be expended next year. We would acknowledge the courtesy of the city papers in inserting in their columns, free of charge, from time to time, articles relating to the "Children's Camp; and the kindly aid rendered by Keely & Son in matters relating to transportation.

August Saltzman, Jr., of Westervelt avenue, has been home from Lehigh University for a few days.

Invitations have been issued announcing the wedding of Miss Virginia, daughter of Garrett Van-Winkle, to Rev. Edward Otis Chickering, of Raritan, Ill., on Wednesday, November 18th, at the home of her parents, 822 Madison avenue, at 7 o'clock, p. m.

THE WORK OF A MISSION.

HOW ONE MAN WAS RESCUED AS RELATED BY HIMSELF.

Frank Lawrence, Once a Drunkard, Was Lifted Out of the Slough of Despond, and Now an Active Worker in the Cause.

Stories of city mission work are always interesting, and when Frank Lawrence, of the Water Street Mission, New York, entered the lecture room of the Congregational church, last night, where he was to speak to the Y. P. S. C. E., the room was crowded to its utmost capacity.

The opening exercises included a delightful violin solo by Miss Nella B. Whiton, accompanied by Miss Ethel A. Whiting, and two vocal trios by Miss Morse, Miss Whiting and Stacy R. Reynolds. Rev. Charles Lyman Goodrich read the Scripture lesson, and Harold W. Tomlinson, president of the society, introduced Mr. Lawrence.

Mr. Lawrence was for many years a drunkard, and was converted in 1886 in the Water Street Mission, where he has been almost ever since a very earnest worker. He was, like the majority of those one sees in city missions, from a Christian home, where he had often, when he could not plead a "pressing engagement," read the lesson at the family prayers. But he sank down and down, drifting at last, when nearly as low as man could be, into the mission. The workers gave to consider him a case with whom they could do nothing. They said they could only leave him to God, and one night, through one of his children, God spoke to him, and his heart was touched and broken, and he gave himself to the Saviour, and almost immediately entered upon the work of trying to save others. He had entirely lost the appetite for drink, and never expected to be troubled by it again.

He told some interesting tales of scenes in the Mission, of some apparently hopeless men and women who had been saved, and strange prayers heard in the room where so many souls had been born anew. He emphasized the fact that no man ever expected to become a drunkard when he began to drink, and spoke very earnestly of the danger of the social glass. He told of the great need of rescue work everywhere, and urged all consecrated Christians to engage in it, and win for Christ the souls which all about them were sinking every day lower and lower in sin.

Split His Nose in Half.

Patrolman Fraleigh met with a peculiar and painful accident last evening prior to his going on duty. Some Hallowe'en joker placed a pair of stuffed trousers in the vestibule of the rookery and Chief Grant asked Fraleigh to take them out and throw them away. The officer did as directed and sought a place back of the rookery. It was dark at the time and Fraleigh could not see his way clearly. As a result he stumbled over a large pile of stones and split his nose almost in half. As quickly as possible he went to Moy's drug store and Dr. Simpson was called. The latter was obliged to take three stitches in the lacerated member. Though Fraleigh suffered considerably, he went on duty for the night.

Installation of Elders and Deacons.

Sunday morning, before the sermon, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., installed Messrs. G. L. VanEmburgh, A. Willett and J. P. Laire, as elders, and H. E. Gayle, W. F. Oliver and F. S. Cutter, as deacons, for the term of two years each. A most excellent sermon on the subject of Missions was then delivered by the pastor, and earnest, feeling prayer was offered by Rev. George Luckenbill and Rev. J. E. Todd, of Dunellen, both of whom occupied seats on the pulpit platform during the service, by invitation of Dr. Schenck.

Lucky It Wasn't at Night.

Fire was discovered in Bushmore & Co.'s yard adjoining the planing mill at Watchung avenue and Fourth street, a little before noon on Saturday, and when discovered by an employe named Perrine, the fire was well under way and burning briskly. Fire extinguishers and hose, the private property of the firm, were brought into requisition, and the flames were soon extinguished. The fire was undoubtedly caused by sparks from a passing locomotive.

Grateful Appreciation.

Steven Jeroloman, 72 years old, an old veteran of the civil war, a resident of Cottage place, and who last February was sent to the Central branch of the Soldier's Home, at Dayton, Ohio, through the influence of the Organized Aid Association, of Plainfield, has written a long interesting letter to Mrs. W. A. Woodruff, thanking her and the Association for their successful efforts in his behalf and gives a very interesting description of the home and its workings. The old vet seems very happy in his new home and very grateful to the Plainfield people who befriended him by placing him where he is.

Charles Noble, of East Fifth street, has been in Mendham spending a few days with relatives.

REPUBLICAN VICTORY.

most correct returns give McKinley a plurality of about 15,000. Gold democrats claim Breckinridge's election to congress by 1,700.

MARYLAND.

Baltimore, Nov. 4.—Baltimore city complete gives McKinley 21,618 plurality over Bryan. The city council stands fifteen republicans to seven democrats. Indications now point to the election by the republicans of all six congressmen. The state gives McKinley about 40,000.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 4.—The populists and democrats voted solidly for Bryan and carried the state by 10,000. The republican-populist fusion candidates for state officers were elected.

IDAHO.

Boise City, Idaho, Nov. 4.—The state is conceded to Bryan by 15,000 to 20,000 majority. Morgan, silver republican, it is claimed, is ahead for congress. No reliable estimate of the complexion of the legislature can be made yet.

UTAH.

Salt Lake, Utah, Nov. 4.—Indications now are that Bryan has carried the state by at least 10,000. The legislature, which elects United States senator, is claimed by both parties.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans, Nov. 4.—Latest corrected returns indicate that Bryan carried the state by about 40,000 plurality.

NEW JERSEY.

A Majority of About 40,000 for McKinley and All Republican Congressmen.

Trenton, Nov. 4.—The republican ticket has scored a sweeping victory in New Jersey. Few of the sections which were looked upon as surely democratic have realized the expectations of Mr. Bryan's workers, and it now seems a conservative estimate to place McKinley's plurality in the state at 40,000. Essex county has given the 18,000, and Hudson county's usually sturdy democratic majority has been cut down to a narrow margin of 2,500. New Jersey elected a solid republican congressional delegation as follows: First district, S. C. Loudenslager; Second, J. J. Gardner; Third, E. F. Howell; Fourth, Mahlon Pitney; Fifth, J. F. Stewart; Sixth, E. W. Parker; Seventh, Thomas McEwan; Eighth, Chas. W. Fowler

ILLINOIS.

McKinley Carried the State by About 150,000 and Altgeld Is Defeated.

Chicago, Nov. 4.—Later returns from Illinois give McKinley about 150,000 plurality. Tanner's plurality over Altgeld is about 125,000. The returns received from outside of Chicago show large republican gains over 1892. Without a county gave McKinley a majority of 5,500, a gain of 1,427 over 1892. Logan county has been carried by 300 majority. It was formerly democratic by over 600. This is an indication of the ratio of republican gains from the counties heard from. Evanston's vote was McKinley 1,027; Bryan, 698. The republicans claim the legislature which will elect a United States senator.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 4.—Bryan carried Georgia, according to latest corrected returns, by about 35,000. Official vote of Fulton county, in which Atlanta is located, gives Bryan, 4,471; McKinley, 1,938; Bryan's majority, 1,515. But few scattering votes for Palmer and other presidential candidates.

NEBRASKA.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 4.—Out of the apparent republican avalanche in neighboring states, Nebraska has steadily remained true to her favored son. Mr. Bryan has, on the face of the returns, carried the state by 6,000 to 13,000. Chairman of the republican committee declines to concede defeat, but the figures disprove his claims.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 4.—The majority for Bryan and Sewall in Virginia is 25,000. Seven democratic congressmen are certainly elected. Three districts are in doubt.

OREGON.

Portland, Ore., Nov. 4.—Chairman of republican state central committee says he is satisfied that McKinley's majority will be anywhere from 5,000 to 8,000. The republicans will have in the next legislature a majority of twenty-four in joint assembly.

RHODE ISLAND.

Providence, Nov. 4.—The election in Rhode Island was for presidential electors and two congressmen. The state is in present indications will give McKinley 20,000 plurality. The republican congressmen will have more than 5,000 plurality each.

COLORADO.

Denver, Nov. 4.—Bryan and Sewall have carried Colorado by a plurality of 130,000. The gold democrats are simply an incident to the campaign. The middle-of-the-road populists cast about 3,000 votes, the balance are scattering. The legislature is a mixture, composed of a fusion of all parties, a unit for silver and all pledged to the return of Senator Teller to the United States senate. On state ticket the indications point to the election of the Bailey ticket. This ticket is composed of populists silver republicans and national party men.

MISSOURI.

St. Louis, Nov. 4.—Missouri returns show a marked republican gain. The republican majority in St. Louis is from 34,000 to 38,000 and in Kansas City about 8,000. This will be hardly sufficient to overcome the democratic plurality in the state, and Bryan will probably get the electoral vote.

M'KINLEY NOT ELATED.

Hundreds of Congratulatory Telegrams Received by the Victor.

Canton, O., Nov. 4.—Congratulatory telegrams are pouring in upon Major McKinley to-day, many hundreds having been already received. With Chairman Hanna and a number of invited guests, the successful candidate sat until far into the night in his home receiving the election returns by private wire. From the time the first telegram was received until he retired for the night he exhibited no undue signs of elation, and did not appear to be at all surprised at the result, saying that he never had any doubt of the success of republican principles at the polls. Chairman Hanna merely said that the result was a foregone conclusion and that he had been sure all along that the returns would substantially verify his predictions of the triumph of the republican nominee. Mr. Hanna was among the very first to congratulate Major McKinley upon his success, and after him followed the others gathered at his home. Then came the first batch of congratulations, and they continued to arrive until Major McKinley retired to rest and during the time he slumbered.

Bryan Is Surprised.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 4.—Mr. Bryan received the returns at his residence last evening. It had been understood among the friends of the democratic candidate that he was to be left alone on election night, as a consequence none of the local supporters or neighbors gathered at the little D street residence. After supper Mr. Bryan put on a velvet house jacket and went up stairs to the private office he has established since his nomination. Mrs. Bryan remained with him there during the evening, the husband and wife receiving the bulletins fresh from the wire and reading and comparing them together. Mr. Schwind, the candidate's secretary, and a dozen newspaper men occupied the library. The wire connecting with democratic headquarters was idle most of the time. A few dispatches for Mr. Bryan came from Chairman Jones early in the evening. Their purport was not made known by Mr. Bryan, but it is said that if anything important was received from the Arkansas senator he would give it to the press. He appeared to be somewhat chagrined and surprised at the result, but retired before the latest returns were received.

THE NEXT SENATE.

Probability That the Republicans Will Control.

New York, Nov. 4.—Along with the presidency and a large majority of the house of representatives the republicans seem to be in a fair way to secure a majority of the next senate. That is, they will control it. Certainly there will be a majority for sound money and, inferentially, a majority in favor of a revenue measure intended to enable the government to meet its expenditures. The fifty-nine hold-over senators are classified as follows: Republicans on the St. Louis platform, 27; silver republicans, 5; sound money democrats, 7; silver democrats, 16; populists, 3; unclassified democrats, 2. Successors to retiring senators have already been elected in three states. Four of these—Allison of Iowa, Morrill of Vermont, Foraker of Ohio and Wellington of Maryland—are sound money republicans. The other, McInerny of Louisiana, was elected as a free silver democrat. Georgia and Alabama will send free silver democrats. The Arkansas legislature will return Senator Jones, a free silver democrat. The legislature in Florida will probably send a sound money successor to Senator Call. The Oregon Legislature is in the hands of the republicans and Senator Mitchell believes he will be returned. The Kentucky legislature at its session last winter failed to elect a successor to Senator Blackburn. It is understood that the friends of the governor to call an extra session in January when the republicans will elect a man. According to dispatches of the United Associated Presses the following seats will elect republican governors: Connecticut, Indiana, Illinois, New Hampshire, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, and Wisconsin. The following will elect free silver republican senators: Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, and Utah. South Carolina will choose a free silver democrat. The following states are in doubt at this hour, but the general trend of the returns makes the probabilities favor republican senators: California, Kansas, Missouri, North Carolina, and Washington. Delaware, which now has but one senator, will probably elect a republican. Upon the basis of these changes, assuming that the doubts are resolved in favor of the republicans in the states named, the next senate will stand as follows: Republicans on the St. Louis platform, 48; silver republicans, 9; sound money democrats, 8; silver democrats, 21; democrats unclassified, 2; populists, 2. Total, 90. The republicans could lose two of the states and still have a majority of the senate.

The House.

New York, Nov. 4.—Up to this morning no returns had been received from which the actual result of the congressional contests in Alabama, Delaware, Georgia, Kansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Missouri, Texas and Washington could be determined. The other states have probably elected the representatives as follows: Arkansas, 6 dem.; Colorado, 2 pop.; Connecticut, 4 rep.; Florida, 2 dem.; Idaho, 1 pop.; Illinois, 20 rep., 2 dem.; Indiana, 10 rep., 3 dem., 1owa, 11 rep.; Louisiana, 6 dem.; Maine, 4 rep.; Maryland, 5 rep., 1 dem.; Massachusetts, 12 rep., 1 dem.; Michigan, 11 rep., 1 dem.; Mississippi, 7 dem.; Montana, 1 pop.; Nebraska, 5 rep., 1 pop.; New Hamsphire, 2 rep.; New Jersey, 8 rep.; New York, 28 rep.; 6 dem.; North Carolina, 4 rep., 1 dem., 4 pop.; North Dakota, 1 rep.; Ohio, 16 rep.; 2 dem.; Oregon, 2 rep.; Pennsylvania, 28 rep., 3 dem.; Rhode Island, 2 rep.; South Carolina, 7 dem.; South Dakota, 2 rep.; Tennessee, 4 rep., 1 gold dem., 5 dem.; Utah, 1 pop.; Vermont, 3 rep.; Virginia, 3 rep., 7 dem.; West Virginia, 4 rep.; Wisconsin, 10 rep.; Wyoming, 1 rep.; Nevada, 1 pop. Totals, rep., 202; gold dem., 1; dem., 59; pop., 11.

The republicans will have a majority closely approximating, if it does not exceed, that in the present house. The totals now are: Republicans, 252; democrats, 97; populists, 11; silverites and

FINALS NOT FINISHED.

Golf Contest for Reinhart Cup Will be Ended Next Saturday.

The handicap match play for the Reinhart cup came off Saturday afternoon on the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club links. It was only possible, however, to play one round, and the winners will play off the match next Saturday afternoon at the usual hour. The playing on Saturday was good and much interest was manifested. J. H. P. Wharton captured the honors of a best play by covering the eighteen holes in eighty-five strokes J. S. Anthony, scratch, beat Carl Walz 5 up; Dr. Ard, handicap 21, beat J. H. P. Wharton 4 up, while Lee Ashley Grace, handicap 17, beat F. D. Warren 6 up. The match between Thomas Van Boskerck and George Van Boskerck was postponed until next Saturday. Tea was served at the club house in the afternoon, and Mrs. Joshiah Brown poured tea assisted by Mrs. W. L. C. Glenney, Mrs. E. E. Cady and Miss Maude Middledith. The attendance was quite large and the event was thoroughly pleasing in every respect.

FIRE AND ACCIDENT.

Fireman William Newman Thrown From a Truck and Hurt.

Patrolman Vanderweg discovered a fire Monday night about 12 o'clock, in the woods in back of S. A. Crulkshank's house, on Belvidere avenue, and sent in alarm from Box 29, corner of Watchung and Woodland avenues. The chemical, No. 2 engine and hose wagon and Alert hose wagon responded but on reaching the fire learned that it was of small account and no serious damage could result. Zephyr Hook and Ladder did not leave headquarters till sometime after the alarm was sounded. Charles Glaentzer was at the wheel and not being accustomed to the working of it, caused an accident which might possibly have terminated fatally.

The truck was intercepted on Watchung avenue near Councilman Ginna's residence, by Chief Doane, as it was not needed at the fire. On the return, Firemen Wm. Newman, of West Second street, and Edward Baker, a carpenter, of Pearl street, were standing on the right side of the truck as it passed through North avenue toward Park avenue. When the corner was reached near Armstrong's pharmacy, Fred Breem, the driver, allowed himself plenty of space to turn into Park avenue, but Glaentzer, thinking that the wheel was to be turned the same way the truck was going, did so accordingly, and as a result the truck was run into the curb. At the same time Baker was caught between the truck and the electric light pole and Newman was thrown against the iron pole. Baker was considerably bruised about the body and sustained a fracture of one rib, while Newman's face was terribly bruised and he sustained several injuries about the body. The latter was picked up in an unconscious condition and carried into the Hotel Grenada where Drs. Long and Fritts was called and administered proper treatment. In a little while he regained consciousness and was taken to Alert's hose house where he remained until Tuesday morning. He then went home. His injuries are not dangerous. Baker was taken home and medical aid was secured. It is thought that he will recover, though he seems to have sustained severe internal injuries in addition to the fracture of a rib. If the truck had been going very fast both men would undoubtedly have been killed.

Rutherford B. Sheppard, of Scotch Plains, had his Cleveland wheel stolen Sunday evening from in front of his house.

Woman's Work

Is never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to tone, sustain, and renew the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. It is more because of this condition of the blood that women are run down.

Tired, Weak, Nervous,

Than because of the work itself. Every physician says so, and that the only remedy is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer like Hood's Sarsaparilla. For the troubles peculiar to Women at change of season, climate or life, or resulting from hard work, nervousness, and impure blood, thousands have found relief and cure in

Cut With a Razor.

While Mrs. James Radin, of North avenue, was standing at the corner of Front street and Park avenue, Monday evening, watching the parade, a colored man rushed by waving a razor. The sharp steel caught Mrs. Radin's hand and inflicted a deep cut, causing blood to flow profusely. She hurried home and gave the injured member proper attention. She does not think the act was committed purposely and does not know who the man is.

A Serious Joke.

Some malicious person attempted to play a serious joke on Monday evening by blowing out the gas in the apartments of N. H. Guttman and family on West Second street. When the family awoke Tuesday morning they were almost overcome with the deadly gas, and it was some time before they could rid themselves of its effect. They have no idea who committed the deed.

A LOVER'S JEALOUSY.

"Robert," said Mr. Vyse, slowly, gazing fixedly at the young clerk, "I have no doubt that it is you who have robbed me."

The hot blood flooded Robert Acland's neck and face as he took in the meaning of the words.

"I swear to you, sir," he cried, passionately, "that you wrong me—I swear it by my soul!"

"If I wish I could believe you, Robert," Mr. Vyse replied, "for I like you; but, unfortunately, appearances are too much against you. What, may I ask, were you doing at five o'clock yesterday evening in my private room? You had no right or business to be there."

"Nor was I," returned the young fellow, proudly, drawing himself up to his full height. "I have never been in this room in my life except when you have sent me. Has anyone told you that I was here last evening, sir?"

"Yes, Robert; your comrade, Richard Starkie, assured me of it not ten minutes ago."

"Richard Starkie!" exclaimed Acland, in great wonderment. "Why, he must be mad. What can have possessed him to tell so wicked a falsehood? We have always been good friends, he and I. Why should he thus try to ruin me?"

"Words, the tone, were those of an innocent man. Mr. Vyse began to waver in his opinion as to Acland's guilt.

"Robert," he said, more kindly, "will you swear to me before God that you are innocent?"

Raising aloft his right hand, "I call the God before whose judgment throne we both shall one day stand to witness that I am guiltless," he declared, solemnly. "Surely, sir, you will believe me now?"

Mr. Vyse held out his hand. "Yes, Robert, I believe you," he said, "and I beg your pardon for having doubted you; but what Starkie's motive in traducing you has been I am at a loss to understand."

"So am I, sir," answered Acland. "His conduct is quite reprehensible."

"Well, Robert," wound up the old gentleman, as he dismissed his clerk, "you must promise me one thing—that you will treat Starkie just the same as if nothing unusual had occurred. It is my wish."

"I will try, sir, but it will be a hard task," Acland replied, as he quitted the room.

Of course the news that their employer had been robbed ran like wildfire through the small community. It was Richard Starkie who first made public the ill news—for no official intimation of it was given; but to his fellow-workers he dare not try to incriminate young Acland, for Acland was a favorite with his colleagues, and Starkie knew well that any remark suggestive of his guilt would be received in stony silence—the silence of sheer disbelief.

That evening Bob Acland went to see Elsie Venner, the girl of his heart. There was no actual engagement between them, but Elsie understood quite well that Bob was only waiting for a rise of salary before asking her to be his wife. He had intended to tell her nothing about what had occurred at the office during the day, but the quick-witted girl soon saw that something was amiss, and taxed him with it. And after a little hesitation on his part and a little pressing on hers the whole story came out.

"I cannot think, darling," finished Bob, "what has induced Starkie to do it."

"Shall I tell you?" said Elsie, demurely.

"You?"

"Yes, I. I can, you know." And then she proceeded to relate how Richard Starkie had a few days before asked her to marry him, and, on her refusal, down into a pit of villainy, not only heaping anathemas on her head, but also on Bob.

"And you believe he has attempted to lay the theft at my door to blacken my character in your eyes?" What a second drel the fellow must be!"

"If you had seen the look on his face when he left me," replied the girl, "you would think, as I do, that he is capable of anything."

Next day Bob Acland repeated to Mr. Vyse the conversation he had held with Elsie Venner.

Meanwhile Richard Starkie was in a very unhappy frame of mind. He had just sufficient manhood left to be able to appreciate the utter contemptibleness of his own conduct. But that did not tend to make him sorry for what he had done. No, it rather embittered him still more against his rival. A maniacal feeling had inherited from his father, who had bet away a large estate during his life, dying only just in time to save himself from actual starvation, had in the first instance made him short of money.

In order to retrieve his position he bet still more heavily, and again lost. Ill luck pursued him from day to day, till at last, unable to meet the demands made upon him, he entered him in the face; and exposure, he knew, meant prompt dismissal from Mr. Vyse's service. In this dilemma he stole the cash box, and it was only when gloating over his ill-gotten gains that the idea of saddling Acland with the theft occurred to him. Irresolute in this, as in everything else, he wavered some time before finally deciding to commit this last piece of villainy, but his evil genius, as always, prevailed.

"Curse the fellow!" he ground out between his clenched teeth. "If only I can rob him! If only I can make Elsie despise and loathe him! What is he that he should steal her from me? I'll win her yet in spite of him."

It was Mr. Vyse's custom to go for a walk, unless the day was very wet, between the hours of 12 and 1. He usually went down the high road straight out of the town for a mile, returning home over the fields and through a small plantation. A few days after the loss of the cash box, he took the accustomed path. Dot, his favorite dog, half pointer, half retriever, accompanied him. In the middle of the plantation Dot suddenly sniffed the air, then bounded in among the bushes, and pointed.

"Dot! Dot!" called his master. "Here, good dog, come back." But Dot had evidently found something, and refused to be shouted off.

Mr. Vyse made his way to where the dog was standing. Up sprang a fine adult and rabbit away. Dot in hot pursuit. But Mr. Vyse heeded neither rabbit nor dog. His gaze was riveted on the place from which the rabbit had jumped. Thus for a moment or two, he stood, then, with a peculiar smile on his face, he wheeled round and walked briskly home. Some three days later Richard Starkie was summoned to his chief's presence. He went, trembling—fearing he knew not what.

"Starkie," said Mr. Vyse, "you have been in my employ longer than any other of my clerks, therefore I think it only right to make you my spokesman to them. I wish you, then, to tell them on my behalf that I attribute the disappearance of my cash box to none of them, that I am quite convinced of their innocence."

Richard Starkie paled slightly. Had his scheme to ruin young Acland failed miserably? It seemed so. But he replied, with apparent frankness; "I am very pleased to hear that Robert Acland has cleared himself, sir."

"He has done so most completely," rejoined Mr. Vyse. "I have a very high opinion of young Acland, Starkie."

"So have I, sir," he returned glibly, while he inwardly cursed the man to whom he spoke thus fandingly. "It has caused me great pain to think that he could possibly be a thief."

"Is it possible that this man is innocent after all?" wondered Mr. Vyse. "If not, his hypocrisy is simply astounding; but I shall soon know the truth." And a grim smile passed over his face.

"Just one more question, Starkie," Mr. Vyse, looking straight into his clerk's eyes, which met his own unflinchingly, "and this is for your ear alone, Starkie; in the theft of my cash box I have sustained a far greater loss than anyone else could possibly suffer. It is a box of peculiar construction—in fact, it had a false bottom, and in that false bottom, Starkie, there were notes to the value of £700. I had placed them there only two days before I was robbed."

"Of course, you have the numbers, sir?"

"Why, yes, I have the numbers, Starkie; but an expert thief—and I imagine from the coolness and audacity of the robbery that he must have been the thief one—finds no difficulty in changing stolen paper. He knows where to take it and obtain a good price."

When Richard Starkie went back to his office after receiving his employer's message, his breast was torn by two emotions—baffled spite and greed of further gold.

"I will destroy him yet," he thought of Bob Acland. "He's escaped me for now, but I shall not be for long. Elsie Venner shall never be his wife. I am a good plotter, friend Bob, and though you wriggle out of my hands a hundred times, I will have you the hundred and first."

"Poor old buffer"—his mind reverting to the man whose presence he had just left—"you little guessed that in making a confidant of me you were telling the thief how to further enrich himself. But I will repay you—it will be very handy just now—and I suppose the commission would not be more than £200. Markby's getting very restive for his money, and I could pay him and still have a nice little balance in hand. You're in luck's way, Dick, my boy; fortune favors you."

If to be standing in the darkon the brink of a precipice without knowing it is to be in luck's way, then Richard Starkie was, indeed, in that enviable position.

Bending down amid the bramble and brush wood which formed the undergrowth of a small plantation, groping among the briers and grasses, Richard Starkie was searching for the cash box.

"I know I flung it somewhere here," he muttered, fiercely. "Where can the thing be? Ah!" and his hand at last alighted on some metal, "here you are! I was just beginning to think that jadish Fortune had served me a scurvy trick. Well," clasping the box to his bosom, "you've been a good friend to me, and I'll treat you as lightly as possible. Come, let's away—merciful powers! What's that?"

Four strong arms had seized him from behind and were holding him with a vise-like grip; and, before he knew what was really taking place, he felt the cold steel on his wrists and realized that he was a prisoner—a detected thief who had blindly fallen into a skillfully laid trap.

The arrest of Richard Starkie had not become generally known when Mr. Vyse called together his clerks on the following morning, and communicated to them the news that his confidential servant was in jail. Great was the wonderment manifested.

"And I wish to say, gentlemen," he wound up, "that in consideration of his past services to me I should not have prosecuted Starkie had he not endeavored by every means in his power, from motives of personal spite, to fix the theft on one of yourselves."

What that one was soon became public property, as also the motive power of Starkie's animosity.

At the ensuing assizes Starkie was sent into penal servitude for five years, regretted by none of his fellow workers, for, owing to his insolent, overbearing manners, he had never been a favorite.

What thoughts filled the poor wretch's mind as he heard his doom from the judge's lips? Who can tell? But if I am any reader of human character, the bitterest pang he suffered was in knowing that the rival he hated had stepped into the place rendered vacant by his arrest, and that Elsie Venner would ere long be that rival's wife.—Tit-Bits.

BUTTERFLIES.

Out in the churchyard the grass grew deep,
Where the peaceful dead were lying;
Over their quiet and holy sleep
The butterflies white were flying.
And one little child was playing there
In the churchyard, sunny and still;
He'd wandered away, in his innocent glee,
From the little white house on the hill.
"Butterflies, butterflies!" cried the child,
As he played on the grassy sod,
"You're the souls of the little dead children here Fluttering up to God!"

Out in the churchyard a place new-made
Waits for the innocent dead;
Still, for the sweet little sleeper, there
Waited his quiet bed.
And a long farewell they say over him,
With kisses on lip and brow;
And with flowers sweet at head and feet,
He rests from his mother now.
Butterflies flutter above her head,
As she kneels on the grassy sod,
And the little white soul of her precious one
Flutters away to God.

A MERE SUGGESTION.

BY A. HOOD.

Phyllis was young and very happy, and just a little excited, and perhaps a trifle proud, because she was engaged before her friend Maud, who was at least three years older. But, of course, she was very careful not to give herself airs, or in any way hurt her happiness in poor Maud's face; indeed, she was really anxious that her friend should be as fortunate as herself. At least as fortunate as was possible, for naturally there was only one man in the world, and he was to be her own husband. But there were plenty of other men, really quite nice ones—she must see what she could do for Maud.

They were sitting together, Maud had come to tea with her friend to talk about her trousseau and the presents.

"Yes, I am very happy," said Phyllis, presently; she had been giving Maud a list of the wedding presents.

"You must be!" said Maud. "That silver tea service is lovely! You are a lucky girl," and she sighed a little.

Phyllis was reminded of her friend's lonely state. "I do wish you were as happy, dear," she said. "But I believe you will be very soon," and she smiled meaningly.

"Why? What makes you say that?" asked Maud.

Now Phyllis had meant nothing definite, she only wished to be comforting, and vaguely suggest. There was no actual prospective lover in her mind; but she could not bear to raise poor Maud's hopes only to destroy them the next moment; so she smiled again mysteriously, as she ran over in her thoughts every probable suitor.

"I wish you wouldn't look so knowing, Phyllis," said Maud, impatiently. "Who were you—whom did you mean?"

"Well, I mustn't say; besides it was only an idea—a mere suggestion."

Maud looked disappointed, and it distressed Phyllis' kind heart, so she said, yielding to a sudden impulse: "Don't you think George Stratton seems rather fond of you, Maud, dear?"

"No, I don't; I never noticed anything—at least—" and she paused and blushed a little, and wondered if Phyllis had any good reason for her suggestion.

"There! Now you know you have thought so!" said Phyllis, delighted to find she had made so good a guess. "Don't pretend you were blind, and he is such a nice fellow, nearly as nice as Arthur."

"But I don't believe he means any thing; you know what men are," said Maud; and she sighed as she remembered the fickleness and flightiness of men, and she looked wistfully at her friend.

Phyllis answered the look boldly. "Some men are," said she; "but not Mr. Stratton."

"I don't know; he has always been very friendly, and all that, and perhaps if I had encouraged him—"

"Why, of course; every man wants encouragement. I expect he has been miserable," said Phyllis. "And you do like him?"

Maud put down her cup, and arranged the cushions at her back before she answered, and Phyllis felt quite anxious for her reply. "I suppose I like him," she said at last, with proper maiden hesitation.

"Then why are you so horrid to him? I expect you've snubbed him dread fully."

Phyllis was full of sympathy for the young man who had proposed to her friend she was now assured. Maud laughed; she imagined she had been cruel to Mr. Stratton.

"Oh, it won't hurt him!" she said, carelessly. "I can't help laughing at the men when they say silly things, can you? Even George—Mr. Stratton."

"Oh, call him George. I'm sure you think of him as George," Phyllis said, gayly. "And I'm sure you would be awfully sorry if he went away and you never saw him again."

"I might get over it," Maud answered, with the light indifference of a conqueror.

"No, you wouldn't; you're really very fond of him. Now do tell me, dear, when did you first suspect he cared for you?"

Maud could not give an exact date; indeed, had she told the truth she would have said "five months ago;" but then that was the very last thing she began to believe she had known of George's attachment for a long while. The feminine imagination is such an adaptable thing that it can evolve a life-long devotion from the chance remark of a friend. So she answered carelessly: "I hardly know; gradually, from different things. He was always at the houses I went to, at the Jervis-Carters, and—and everywhere."

"You will be kind to him, won't you Maud? Wouldn't it be delightful if we were both married on the same day?" said Phyll's.

"Oh, there is plenty of time for that; besides, he may not care about me now, though—"

"You will have yourself to blame if he doesn't," Phyllis said, severely.

"Do you really think so? I don't want to be horrid," Maud exclaimed, with some anxiety.

"You must be very nice to him then. Let him see you do care for him just a little. Oh, I do want you to be as happy as I am, dear!" cried Phyllis.

"A sensible woman can be just as happy unmarried," said Maud, who had dabbled in serious literature.

"Nonsense, you know she can't; and we're not going to discuss those silly questions, we had much better settle about the bridesmaids and where we shall live. We'll live somewhere near each other, won't we?"

"Yes, dear, of course. Chelsea is nice, isn't it? George has a married sister there, I think, that might be a drawback," answered Maud.

"It would be," assented Phyllis; "Arthur likes Campden Hill."

"But after all, Phyllis, I'm not at all sure I care enough about George—"

"Now answering for Arthur," exclaimed Phyllis. "Just when everything was settled. Look here, Maud; write him a nice little note and ask him to lunch or tea, or something; your mother won't mind, and we'll be at home on Sunday, and then—then you can arrange things, you know. That will be the best way, for it is silly to pretend you aren't in love with him."

"Shall I really write?" said Maud, with a little hesitation.

"Certainly; here are the paper and pen and everything. Write it here, and I'll send Jane to the post with it, at once."

Maud succumbed to her friend's determination and wrote a carefully-worded note to Mr. Stratton, in which she gently reproached him for not having been to see her mother and herself lately, and she said how glad they would be if he came to lunch on the following Sunday.

Phyllis was satisfied with it, and rang the bell for the maid. "Now, darling, everything will come right," she said. "How happy he'll be! I may call him George, too, may'n I?"

Maud blushed and said she supposed she might, and just then the servant came in.

"Take this to the post at once, please, Jane," said Phyllis.

"Yes, miss, and this letter has just come for you," answered the maid.

Phyllis took the letter and the girl left the room with Maud's note.

"Whom is your letter from? I seem to know the writing," said Maud.

"Only from Ethel Jervis-Carter; she does write to me sometimes about nothing in particular," answered Phyllis. She had not read many lines of the letter before she gave a little cry of dismay.

"What's the matter?" asked Maud, seeing her emotion.

"Nothing," stammered Phyllis. "At least, nothing interesting; and I don't believe it's true."

"Don't be silly, Phyllis; tell me what it is?"

"There; read it!" said Phyllis, and Maud read—

"You will be glad to hear of my engagement to George Stratton; you and Maud know him, so you will understand how happy I am. We hope to be married soon—" Maud read more, she was very pale.

"Thanks," she said, giving the paper back. "It is very interesting."

"I'm so horribly sorry—" began Phyllis.

"For having made a fool of me? You ought to be," said her friend, stonily.

"I never meant—" said Phyllis.

"You made me write that wretched note, I shall never forgive you," said Maud, drawing on her gloves, and rising from her chair with the air of casting the dust of her friend's house from her feet.

"It was a mere suggestion," Phyllis pleaded.

"It was extremely bad taste."

"But you agreed with me!"

"No; it was entirely your doing," answered Maud. "However, of course, it does not really affect me at all."

"Of course not," said Phyllis.

Maud swept out of the room, went home, and wrote a second note to Mr. Stratton to congratulate him on the delightful news she had just heard, and would he bring Ethel with him to lunch on Sunday?

Phyllis remorsefully resolved that she would never again try to provide consolation for desolate friends.—Madame.

Not Disloyal.

A number of years ago, in a section where the methods of holding elections were notoriously loose, a man who had in his employ a large number of negroes was nominated for a municipal office. One of his workmen was an especial favorite, and the candidate was a good deal surprised to hear that this particular negro had refused the other ticket. Summoning him to the office, he said:

"Jerry, haven't I always treated you well?"

"Fus' rate, boss. Fs allus said dat, I has. 'Bout de cleanest white folks dat is."

"Then why did you vote back on me?"

"When does you mean?"

"At de election."

"I didn't go back on yer."

"There's no use of trying to conceal it. You voted against me at the election."

"'Deed I didn't, suh. Dem fellers come ter me an' dey wanted my vote. An' I wasn't goin' to lose de chance ter do sumpin' tow'ds cripplin' 'em financially."

"So you did vote for the other man?"

"Yassuh. I was under contract ter do dat much, an' I couldn' break mer promise. But I onlyvoted foh him once, an' I done voted foh you nine times, suh."—Detroit Free Press.

Prone to Error.

"He seems to be a little empty in the upper story," said the one who knew him not.

"Beg your pardon, but you are entirely wrong," said the one who knew him well. "He is full to the muzzle."

Which shows how prone to error one may be on a superficial information.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

WHITE HOUSE GOSSIP.

Perquisites and Pleasures of Our Chief Magistrate.

Uncle Sam Pays for His Butter and His Housekeeper, But He Has to Pay His Barber Out of His Own Pocket.

[Special Washington Letter.]

Although considerable was recently told in a special letter concerning the routine life, the salary and expenses of the president of the United States, there are many other interesting details concerning the chief magistracy, and the perquisites and pleasures of high official position.

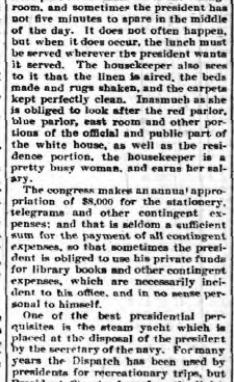
In the first place, the president is given a handsome residence called the executive mansion, but more commonly known as the white house. It is really a white house, constructed of pure marble. Moreover, the grounds surrounding the presidential residence are ample and beautiful. The lawns, trees, flowers, fountains, conservatory and house furnishings are supplied and cared for at the expense of the government.

One of the funny things during the taking of the census of 1890 was the official return made by Benjamin Harrison. He filled out a regular blank, declaring that he was a citizen of the United States, a lawyer by profession, that he was temporarily residing in Washington, that his income was $50,000 per annum, and that it was sufficient to support his family. He also certified that the house in which he resided was "not mortgaged."

Although the expenses of state dinners are paid out of the president's salary, all of the table equipments, including the silver, glassware, china, mirrors and floral decorations are furnished by the government. Congress provides appropriations to replace worn-out or broken furniture, linen and other household necessities. During the Hayes administration a china dinner set was paid for by the government, and it cost $5,000. The white house butler and housekeeper are paid for by the government, but the president is obliged to hire his own cook and other household servants.

The butler is usually called the steward, and he receives a regular salary for looking after the domestic affairs of the executive mansion. He buys the ice, coal and groceries, and also attends to the marketing. He sees to it that the gas and electric lights are always in order, so that the president is thereby relieved of many little household details which were originally looked after by Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Jackson and their successors down to the time of President Polk, who first induced the congress to make an appropriation for a white house butler. This official is also an important functionary in that he relieves the wife of the president of many details of housekeeping which ordinarily would fall upon the mistress of the household.

The housekeeper is paid a regular salary by the government, and it is her duty to superintend the chambermaids and supervise the minor details of house-keeping. She sees to it that the kitchen and dining-rooms are kept in order; that the meals are served on time; that the president's lunch is served in the dining-room, the cabinet room, in his private office, or in the library, wherever he may choose to have it brought. Presidents Arthur and President Cleveland have often had their lunches served where it was most handy for them to partake, while attending to pressing business. In order that you may understand this little household irregularity, you must understand that it takes five minutes or more to go from the business part of the mansion to the dining-room, and sometimes the president has not five minutes to spare in the middle of the day. It does not often happen, but when it does occur, the lunch must be served wherever the president wants it served. The housekeeper also sees to it that the linen is aired, the beds made and rugs shaken, and the carpets kept swept and dusted every day. She also is obliged to look after the red parlor, blue parlor, east room and other portions of the official and public part of the white house, as well as the residence portion, the housekeeper is a pretty busy woman, and earns her salary.



THE WHITE HOUSE COOK.

The congress makes an annual appropriation of $8,000 for the stationery, telegrams and other contingent expenses; and that is seldom a sufficient sum for the payment of all contingent expenses, so that sometimes the president is obliged to use his private funds for library books and other contingent expenses. It is generally the incident to his office, and in no sense personal to himself.

One of the best presidential perquisites is the steam yacht which is placed at the disposal of the president by the secretary of the navy. For many years the Dispatch has been used by presidents for recreationary trips, but President Cleveland prefers the lighthouse tender Violet, a little boat which cannot only traverse the Atlantic coast, but can run into shallow creeks and bayous where good hunting abounds. President Arthur and President Cleveland so often used the Dispatch for cruises around Chesapeake bay, and occasionally for trips to New York and the English coast. The Tallapoosa is a swift sloop which was often used by President Hayes; but the Tallapoosa sunk in collision with a Texas fishing smack off the Massachusetts coast, and the Dispatch has been the official yacht for the presidents ever since.

Do you remember that when Benjamin Harrison was president he had a grandson named Benny McKee? He was no better and no better than other little boys, but the newspapers were filled with stories of Baby McKee, and his sayings and doings. One morning President Harrison went aboard the Dispatch for a trip down the Potomac, and took his family with him. Of course Baby McKee was there, too, in compliance with the request of the president. When at the yard, President Harrison came on board and began to make a little speech to the men, when Baby McKee inside the yard began to cry and howl over some trouble. He yelled and yelled and yelled, until he broke up the speech of his grandfather, who went below and pacified the kid, and then came back to conclude his speech to the workmen. When the next session of congress met in 1891, President Harrison did not take Baby McKee with him. He consequently did not have his oratory disturbed by competition with the vocal lungs of his precocious grandson. During the present administration a secretary of the navy has made use of the Dispatch for his own pleasure trips because President Cleveland preferred the Violet and the Oneida.

If he were disposed to accept them the president might have many perquisites in the form of presents from the people. There is a man in Colorado who sends a splendid turkey to the president every Christmas day, and another for the New Year dinner at the white house. He has been doing this for a score of years. It is generally understood, however, that presidents never accept presents, and of course the custom is generally observed in practically discontinued. Once upon a time there was a Virginian who sent to President Andrew Jackson a cheese so large that it would not go through any of the doors of the house and the windows and Gen. Jackson had it cut out on the big front lawn and invited the citizens of the little village of Washington to come and help themselves. At that time there were not over 20,000 people in all in the District of Columbia.

The president who has a family and who loves his children must have a high appreciation of the spacious grounds about the white house, in which the children may play with safety and in safety. The wide-spreading trees, the velvety lawn, the fountains, the flowers, are all surrounded by a high iron fence and every gate is guarded by a watchman. There children may play without fear of danger or accident, while the children of tens of thousands of other dwellers in cities must be cooped up in their houses or play in the shapeless cramped little yards. The mansion itself and the surrounding grounds ought to be regarded as among the president's best official perquisites.

Senators when in Washington have free shaves and shines in the senate barber shop at the capitol building; but the president is obliged to pay his own barber and bootblack. He has no perquisites of an unnecessary or questionable nature. The fish commissioner furnishes the white house aquarium with gold fish and other fancy fishes, while the horticultural and agricultural departments furnish all varieties of flowers in addition to those which are grown in the large conservatory of the white house; but these little decorations and ornamentive beauties are left to the superintendence of the president's wife; for fancy fish and flowers are more pleasing to the feminine than the masculine eyes.

I once knew a president whose position proved to be unpopular during his incumbency, and very few senators or representatives called upon him. When thinking of his loneliness in his high position, and contrasting the levees of other presidents who daily received the official and social calls of representatives and officials of this nation, it has occurred to me that the friendship and admiration of the people is a prerequisite of the president which is obtainable by no other American citizen in any other position, or under any other circumstances. Undoubtedly the president who was shunned by his own party leaders and ignored by the leaders of the opposition, would gladly have purchased the friendship of the people at a greater perquisite of his office than the salary and all other emoluments combined. The three great attributes of Washington are known to all, but it seems to me that while it was a pleasure to have been "first in war," and also to have been "first in peace," his greatest delight must have been in a realization of the fact that he was "first in the hearts of his countrymen."

SMITH D. FRY.

THE PUBLIC'S MEMORY.

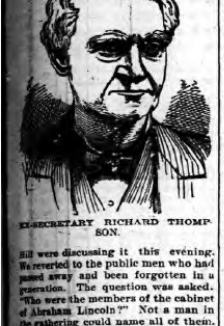
Is the Most Fickle Thing of Which We Know.

Statesmen Who, a Few Years Ago, Controlled the Destinies of the Nation, Are Now Not Even Remembered by Name.

[Special Washington Letter.]

"The people forget very quickly," said Senator Hill one evening when he was being complimented for his defense of his party. "They are quickly appreciative and ready to applaud when they think is right but they very soon forget public services."

That is very true, and several gentlemen who heard the remark of Senator



EX-SECRETARY RICHARD THOMPSON.

Hill were discussing it this evening. We referred to the public men who had passed away and been forgotten in a generation. The question was asked, "Who were the members of the cabinet of Abraham Lincoln?" Not a man in the gathering could name all of them. William H. Seward, secretary of state, had so much to do with our foreign relations during the civil war that his name was readily recalled. Edwin M. Stanton, secretary of war, had his name in the newspapers every day, and hence became so prominent that his name was easily recalled. But Salmon P. Chase, secretary of the treasury, was seldom heard of in comparison with the others, and only one man present recalled his name. The other members of the Lincoln cabinet were forgotten, until a veteran sailor reminded the gentlemen that Gideon Welles was secretary of the navy.

Gen. Grant was president for two terms, and nobody in our party could give the names of the members of his cabinet. They were all great men, and all served their country well and distinction, but their names do not stand forth prominently in the memory of men: so that a gathering of gentlemen who are familiar with public men for many years could not give their names. Grant was the central figure of his own administrations. The members of his cabinet who were unfortunate were recalled, but none of the others.

President Hayes had a cabinet composed of strong men, and their names are more easily recalled, because it has not been so very long since they were here with us. Can you name them all, or any of them? William M. Evarts was secretary of state; John Sherman was secretary of the treasury. Richard Thompson, of Indiana, the venerable statesman who still lives, was secretary of the navy. David M. Key was postmaster general, and is remembered chiefly because he was the first southern man given a cabinet position after the civil war. George W. McCrary, the author of the electoral commission bill, was secretary of war. Carl Schurz was secretary of the interior, and Gen. Charles Devins, of Massachusetts, was attorney general.

Mr. Evarts was in the senate for six years, and then retired to private life. John Sherman has been in the senate ever since, and has twice been a presidential candidate. McCrary, Key and Devins are dead. Carl Schurz is an editor.

If these names were not mentioned in particular, who could recall them without great mental effort? Very few.

President Garfield had a strong cabinet, but it was broken up after his death, and a new cabinet was formed by President Arthur. You might find it difficult to recall the names of the members of either one of those cabinets. Blaine was secretary of state in Garfield's cabinet, and Frelinghuysen was secretary of state in Arthur's cabinet. Can you guess the names of the others? And yet, it is only 15 years since both of those cabinets were formed. You will probably recall the fact that Robert T. Lincoln, son of Abraham Lincoln, was secretary of war by President Garfield, and was retained in Arthur's cabinet. He was also minister to Great Britain during Harrison's administration.

But, as a test of the truthfulness of the fact that leading men are soon forgotten, how many can to-day give the names of the members of Cleveland's cabinet during his first administration? It was on or about March 6, 1885, that the first Cleveland cabinet was appointed. Can you name the great men who stepped to the helm and aided Cleveland in guiding the ship of state? They were all men of superior ability. Yet is it possible that they have been forgotten in so short a space of time?

Thomas F. Bayard was secretary of state. He went into private life and would have remained there, but for the second election of Cleveland, when he was sent to succeed Lincoln as minister to Great Britain. He could never have gone to the senate. Daniel Manning was secretary of the treasury, and died while in office, from overwork. His successor, Fairchild, went into the obscurity of private life, and was entirely forgotten by the public. Senator Garland, of Arkansas, one of the brilliant men of the south, became Cleveland's attorney general, and at the close of his term became a claim agent in Washington, where he still resides, entirely forgotten except by the people of his own state. Secretary of War Endicott is forgotten, except by his Massachusetts friends. William C. Whitney, secretary of the navy, is a man of millions, and hence has kept himself before the people. Senator Lamar, of Mississippi, secretary of the interior, was made an associate justice of the supreme court, and died while in that position. Postmaster General Vilas became secretary of the interior to succeed Lamar, and Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan, became postmaster general. Dickinson has kept in public life, or in the public mind, by reason of his attachment to Cleveland and his fortunes. Vilas secured an election to the senate, and hence has not fallen away from public view. But, as a matter of fact, the second election of Cleveland had much to do with keeping some of his cabinet ministers before the public.

Who can name the members of the cabinet who were appointed by President Harrison, in 1889? Think of it, only seven years since they were appointed, and only three years since they went out of office: and how many of the members of that cabinet can you name? You may agitate your memory by scratching your head or tapping your forehead; but you will realize the truth of Rip Van Winkle's assertion, "how soon we are forgotten when we are gone," when you try to remember the names of those distinguished men. Can you tell who was secretary of state, under Harrison's administration? It was James G. Blaine. His secretary of war was Redfield Proctor, of Vermont, who resigned, and was succeeded by Stephen B. Elkins, of West Virginia. Both of those gentlemen are now members of the senate. William Windom, of Minnesota, was secretary of the treasury, and died suddenly while delivering a public address in New York city. He was succeeded by ex-Gov. Charles Foster, of Ohio, who served until the close of his term. John W. Noble, of Missouri, was secretary of the interior, and John Wanamaker, of Pennsylvania, was postmaster-general. Probably the most popular member of the Harrison cabinet was Secretary of Agriculture Rusk, whom everybody called Uncle Jerry. The farmers will all remember the celebrated "book" which was franked by Uncle Jerry. Hundreds of thousands of copies of it have been issued by authority of congress. William Henry Harrison Miller was Harrison's attorney-general.

Few to-day ever think of Benjamin Harris Brewster, who was attorney-general, and the most picturesque figure ure in the Arthur administration. He was a man of marked peculiarities in dress, and his features were disfigured by an accident; but he was a man of superior ability. Ex-Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, was Arthur's postmaster-general, and died in office. He was succeeded by Gen. Gresham, who was postmaster-general for nearly two years, then became secretary of the treasury, and was appointed a district judge; but afterwards became secretary of state in the second Cleveland administration, and died in office.

Frank Hatton cannot be forgotten while any of his personal friends live, for they will keep his memory ever green. But he ceased to be known by the general public after he ceased to be postmaster general. He built up a great newspaper in Washington city, and died while in the editorial chair, being stricken suddenly while apparently in the prime of life.

Some of these cabinet ministers cherished presidential ambitions. Chase wanted to succeed Abraham Lincoln, but Lincoln made him an associate justice of the supreme court. Simon B. Washburne, Don Cameron, Blaine, Bristow, Hamilton Fish, Sherman and Bob Lincoln all listened to the buzzing of the presidential bee; but they fell short of nominations. Whoever to-day hears of Landaman, Williams, Columbus Delano, Ackerman, Speed or MacVeagh?

What is said of members of the cabinet may also be said of many men who filled the forum of discussion in either house of congress, and then passed away from public view. It is not that republics are ungrateful, but that the people are forgetful. They have not space in their memories for all of the great men who rise to the surface in the maelstrom of political affairs. Moreover, the people of this country are not hero worshipers. There is no man so great in this republic but that the people feel that he can be spared at any time, and from the farm, the counting, law office or the business circles some man as good or better may be expected to arise and take his place.

Our people are loyal to their friends, and follow their political leaders with wonderful fidelity. But they never become enamored of public men, but constantly feel that "all men are born free and equal," and hence they straightway forget them when they have rendered and been paid for such public services as the people desire of them.

Career of the Indianapolis Nominee for Vice President.

Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner was born in Hart county, southern Kentucky, in 1823, and still lives in the log house in which he was born and which was built by his father over 100 years ago. He has improved the original cabin. He has never lived away from his home except when governor of the state. He was the democratic "sound money" candidate for the senate before the legislature last winter.

Gen. Buckner is worth over $1,000,000, most of it in real estate. He graduated from West Point in 1844. He entered the army in the Mexican war and was brevetted first lieutenant for gallantry at Contreras and Churubusco. He was promoted to a captaincy for gallantry at Molino del Ray. He remained at West Point as assistant instructor of infantry tactics until March, 1855, when he resigned.

When the civil war came on he resided in Kentucky and was made adjutant general of the state, with command of the state guard. Later he entered the confederate army.

During the siege of Fort Donelson he was third in command of the fort. Gen. Grant surrounded the fort on all sides, and after the attacks of February 13 and 14 the confederate forces saw that further resistance would be fruitless. The senior generals turned the command over to Gen. Buckner and in the evening departed by boats. Gen. Buckner, quickly realizing that his situation was hopeless, at once decided to surrender. He wrote a letter to Gen. Grant, suggesting an armistice until noon of February 15, in order that terms of surrender might be agreed upon by the appointed commissioners. To this Gen. Grant replied, and the surrender was soon accomplished.

At the close of the war Gen. Buckner devoted himself to his business interests of farming and real estate. He has been twice married.

WANTS HIGH OFFICE.

Frank S. Black, Republican Candidate for Governor of New York.

The nomination of Hon. Frank S. Black as the republican candidate for governor of New York was a genuine surprise to a great majority of the people. It seemed almost certain at the outset of the convention, says Leslie's Weekly, that its choice would fall in another direction. It became apparent, however, to the party leaders that either one of the selections which seemed the more probable would be likely to alienate the support of a very large body of republicans; and as the outcome of this condition new forces asserted themselves, and Mr. Black was chosen as best representing the principles of that element of the convention which, while in sympathy with the so-called machine, was hardly prepared to slap in the face the opponents of the dominant organization. Mr. Black is not altogether unknown to politics. His participation in the movement for the overthrow of the desperate gang of bullies who had so long made a travesty of elections in the city of Troy, and especially his effort to bring to justice the murderers of Robert Ross, the young republican watcher at the polls who was slain while in the performance of his duty, had brought him into conspicuous notice. There is no doubt at all that it was largely due to his efforts that certain amendments were made in the election laws which are calculated to put an end to the frauds which so long prevailed in our populous communities. The blank-ballot law of 1895 was one of the results of the agitation which was begun at Troy and vigorously prosecuted throughout the state.

Mr. Black is a member of the present congress, having been elected in 1894. He is a graduate of Dartmouth college, has long made the law his chief work and great self-denial. He is now in the 44th year of his age. Those who know him best believe that he will bring to the discharge of the duties of the office to which he aspires genuine conscientiousness of purpose, with an intellectual equipment adequate to their creditable performance.

[Special Letter.]

Despite its terribly tragic features, the situation at Constantinople is not without its amusing side. After the Mussulman fanatics had murdered 5,000 Christians in cold blood and robbed every Christian domicile to which they could force an entrance, the representatives of the six Berlin treaty powers—Great Britain, Russia, Germany, France, Austria-Hungary and Italy—insisted upon a thorough investigation of the massacre. The sultan, in compliance with their request, appointed a commission, consisting of some of the most notorious Mohammedan fanatics, and this commission, in an incredibly short space of time, filed a report exonerating the Turkish mob of civilians and soldiers. An official note was then sent to the six powers, which, in addition to the decision of the commission, contained the information that the ambassadors had misinformed their governments and failed to give a truthful version of the unfortunate affair. The half dozen diplomats, thus officially stigmatized as liars, at once commenced to exchange notes with each other, and in this pleasing, but profitless, occupation they are engaged at the present time. Meanwhile the heads of the foreign offices at Berlin, London, Vienna, Rome and Paris are giving out hints about what is to be done with the "unspeakable Turk," the latest rumor being that Germany and Austria, with the consent of France, will insist upon the abdication of Sultan Abdul Hamid. Another report is to the effect that the young Turkish element, which, although weak in number, is strong in influence, will request the sheik-ul-Islam, the highest religious officer of the Moslem realm, to pronounce the sultan insane and to declare the throne vacant. Both these rumors are interesting, but it is more than doubtful that anything will come of them.

The British Lion Is Excited.

The massacre of 5,000 Armenians at Constantinople the Turkish commission attributes to the strange folly of a band of Armenian revolutionists who, armed with revolvers and dynamite bombs, took possession of the Ottoman bank on August 26, killed the police officers on duty, and held the buildings for some hours against the Turkish soldiers. The participants in this unique raid surrendered on condition of their lives being spared, and were sent out of the country. The infuriated soldiers, maddened by religious fanaticism, then began a raid on the entire Armenian population, and slaughtered men, women and children, with the sanction of the civil and military authorities, until the foreign ambassadors put an end to the carnival of blood by dispatching an emphatic joint note to the sultan. A subsequent communication led to the appointment of the Turkish whitewashing committee and the porte's impertinent question to the powers: "What are you going to do about it?" The only action which has done anything at all is Great Britain, which has massed a powerful fleet within short sailing distance of Constantinople and instructed its ambassador, Sir Philip Currie, to notify the sultan that a repetition of outrages against his Christian subjects would constitute sufficient cause for England to act single-handed in their defense. The only action taken by the ambassadors of the other signatory powers is the strengthening of the defense of their respective embassies so as to be ready for a general Turkish outbreak, which may occur at any moment.

THE PRINCE OF NAPLES.

Dreibund Proposed by England.

While England's aggressiveness appears chivalrous, yet it does not amount to much. Russia, which is really the dominant factor in Turkish affairs, adheres with Muscovite tenacity to the policy of procrastination and inactivity inaugurated by Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky, whose recent sudden death paralyzed concerted action. Lord Salisbury knows perfectly well that the first shot fired at the defenses of the Bosphorus by the British fleet would embroil England in a war with Russia, and possibly France, and its present isolated position would make such a conflict decidedly dangerous. The English press comments very freely on this international aspect of the crisis, and one journal, the St. James' Gazette, suggests in sober earnest the formation of a new "Dreibund" consisting of Great Britain, the United States and Italy. It believes that the American people would regard with enthusiasm the spectacle of the union jack and the stars and stripes floating side by side in the Mediterranean in back up the joint demand for the rescue of the oppressed Armenians and the suppression of Moslem tyranny. This sounds very well, of course, but the American nation is not in the humor of pulling England's chestnuts out of the oriental furnace, and the formation of a new "Dreibund," with the United States as a participant, is a chimerical proposition. The Washington government will continue to protect its interests in Turkey single-handed, and insist upon the recognition of the rights of its citizens, but it is not probable that it will take any part in the political movements of any of the European powers interested in the final settlement of the so-called "eastern" question.

State of Affairs in Italy.

With Italy the case is different. It is a country on the verge of bankruptcy. Its commerce and industry are paralyzed; its people taxed beyond the limits of endurance; its military prestige sadly impaired by the defeat of its Abyssinian army. In spite of patriotic appeals to the nation the continuance of the war in Africa elicited no enthusiastic response and the government has been compelled to make peace with King Menelik of Abyssinia, who is to receive a heavy indemnity in cash and a guarantee that Italy will not attempt to extend its territorial possessions on the Red Sea coast. Humiliating as was the treaty, its insulting character was further accentuated by the condition that before its ratification it should receive the sanction of the czar of Russia. That imperial personage, after some delay, gave his consent, and the document has just been signed in due form by the representatives of Italy, Abyssinia and Russia. The ire of the upper class Italians has been aroused by this latest exhibition of Russian arrogance, and they are quite in the humor of participating in a war against the Muscovite empire, the success of which would restore Italian prestige and perpetuate for several generations the tottering dynasty of the house of Savoy.

Prince of Naples and His Bride.

Viewed in this light the recent engagement of Victor Emmanuel, prince of Naples, and heir to the Italian throne, to Princess Helene of Montenegro is a political event of much importance. The prince, who is now 27 years of age, visited most of the European courts a year or so ago for the purpose of selecting a bride. At one time it was reported that he was to marry Princess Maud, daughter of the prince of Wales, but that young lady did not look with favor upon her undersized wooer. Princess Helene is described as a young woman of remarkable physical beauty, with large dark eyes, masses of blue-black hair, and a dazzling, transparent complexion. Like most Montenegrin women she is "divinely tall," and as her husband-to-be is "miserable small" they will make a funny-looking couple. But in royal circles such little things count for nothing. In a war between Italy and Russia the cooperation of Montenegro might prove of vast advantage. Although the country has a small population (236,000), its fighting strength is not to be despised. Every man is a soldier and expert marksman; and in hand-to-hand conflicts the physically perfect and powerful Montenegrins have never found their equals. Before the conquest by Soleiman II., in 1526, Montenegro was a powerful principality. Early in the eighteenth century the people rebelled and established an hereditary hierarchical government which was confirmed, and finally recognized, by Turkey. By the treaty of Berlin, signed July 13, 1878, the province was declared independent. The present ruler is Prince Nicholas. He has the reputation of being a profligate, a gambler and a heavy drinker, but he is a valiant fighter and a foe not to be despised. His ambition is to add Albania and other Turkish provinces to his principality and establish a kingdom on the Adriatic. The marriage of his daughter to the Italian heir is therefore of as much advantage to him as it is to Italy. Each needs a friendly neighbor and reliable ally, and the proposed union of family interests is immensely popular in both countries.

PRINCESS HELENE OF MONTENEGRO.

Parlor Coaches.

An Appliance That May Revolutionize Sleeping Car Travel.

Can Also Be Used on Steamships When One's Stateroom Will Become a Parlor by Day—Beds That Take Up No Room.

Sleeping on air is the latest innovation in railway travel. The use of compressed air for this purpose will, in the estimation of railway men, eventually revolutionize railway travel and relegate the familiar and somewhat clumsy Wagner and Pullman sleeping cars to the background.

At present the only car completely fitted with compressed air cushions and beds is the private car of Vice President J. N. Schoonmaker, of the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie railroad. These have been found, however, to be not only practicable, but to possess so many advantages over the accommodations of ordinary sleeping and parlor cars that a number of roads are having similarly fitted ones constructed, and before long they will be in general use on many of the great trunk lines of the country.

Col. Schoonmaker's car was built after the plans of L. F. Ruth, the inventor of this latest system of car furnishing. In appearance it does not differ externally from the ordinary private car of railroad officials. The interior by day is that of a handsomely fitted up parlor car.

The customary chairs are seen on either side of the car, and they are covered with plush. When one sits in them, however, a marked difference is noticed from the ordinary car chair. This is explained by the fact that instead of the usual upholstering, the chair cushions are filled with compressed air which lessens, in a great degree, to the occupant, the jolting and jarring of the car when in motion.

During the day no one would for a moment suppose that he was riding in a sleeping car, and it is not until the day coach is transformed into a sleeper that the possibilities of the use of compressed air in this direction are fully realized.

The transformation is affected in this wise: First, the air in the chair cushions is exhausted, the light frame work folded up and slipped into an opening in the side of the car. Thus all the seats in the car is disposed of and it is ready for the beds.

The panels on either side of the windows open outward like a door. On the inside of these panels is a metal track over which is draped a steel, spring-like arrangement which supports the bed. Fitting closely against the side of the car and concealed during the day by the closed panels, is a rubber bag folded after the fashion of an accordeon.

By turning a valve connected with a storage tank beneath the car, compressed air is admitted into the rubber bag, which inflates and forces itself outward from the sides of the car until it rests upon the steel track, and the bed is ready to be made up. The head and foot of the bed are panels which fit also into the side of the car.

When the berth or bed is not desired for use another valve is turned, and the air in the mattress escapes. The mattress itself assumes the appearance of an empty rubber bag, and is drawn back against the side of the car as before. The panels are then closed and the sleeping car is once more ready to become the parlor car for the day traveler.

One great advantage of these appliances is that they can be fitted to steamships and dwellings as well as cars. They are particularly adapted for use in conveyances where economy of space is desirable, as on steamships, where they can be folded into the wall or stateroom partition during the day, and thus give the occupant almost twice the amount of space now available. This is an advantage which many one who has had to endure cramped stateroom accommodations will readily appreciate.

Other considerations which recommend this appliance to railroad men are its cleanliness, extreme lightness, and above all, its cheapness. The ordinary Pullman or Wagner sleeping car is the heaviest and costliest built, not only in its frame but in its fittings. Questions of strength and safety will naturally preclude a lighter frame and therefore the possibility of lighter fittings is of the greatest importance to a railroad company.

The invention of this system will probably, for this reason, mark the most radical change in the development of the sleeping cars, since they were first of all run in the United States, over 30 years ago.

REPUBLICANS' GREAT VICTORY

William McKinley Is Elected President by a Big Majority.

CARRIES MANY OF THE STATES WHICH WERE DOUBTFUL

Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, New York and Ohio in Line—The Empire State's Majority Nearly 300,000—Republicans Also Secure Control of Congress.

New York, Nov. 4.—William McKinley of Ohio and Garret A. Hobart of New Jersey were yesterday elected president and vice-president respectively of the United States, their victory being almost a landslide. The republicans also elected congressmen enough to give them a big majority in the fifty-fifth congress, and they will, therefore, after March 4 next, be in possession of the government. The result in New England was an avalanche. Massachusetts led off with 100,000 plurality for McKinley, Maine and Connecticut followed with 500,000 each. Vermont increased the phenomenal majority given in September, New Hampshire doubled her majority of four years ago, and Rhode Island closes up with 20,000 for McKinley. There was a clean sweep of congressmen, state officers and legislature. Pennsylvania gives McKinley about 300,000 plurality and sends all most solid republican and gold delegation to congress. Maryland joins the victorious column with 25,000 to 30,000 plurality for McKinley and elects five, and perhaps six, republican congressmen. New Jersey, which in 1892 gave Cleveland a plurality of 14,974, has been carried by McKinley and Hobart by a plurality of over 35,000. Virginia shows an apparent plurality for Bryan of about 15,000. The republicans made gains of more than 35,000 in Virginia and later returns may show that they have carried the state. Kentucky has been carried by McKinley by a plurality estimated at 10,000 or more. Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge has been re-elected to congress by the gold democrats and republicans in the seventh district. Bryan carried Georgia by 40,000. The indications are that Tennessee has been carried for McKinley, and by a slight plurality for Tillman, rep., for governor. Josiah Patterson, gold democrat, has been re-elected to congress after a very bitter fight. Indiana gave a plurality of 30,000 for McKinley. The vote in California is very close, but the indications are that the democrats have won. The republicans have secured control of the house of representatives, and very likely of the senate also, by the returns of the election of the various state legislatures.

NEW YORK'S GREAT MAJORITY.

The Empire State Rolled Up 284,000 for McKinley.

New York, Nov. 4.—McKinley and Hobart made a clean sweep of the empire state. The democratic plurality of 45,000 in 1892 was reversed, and the unprecedented plurality of 284,000 has been rolled up for the representatives of republicanism and sound money. Outside of New York city and Brooklyn McKinley has a plurality of 234,000. In every county and every town there have been republican gains which are equal to all that the republican campaign managers claimed in this state. Frank S. Black, the republican candidate for governor, is elected by about 240,000. Timothy L. Woodruff, rep., for lieutenant-governor, and Irving G. Vann for judge of the court of appeals are also elected by nearly as large pluralities. The republicans have elected twenty-eight republican congressmen to the democrats' six. They will have about 110 out of the 150 members of the state assembly, and the election of a republican to succeed David B. Hill in the United States senate is assured.

NEW YORK CITY.

New York, Nov. 4.—McKinley has carried New York city by over 20,000. It is a landslide which carries with it the entire state ticket, congressmen and assemblymen. Tammany's representation at Albany will be very meagre, indeed, this winter. Congressmen McClellan, Velsaige, Cummings and Sulzer appear to have pulled through, but all the other democratic nominees seem to have been beaten. Bryan ran behind in nearly every quarter of the city. He lost most heavily in the' town residence districts, but was also badly behind in the tenement house section. The large workingmen's vote for Bryan which had been predicted by Leader Sheehan and others failed to materialize. Not only did the republicans hold their own in those sections of the city, but they made immense gains in every district. For example, the Seventh and Eighth election districts of the Sixth assembly district are filled with workingmen. Last year both were carried by Gen. King. This time McKinley carried both of them by good majorities. In the Seventh election district the republican gain over last year was 85, and in the Eighth district it was 79. Similar reports come from the uptown districts.

New York Congressmen.

New York, Nov. 4.—New York elects the following congressmen, the democratic representation being the same as in the present congress. In the Syracuse district ex-Congressman Belden defeats Poole, the sitting member, but that will make no difference in the vote on the silver question, as both are sound money men. First district, J. M. Belford, rep.; Second, D. M. Hurley, rep.; Third, F. H. Wilson, rep.; Fourth, I. V. Fischer, rep.; Fifth, C. G. Bennett, rep.; Sixth, J. R. Howe, rep.; Seventh, J. H. G. Vehslage, dem.; Eighth, J. M. Mitchell, rep.; Ninth, T. J. Bradley, dem.; Tenth, A. J. Cummings, dem.; Eleventh, W. Sulzer, dem.; Twelfth, G. B. McClelland, dem.; Thirteenth, R. C. Shannon, rep.; Fourteenth, L. E. Quigg, rep.; Fifteenth, P. B. Low, rep.; Sixteenth, W. L. Ward, rep.; Seventeenth, B. B. Odell, jr., rep.; Eighteenth, J. H. Ketcham, rep.; Nineteenth, A. N. S. Cobkran, rep.; Twentieth, G. N. Southwick, rep.; Twenty-first, D. T. Wilbur, rep.; Twenty-second, D. I. Littauer, rep.; Twenty-third, W. T. Foote, rep.; Twenty-fourth, C. A. Chickering, rep.; Twenty-fifth, J. S. Sherman, rep.; Twenty-sixth, G. W. Ray, rep.; Twenty-seventh, J. J. Beldon, rep.; Twenty-eighth, S. E. Payne, rep.; Twenty-ninth, C. W. Gillett, rep.; Thirtieth, J. W. Wordsworth, rep.; Thirty-first, Henry C. Brewster, rep.; Thirty-second, R. B. Mahany, rep.; Thirty-third, D. S. Alexander, rep.; Thirty-fourth, W. B. Hooker, rep. Totals—Republicans, 29; democrats, 5.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Republicans Elect Twenty Congressmen and Give McKinley a Large Majority.

Philadelphia, Nov. 4.—McKinley carried Pennsylvania by about 175,000 and the republicans elected twenty out of twenty-one congressmen and the legislature which elects a United States senator. The following are the congressmen elected: At Large—Galusha A. Grow, rep.; Samuel A. Davenport, rep. First district, H. H. Bingham, rep.; Second, Robert Adams, jr., rep; Fourth, James Rankin Young, rep.; Fifth, A. Charmer, rep.; Seventh, Irving P. Wagner, rep.; Ninth, Daniel Ermentrut, dem.; Tenth, Marriott Brosius, rep. Eleventh, William Connell, rep. Twelfth, Morgan E. Williams, rep. Fourteenth, Harian E. Olmstead, rep. Fifteenth, James H. Godding, rep. Sixteenth, Horace E. Packer, rep. Eighteenth, Thaddeus M. Mahon, rep. Twenty-first, Edward E. Robbins, rep. Twenty-second, John Dalzell, rep. Twenty-third, William A. Stone, rep. Twenty-fourth, Ernest F. Acheson, rep. Twenty-fifth, James J. Davison, rep. Twenty-seventh, Charles W. Stone, rep.

CONNECTICUT.

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 4.—McKinley has swept the state by about 50,000 plurality in a total vote of 170,000. Lorin A. Cook, of Winsted, rep., is elected governor by a plurality of perhaps 35,000. The four republican congressmen are elected by majorities ranging from 6,000 to 15,000. The legislature will stand 229 republicans to 37 democrats, a majority of 192 on joint ballot, ensuring the election of United States Senator Orville H. Platt to succeed himself. At 11 o'clock last night returns from 111 towns of the 168 in the state show the vote for president to be: McKinley, 45,000; Bryan, 19,000; Buckner, 2,700. In 1892 the vote of the state for president was: Cleveland, 82,395; Harrison, 77,032; Bidwell, pro., 4,026; Weaver, pop., 809. In 1894 Coffin, rep., for governor had 17,688 plurality over Cady, dem. Bryan has carried so far but three of 111 towns in the state and not one of the cities.

MAINE.

Portland, Me., Nov. 4.—Corrected returns from 156 towns give McKinley 60,351; Bryan, 35,936; scattering, 2,479. Against in 1892: Harrison, 31,725; Cleveland, 23,764; scattering, 2,579. Plurality now 24,515 against 7,961 in 1892. a gain of 16,554. This is almost exactly half the vote of the state. An equal gain in the other half will give 48,000 plurality.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 4.—The republicans have secured the most complete victory in this state in its history and their ante-election claim of a plurality of upwards of 20,000 for McKinley and nearly as much for Ramsdell for governor, with increased majorities in both branches of the legislature and enlarged pluralities for congressmen, have been verified. In fact it was a veritable landslide. The republicans carried Merrimack county by the largest plurality they ever had in the county.

OHIO.

The State Carried by the Republicans by About 60,000.

Columbus, O., Nov. 4.—Ohio elected yesterday, besides presidential electors, a secretary of state, food commissioner, supreme judge and public works commissioner. Latest returns give the republicans about 60,000 majority and all but three of the congressmen.

DELAWARE.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 4.—McKinley has carried Delaware by about a thousand but the democrats have the legislature and congressman. There were minor brawls in Sussex county and in two districts in Kent county there was no election for the same reason. The only fatal affray reported was from Baltimore Hundred. Sussex county, where one man was killed.

TENNESSEE.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 4.—The republicans claim to have carried Tennessee for McKinley by 20,000 plurality. Tillman, rep., is probably elected governor over Taylor, dem. He ran about 6,000 ahead of McKinley.

ARKANSAS.

Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 4.—Latest returns indicate a majority of 30,000 in Arkansas for Bryan.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Republicans Capture the Entire State by About 150,000.

Boston, Nov. 4.—McKinley carried Massachusetts by about 150,000. Wolcott, for governor, runs somewhat behind McKinley, Williams, the silver candidate for governor, also runs behind Bryan, though not as much as Wolcott runs behind McKinley. The vote is very large in all parts of the state. The congressmen elected are: First district, Wright, rep.; Second, Gillette, rep.; Third, Walker, rep.; Fourth, Weymouth, rep.; Fifth, Knox, rep.; Sixth, Moody, rep.; Seventh, Barrett, rep.; Eighth, Mc Call, rep.; Ninth, Fitzgerald, dem.; Tenth, is still in doubt; Eleventh, Sprague, rep.; Twelfth, Lovering, rep.; Thirteenth, Simpkins, rep. The executive council will stand seven republicans to one democrat, the same as last year. The Palmer vote promises to equal the desired 3 per cent. of the total to give the national democracy standing on the Australian ballot. Both of the biennial elections amendments have been defeated by votes of about two to one. The legislature is overwhelmingly republican in both branches.

MICHIGAN.

McKinley Carries the State by About 25,000 Plurality.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 4.—McKinley carries this city by 4,000, and the state by 25,000 plurality.

VERMONT.

White River Junction, Vt., Nov. 4.—The republican plurality in this state will be about 40,000. The previous high-water mark in pluralities for president was 30,556, given to Grant in 1872. The state will have a solid republican delegation in the United States congress.

IOWA.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—The heavy vote in Iowa counts very slowly. Scattering returns, chiefly from rural precincts, where the republicans expected to be weakest, indicate republican claim of 75,000 plurality for McKinley will be bettered, and 100,000 seems likely to be reached. Palmer will poll a very light vote, probably not over 6,000. Secretary Trainor of the republican committee claims the state by 80,000. The republicans claim to have elected all of the eleven congressmen, but two districts are still in doubt.

TEXAS.

Austin, Tex., Nov. 4.—The election passed off quietly with a full vote. Indications are that McKinley will carry the city and county by a small plurality. Sayres, dem., for congress, has a large majority in the city and county. State Chairman Hickie estimates Bryan's plurality at 100,000, and Culberson for governor will have 75,000 plurality. He says a solid democratic congressional delegation of thirteen members has been returned. Definite returns will be received to-day.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Nov. 4.—Unless the belated rural returns materially differ from what is expected, republicans claim that McKinley will carry the state by not less than 30,000 plurality. They also claim the governor and twelve of the thirteen congressmen. The democrats claim the state by 7,000.

MINNESOTA.

St. Paul, Nov. 4.—The state has gone overwhelmingly for McKinley. St. Paul has given him a majority of at least 6,000 and Minneapolis has at least done as well. The state has given the Buckeye statesman about 50,000 plurality. It is a clean republican sweep on congressmen except the Seventh district, the legislature is republican by two-thirds on joint ballot.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Fla., Nov. 4.—Bryan and Sewall seem to have a plurality of 15,000 in this state. In the First congressional district S. M. Parkman, silver democrat, is re-elected by a plurality approximating 8,000. In the Second district Robert W. Davis, silver democrat, has a plurality of 3,000 or more over J. R. Scripling, republican.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville, Nov. 4.—In eastern and central Kentucky republicans have made gains. Davidson, republican for congress in the Eighth district, is a winner. Sill er men have made gains in southern Kentucky. Latest and

VOL. XXIX. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1896. NO.43

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

RABBITS ARE PLENTIFUL

THE FIRST OPEN DAY BRINGS OUT MANY HUNTERS.

Owing to the Fact That There Have Been So Heavy Downpours of Rain to Drown Out the Young. Game is Abundant.

The resonant bray of a hound followed up by a commotion in the underbrush and the sudden appearance of a diminutive grey-skinned animal bounding away with jerky little leaps that end in sharp crash like sounds every time its paws struck the dry grass and brittle twigs; the eager companying alertness and furtive glance of a man togged out in high boots, canvas coat with great capacious pockets and a gun thrown over his shoulder or carried with head toward the earth in a resolute manner; a quick methodical-like change of carriage on the part of the latter and the firearm is raised to the shoulder, the eye scans the sight-mark, the trigger clicks, biff-bang, a smoky wave floats away in air, the man casts the eye in the direction that the shot has taken flight, and what does he see? The scurrying animal of but a moment before now lies toppled over a few rods in advance, its tiny feet twitching in the throes of death, a crimson fluid ebbing forth from a steam-bored hole in its carcass and staining its furry coat with its ghastly hue.

With visage gleaming with satisfaction at his annihilation, the man advances and grasps the still quivering animal by the long ears and thrusts it into the pockets of his canvas coat without sentiment so much as to look into its fawn-like eyes, pink and pretty, and remember that but a few months ago, when the Law said he must not shoot, the little thing was of a brood that every boy and every girl would fain possess and see munch and nibble the vegetables thrown to it and hop away to a burrow running into the bowels of the earth. Then the man goes on seeking repetitions of but death dealing performances.

The man was a hunter, the victim a rabbit. The day was yesterday—the first day of the opening season for shooting rabbits and quail, and which was legally be allowed until December 10th; and after that only at the risk of being nabbed by vigilant game wardens and made to pay $20 a piece for every one killed. And so, since the time is limited in which the sport of hunting those wary animals known as "Cottontails," the modernized Nimrod described above hastens forth and improves the time of license.

Rabbit and quail hunting in Warren, Somerset and upper Hunterdon counties affords great sport to the huntsmen, who come from the metropolitan district, as well as those in their own confines. The nimble rabbits are very plentiful this season owing to the fact that there were no heavy downpours of rain to drown out the young in breeding time. Every Plainfielder who owns a gun, or who could borrow one, and ever had the taste of excitement incident to hunting down the "Cottontails," was out yesterday. The Watchung range of mountains was litterally covered with hunters and it is a wonder that some were not peppered with the shot of their brother Nimrods while aiming at the rabbits.

One farmer near Whitehouse reports having discovered ten in one field. Another says they are so plentiful on Pickel Mountain, near Bloomsbury, that they actually crowd each other for space. Quail are also numerous in Somerset and Warren counties this year. Last season game was scarce in Hunterdon county, and gunners filled their game bags with chickens, turkeys and pigeons. Some farmers also had horses and cows killed by careless gunners. This year the farmers will start a crusade against the sportsmen. Many gunners have already arrived.

John Shaney, E. Gould and Cornelius Hoagland, went to Three Bridges, yesterday. Their total reward will not be announced until they return tonight.

The early morning trains along the Central Railroad carried scores of hunters with their dogs and guns and the mountains and fields are being pretty thoroughly searched for bunny. In some parts of Union county rabbits were plentiful in September, but it is said there has been so much illegal hunting and trapping that they are now nearly all killed off and those that remain are so wild as to be difficult hunting.

George Voehl went hunting on the mountain, yesterday, and captured twenty rabbits and four quail. James Babbit, who has a record of getting more game than any other local hunter, during the open season, returned from a trip yesterday with twelve rabbits and a number of quail.

BUTCHERS' ORGANIZE.

COMBINE TO PROTECT THEMSELVES AGAINST "DEADBEATS."

The Wholesalers Demand Prompt Payment and the Retailers Organize so as Not to Become Easily Embarrassed.

The Retail Butchers' Mutual Protective Association, composed of the meat dealers of the city and borough, was organized Tuesday to promote the interests of that trade and to prevent impositions by a class of customers who fail to pay their bills. Every dealer is troubled more or less with those who either fail entirely to meet their obligations or else are so slow that it causes the merchant not a little embarrassment.

The beef companies, from whom the butchers buy at wholesale, have a system that compels the settlement of all bills for the previous week on Monday, and if they are not paid no meat is delivered on Tuesday. With such a condition it is necessary for the retail butchers to carefully guard against customers who are not prompt or else have the reputation of not paying at all. The aims of this new organization is to provide a medium whereby every merchant may become acquainted with the irresponsible customers of the other dealers.

The following officers were elected: President, Charles Ulrich; vice president, Fred Endress; secretary, L. A. Hummer; treasurer, David Smalley; trustees, James Guttridge, George Watts and George Eddy.

Confirmation Services.

Once in every three years Rt. Rev. Bishop Wigger, of the Newark diocese, of which Plainfield is a part, pays an official visit to each parish under his charge, and thus it was that he came to this city Tuesday. The principal object of his visit is to confirm those who have been preparing for the sacrament, and this morning a large assemblage gathered in St. Mary's church to witness the rite administered to a large class. The bishop spoke a few words on the importance of confirmation, and that those on whom it was conferred would become firm and faithful in their religion.

City Election Primaries.

The City Republican campaign committee met last Tuesday and in the absence of President W.R. Codington, his place was filled by Roger F. Murray. The committee decided to hold the ward primaries Tuesday evening, November 17th, and the City Convention, Thursday evening, November 19th. The representation was apportioned on a basis of one delegate to every fifty voters and a fraction. This is based on the last vote for freeholders.

COW GORES MAN AND BOY

THE OLD MAN'S LIFE SAVED BY THE ATTENTION A CALF ATTRACTED.

The Cow, With a Three Week's Old Offspring, Sulked, and When Urged Attacked Both Men With Her Horns.

An infuriated cow nearly ended the life of Joel Compton, a well-to-do farmer, and his grandson, George Compton, twelve years old, Saturday. Compton lives on a large farm, near Metuchen, and his grandson was paying a visit.

The farmer is seventy years old and feeble. Yesterday Compton, accompanied by the boy, went to the pasture lot to drive in the cattle. All the drove started to the barn with the exception of a red cow that had a three weeks' old calf at its side. The cow sulked in a corner of the pasture lot and refused to be driven with the rest of the cattle. Compton sent the boy after the cow, but the cow went for the boy. As soon as the lad reached the part of the field occupied by the cow and calf the animal gave an angry bellow and charged the lad with lowered horns. The boy ran and the cow gave chase, catching him and tossing him in the air, with its sharp pointed horns. As soon as he reached the ground the cow came at him again and gored the child.

Attracted by his grandson's cries, Mr. Compton ran through the underbrush to his rescue. The animal, now more enraged than ever, made a rush for the aged farmer. Compton went down before the enraged animal's horns and lay on the ground helpless.

The cow started to gore the old man, and would have killed him had not the calf scampered off and attracted the attention of it mother, which followed it to the barn. Young George Compton was not injured as severely as his grandfather, and reached the farm house covered with blood, and fell fainting to the floor after he had told where his grandfather was. The farmer was carried home. Mr. Compton's injuries are serious.

—S. A. Cruickshank's coachman yesterday morning captured an opposum climbing into the poultry yard.

ASTRONOMY THE TOPIC

FIRST OF THE SERIES OF UNIVERSITY EXTENSION LECTURES

Prof. R. W. Prentiss Delivered His Remarks With Aid of a Stereopticon Before an Appreciative Audience

The series of University Extension lectures for 1896-97 opened very auspiciously Tuesday, when Prof. R. W. Prentiss delivered, in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, his first illustrated lecture on astronomy. The chapel was crowded with a deeply interested audience, and Prof. Prentiss was listened to with careful attention throughout his lecture. A large screen was stretched above the platform, and an excellent stereopticon, with oxy-hydrogen light, was operated by an assistant in the gallery. When the lights were turned out some of the women in the audience removed their hats, in order that those sitting behind them might have a better view of the screen. It is to be hoped that during the remaining lectures this practice may become general, as, in a well-floored audience-room such as the chapel, it adds much to the comfort of those present.

Prof. Prentiss' subject was: "The Sun, the Center of Our System." He began by showing views of observatories where the sun was especially studied, and explained the comparatively new method of taking observations by means of photography. Then he showed a plan of our solar system, and a picture showing the comparative size of the sun and the planets. In order that the audience might realize the tremendous distance of the sun from us—about 92,837,000 miles—he said that a railway train going 1,000 miles a day, would take over 254 years to make the journey. The sun's diameter is about 866,500 miles, or 109 times that of the earth, but its mean density is less than 1¼ times that of water, a very significant result as bearing on its physical condition. Gravity is so much greater at the sun's surface that a person weighing 150 pounds here, would there weigh nearly two tons.

Mr. Prentiss then proceeded to show a great many very fine photographs of the sun, explaining each in a very clear manner, with a welcome absence of technical terms. He first showed views of the photosphere, or the visible surface of the sun, with its peculiar structure of grains or "nodules," presenting a mottled appearance; its "faculæ," or bright streaks, probably, like the nodules, luminous clouds floating in an atmosphere of uncondensed gases, but elevated above the general level, and its wonderful "sunspots," ever-changing depressions in the photosphere, forming, closing up, drifting across the sun's surface, presenting an ever-new and absorbing object for study. At the times, about eleven years apart, when the spots are most numerous, magnetic disturbances on the earth are most frequent.

Outside of the photosphere lies the chromosphere, a sheet of flames overlying the photosphere to a depth of from 5,000 to 10,000 miles, which as seen through the telescope has been aptly described as "like a prairie on fire." By means of the spectroscope, fiery clouds, projections from the chromosphere, may be seen upon the edge of the sun's disc. These clouds, or "prominences," are often 50,000 or 60,000 miles in heighth and of corresponding horizontal dimensions, and undergo wonderful changes or eruptions, under the very eye of the observer.

During a total eclipse, there may be seen surrounding the sun a halo or glory of pearly light, known as the corona. The outer boundary of this halo is not very well defined, and widely differing pictures have been made of it at different times and in different places. Its spectrum is that of a glowing gas, and it contains some gaseous element unknown on the earth, which has been called "coronium."

At the close of the lecture many remained to the conversation class, that, as last year, will doubtless be a very pleasant and profitable feature of the lecture course.

Planting Maple Trees.

The Town Improvement Association has been planting several maple trees within the past few days. Three have been placed on East Third street, near Mr. Finley's residence, and two fruit trees have been placed in the latter's yard. Between Sixth street and Cottage place, on Richmond mond street, four maple trees have been planted, Mrs. Pierre Mailli had the work in charge.

Tetter, eczema and all similar skin troubles are cured by the use of DeWitt's Witch Hazell Salve. It soothes at once, and restores the tissue so their natural condition, and never fails to cure piles. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

BISHOP WIGGER'S ADVICE TO CATHOLIC PARENTS LAST NIGHT.

If Properly Trained in Their Young Years, the Rising Generation Will Better Heed the Teachings of the Church.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop Wigger, of Newark, was in this city last Tuesday, and before a large and appreciative audience in St. Mary's church, he delivered a sermon so fluent and eloquent as to hold the close attention of his hearers throughout. Said the learned Bishop in beginning:

"One of the many opportunities offered by having the Bishop visit the parish is that all can confer with him." The main point, he contended, is that parents should give their children a religious education. Religious training, he said, should begin when the child is two years of age, and the parents should instruct it in the teachings of the Holy Spirit—our Father, our Mary and the sacred creed. "It is a disgrace," said the Bishop, "if the children have to be taught their prayers in the church." In the old country, father, mother and children gather and recite prayers; in this country the child at the age of six years can distinguish between good and evil, and it is then they should be brought to the parish priest for their first confessional. Some parents allow their children to grow to eight and ten years without giving them the knowledge of confirmation. Any person knowing the difference between good and evil is capable of distinguishing from mortal sin—"Whosoever dies in the state of mortal sin is lost to hell and to all eternity."

Continuing his discourse, Bishop Wigger said: "Almighty God holds the parents responsible for the proper bringing up of their children. The Parochial School was established for those who have neither time or means to educate their offspring." He congratulated the Plainfield parish for having such an admirable school, and said he hoped if any Catholics were sending their children to other schools they would take them out tomorrow, and thus adhere to the principles and doctrines of the church. If parents disobey the ecclesiastical doctrines of the church, how can children be obedient to it, and in later years they will show disobedience to both parents and church.

Bishop Wigger went on to explain the holy sanctity of marriage. Every Catholic couple should be married by a priest, according to the law ordained over 400 years ago, and they should be united with the approbation and full approval of the parish priest.

In conclusion the Bishop said: 'Obey the church and we save our souls; those who despise the church despise Him, and those who hear and believe in the church believe Him. He that despiseth you despiseth me, and he who despiseth me despiseth Him who sent me. Thus Christ commands and omit what he forbids, and carefully and conscientiously gain the reward of unspeakable happiness in Heaven."

The Coat Was His Own.

Patrolman Totten, against whom the charges of misrepresentation were made before the Police Board, and before whom he was called, vindicated himself at the time. The coat which it was alleged the city furnished him and he sold to Special Officer Van Hansen was not the city's property at all. Officer Totten bought the coat of ex-Special Officer William Robinson, paying for it out of his own pocket. Therefore he had a perfect right to dispose of it as he saw fit. This explanation was given to the Board.

A Wandering Equine.

A stray horse whose ribs were plainly visible under the rough hide, wandered into the front yard of Mrs. Deazey, of East Sixth street, last Friday night. Mrs. Deazey found the poor animal and, at her request, Jack Krietling led the equine to Day's stable and there it has remained ever since. No one has come to claim it and the police think the animal was turned away to die by its former owner. It is a bay horse with bobbed tail.

DON'T WANT THE OFFICE

MAYOR GILBERT AND F. C. LOUNSBURY DECLINE THE HONORS.

Mr. Gilbert is Very Brief and to the Point—Mr. Lounsbury Says He Could Not Devote Enough Time to the Office.

Though it was thought almost for a surety that F. C. Lounsbury was a positive candidate for the Mayoralty nomination on the Republican ticket, Mr. Lounsbury now comes forward over his own signature and says that he does not want it. Mayor Gilbert also says that he cannot accept a renomination. Their letters follow:

To the Editor of the Daily Press:—Please say for me through the columns of The Press that I am not a candidate for Mayoralty honors this fall. I mean by this that I cannot accept a renomination.

Respectfully yours,
A. Gilbert.

To the Editor of The Daily Press: In view of the continued mention of my name among the aspirants for the office of Mayor, I feel constrained to say through your columns that I am not now and never have been a candidate for the nomination; and have never authorized or consented to the use of my name as such.

While I am not unmindful of the high honor this official position confers, and fully appreciate the compliments of those of my fellow-citizens who deem me worthy to succeed our present illustrious executive, I cannot, on the other hand, lose sight of the arduous work and grave responsibility which it also incurs.

To properly administer the duties of the office calls for a greater sacrifice of time than I can possibly afford to make, and I must, therefore, most positively decline to consider even the question of attempting to secure the nomination.

Very respectfully yours,
Fred C. Lounsbury.

Where They Graduated.

The recent additions to the legal fraternity from this city are not only representative young men but their creditable passing of examinations reflect not a little credit on those with whom they have been studying. Irving Brady has been associated with Counselor William K. McClure. Robert Clark has been a faithful student in Lawyer J. B. Coward's office, while George W. Bird has been a hard worker with the firm of Reed & Coddington. Abram Cornish, was a student in Assemblyman W. R. Codington's law office. All of the above have proved themselves worthy young men and entitled to the respect and confidence of all with whom they come in contract.

All on Account of a Drum.

Tom Martin and James Frisbie had a set-to at the North avenue station, Monday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock. No blood was spilled. According to Frisbie's story Tom Martin had a drum in "hock" at a local pawn shop and when election time came around, one of the Republican heelers gave Frisby ten dollars to get the drum out. Frisby says he returned the money with scorn, and Martin "hooked him" at the depot for so doing, claiming that the ten dollars belonged rightly to him. Hence the fracas.

A Ragged Constitution.

Gabriel H Bellis, of West Second street, aged sixty-three years, joined Post 73, G. A. R., last Tuesday. Mr. Bellis thinks nothing of going out on a twenty-mile walk. A day or two ago he walked over to Rahway, took dinner with his sister and walked back the same day. He mustered in the service with the Second New York Volunteers and later became a member of the Eighty-second New York Volunteers.

Struck on the Knot With a Feed Bag.

T. W. Blain, of Green Brook, took a load of grist to the New Market Mill, Tuesday, and while hoisting the bags up to the second story of the mill, one of them dropped and struck him on the head, nearly dislocating the neck. Mr. Blain survives, but he considers his escape somewhat miraculous.

At a Church Conference.

A Congregational church conference is being held in Orange today. Those attending from this city are Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Goodrich, Rev. M. E. Dwight, Mrs. B. T. Barnes, Mrs. Geo. Raynolds and Jos. A. Robinson.

Mr. Fisk to Talk to Women.

A public meeting of the Town Improvement Association will be held Friday afternoon at 3 p. m., which will be addressed by Councilman Charles J. Fisk.

—Work was begun today on the Gesang and Turn Verein building on Somerset street. The plan is to make the structure as high as the ones adjoining. There will be a twenty foot addition built to the rear of the building which will give them more needed room.

FROM BOTTOM TO THE TOP

MAYOR GILBERT RISES FROM A CLERK TO PRESIDENT OF A BANK.

Chosen Yesterday as the Head of One of New York's Biggest Banking Institutions as an Example of Honesty and Industry.

The reward of integrity and industry has no better example than the career of Alexander Gilbert, Mayor of Plainfield, and who was Tuesday elected to the office of president of the Market and Fulton National Bank, one of the largest banking institutions in the city of New York. He started from the very lowest rung of the ladder, but perseverance, honesty and carefulness assisted him to climb up higher and higher, until now he has reached the top and is today president of the bank in which he was only an ordinary clerk thirty-seven years ago. It was not accident that lifted him to this high position, but years of hard toil and well directed effort.

Alexander Gilbert was born in Elizabeth on August 10, 1839. When twenty years old, he entered the Market National Bank, in New York, as a clerk, and in that bank he has remained through the rest of his career.

In 1863, he was made cashier. The deposits of the bank were then about $1,500,000. He filled the office with credit and refused the offers of two other banks to become their president. They were after wards incorporated into the bank and its name changed to the Market and Fulton National Bank.

Mr. Gilbert's ability gained for him the position of vice-president in 1892, and yesterday he was elected to fill the responsible office of president. He came to Plainfield in 1856 and has resided in this city ever since. His present residence, at the corner of Central avenue and West Eighth street, is one of the most charming in the city. For two terms, six years, has Mr. Gilbert served the city faithfully as Mayor and made one of the efficient best Mayors Plainfield has ever had. His integrity, good judgment and liberality are too well known in Plainfield to need more than passing mention and he is looked upon by all as one of the first men of the city.

His career is one that he and all the people of Plainfield can look at with pride, as it well illustrates one of the fundamental principles of the American Republic by which any one can by honesty and industry rise from the lowest position to the highest.

CHARLES FISK MAY BECOME HIS HONOR.

The Republican Chairman Mentioned As the Next Mayor.

COUNCILMAN FROST ALSO TALKED OF

Democrats Disrupted and Bitter Among Themselves Are Not Likely to Pull Together and Will Probably Present no Opposition Ticket to the Republicans—Mr. Fisk Has Never Said the Word Yes, But Still He Has Never Said No

Even while the National campaign was raging with all its fierceness during the past four months and everyone was absorbed in the thoughts of silver and gold and protection and tariff for revenue only, now and then a side talk took place over the possibilities of the city election that was then in the misty future, but that is now coming nearer and more prominently to the mind of the Plainfielder. Now the political talk is all edged the way. Whether or not there will be a hot contest for the offices between the Democrats and the Republicans or whether it will be simply a preliminary contest in the Republican convention for the nominations remains as yet to be determined, but it looks like the latter.

In the campaign just ended, of course, the Republicans were organized and working as a unit for party success, but when it is considered how it was that a large portion of the support of the Independent ticket in the municipal contest a year ago came largely from the Republicans themselves, it is an unsolved proposition whether or not they will maintain their present unity when city affairs are solely concerned in an election. It is possible that the unanimity with which they have worked during the last four months, followed up by such a victory, may so cement the feeling of party loyalty that there will be no break in the ranks when the time comes for putting candidates in the field on local issues. The supposition that there will be dissensions in the ranks of Republicans this year is derived from the fact that the present administration will without a doubt control the nominations and pledge a city government on almost the same lines as now conducted, and this same policy was what many Republicans objected to a year ago and which lead them to support the Independent ticket.

Whatever is done in the endeavor to defeat the regular Republican ticket that will be nominated will depend largely on what the Democrats do.

But just at present the Democrats can be said to be neither here nor there—they are somewhat of an unknown quantity. A Presidential campaign has left them disrupted and bitter among themselves. The Palmer and Buckner supporters seem to think that they will evolve into the regular organization and control the party machinery; the Bryan and Sewall people swear by the eternal that their own party enemies shall come to them, but they to them. It may result in still further disruption and estrangement. If this spirit pervades, the Republicans will have an easy time of it—probably easier than they did last Tuesday, because there will be no contesting ticket in the field. If there is no singleness of purpose among the Democrats with regard to party policy there will be no nominations. Empty honors have all been amply gratified in the contest just closed—now no sensible man will consent to a nomination unless there be a chance of victory—divided among themselves the Democrats may as well let the Republicans go it alone. And without the Democrats united it would be useless for bolting Republicans to attempt to accomplish anything. So every indication point to uninterrupted—and even uncontested—rule of the Republicans with a policy very much the same as that now in vogue.

The officers to be elected are a Mayor, Treasurer, Councilman, Collector and a Councilman from each ward.

First and foremost comes the Mayor. Who will he be? Charles J. Fisk, the Mark Hanna of Plainfield Republicanism, seems the most formidable, and it is more than possible that other prospective candidates may retire and leave the field to him alone. For two years close observers of political affairs in this city have believed that the Mayoralty have buzzed very near to Mr. Fisk's headgear. But he has never said so openly. He is popular among the boys and to them his name is legion. They say he will be next Mayor of Plainfield. Often times the boys, that is, the rank and file, know how the political cat is going to jump as well as do those who lead them.

But then there is Councilman Frost. Since Mr. Fisk has long been considered a likely candidate for the nomination and has never said the word to clinch that sentiment, there are those who have been prone to believe that it might be that he really did not care to be at the head of the city government.

Some of Mr. Frost's friends are urging him to go into the canvass for the nomination on the ground that if Mr Fisk wants it he should say so. I have it on the best of authority that Mr. Frost will be a candidate if Mr. Fisk is not, and it is hinted that he may be at any rate. Mr. Frost is anxious that there shall be no change in the sympathy of the incoming officials with those of the present towards the work now under progress in municipal improvement. That is said to be his sole interest in desiring to have put into office those whom he knows would work in harmony with the plans already laid out in the street improvement and finishing the sewerage system and sewage beds. Mr. Frost has planned the latter system and he firmly believes that it can only be successfully carried to a satisfactory end by following the ideas already laid out. After this work is completed he is willing to step down and out and rest on his record. Until such a time he proposes to be an active factor in city government and that is why he is a possible Mayoralty candidate.

There is little or no doubt but what the Collectorship nomination will again go to Elias R. Dunn. By a technicality Mr. Bird was deprived of the fruits of his victory last year, and in justness and appreciation of his sacrifice he will get the nomination.

It is likely that Alex Titsworth will be renominated for Treasurer, though there may be other candidates which have not yet loomed up.

The possible candidates from Councilmanic honors are still an unknown quantity.

But above all, the popular feeling is that Mr. Fisk, rotound, jolly, affable, substantial, progressive and diplomatic, will be the next Mayor.

Nay Pen.

THEATRICAL.

"Flora," the serpentine dancer, will appear at every performance with the "Kennedy Players" this week at Music Hall. "Flora" is the first serpentine dancer many of the ones who has ever appeared in Plainfield and her performance is both beautiful and bewildering. Her dress contains more than one hundred yards of silk, which she switches around into all conceivable shapes, the beauty of which is enhanced by a strong calcium light showing all the colors of the rainbow, thus producing a unique and beautiful effect. The St. Louis Globe Democrat says: "Mme. Flora does a serpentine dance with colored effects that excels anything in the line ever put on there."

A sea of glittering pageantry, commingling in gorgeous plentitude dancing fairies, and all droll folk of the tales of "Old Mother Goose" as a background of the flooding fun now crowding the Casino, New York. "Quaint Burlesque Adventures of Jack and the Beanstalk," the new production by Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger, is a fairy extravaganza of astounding magnitude. No metropolitan visual dream in mind has approached its magnificence. And the funmakers! Think of a stageful—more than a hundred—of entertainers, every one of whose names is synonymous of excellence. Think of the managerial audacuity of inducing a half dozen theatrical stars to renounce stellar honors for comic roles in the new piece. Donnelly and Girard are in the selves a show, yet here they are but two of a hundred. The stage realization of "Old King Cole." "Giant Ruse," "Jack," "Miss Muffet," "Mother Hubbard" and "Princess Mary" of "Beanstalk" fame, make new show fun galore, while the "Autumn Forest," "Jack's Home," "Giant's Cliff," "Giant's Palace," "Giant's Courtyard" and "Jack's Beanstalk," offers stage illusions the memory of which time will be slow to dissipate. Casino's new all star tenant is overwhelmingly welcome, and while "Jack and his Beanstalk" are comparatively certain to remain until after the holidays, the wise theatre-goer will see the production now while its elements crackle with novelty. By request, a Wednesday matinee in addition to the Saturday afternoon performance will hereafter be instituted.

A Letter From an Endeavorer.

Chief of Police Grant recently received the following letter from a delegate to the State Christian Endeavor Union:

Atlantic Highlands, N. J., Oct. 26, '96.

Mr. Grant.

Dear Sir—Before thanking you for your kindness shown in gratifying our wish, I feel it necessary to thank you for not acknowledging that we had received the books before, hope the delay on my part has not shaken your faith in Christian Endeavorers. At least in two particular ones who bear that name, for "Trusting in God for strength we are striving" to be Christlanike in every word, act and deed.

I believe we left Plainfield believing more deeply than ever before in the reality of the thing in this world is a genuine Christian, be it man or woman, and it pays more than it costs to be one. I think I can safely say for you what you don't know already. I received the impression from you, too, was a Christian, for you treated the delegates visiting your city Christlanlike, that we shall not soon forget you or your kindness, and we must say you started us a good deal of trouble.

I thank you very much for sending the books, I never will have the opportunity of serving you we will only be too glad to do so. Enclose the one dollar for the books. Plainfield, N. J., seems to have completely fallen in love with it.

Yours respectfully,
Sadie Leonard.

THE AVENUE MUST BE BUILT RIGHT.

Mayor Hegeman Speaks Pointedly About the Matter.

ROAD COMMISSIONER TO SUPERVISE.

Contractor Bowden Tells the Borough Council That the Responsibility for Cutting Below the Grade of Watchung Avenue Lays With His Men—Mayor Hegeman Insists That Specifications be Followed—Other Business.

The Borough Council held a lively session Friday and a considerable amount of business was transacted Councilman Lounsbury was the only member absent when Mayor Hegeman called the meeting to order. Clerk Arnold's financial statement was as follows:

	Balance.	Deficit
Borough	$847.21
Fire Department	240.79
Lights	452.50
Roads	690.24
		1,975 76
Poor		390 90
Total balance	$1,594.77.

There was reported $66.70 collected as licenses money and etc.

The name of H. A. Vochi was presented as a member of Warren Engine Company, and it was referred to the fire, water and lamps committee.

A communication was received from Charles Keller, Edward Vroom, J. Kennedy, George Kliner, Herman Hansen, Jacob Kliner, Gus Fiering, Peter Stram, Louis Bimble, Peter Srites, Frank Hull and William Pasch, which stated that the above men had realized the necessity of there being a hose company in "Prideville, and had organized themselves into one, choosing the name of "West End Hose Company, No. 2." The matter was placed in the hands of the fire, water and lamps committee.

Among the claims presented was one of Contractor David Bowden for $1,003.92, on account of the work done on Watchung avenue. All claims were audited and ordered paid.

Mr. Valiant reported that the laws, ordinance and election committee were still investigating the petition offered against the establishment of the Washingtonville ice pond and dam, and could only report progress.

Mr. Woolston stated that $188.19 had been expended on streets during the past month. He also asked for the different amounts from Mr. Reynolds and the residents of Harrison street, being their share for the work of macadamizing. The money will be secured as soon as possible.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Peck that the fire, water and lamps committee be authorized to place three lights on Coddington avenue, it being the request of the property-owners of that street. The permission was granted. Another resolution by Mr. Peck provided for the renewal of the fire department note for $1,169. Mr. Peck said that the petition from the residents of Harrison street asking for fire protection was under consideration, that plans for a house had been submitted and that the matter would be presented at an early date.

The Mayor asked Mr. Woolston for his opinion regarding the progress of the work on Watchung avenue, and the latter replied that he had no fault to find with the progress. He also said that there had been a mistake made in the grade, but that the street was now being filled in with three or four inches of stone, which was more than the contract called for. In his judgment, he thought that the borough would have a better roadbed. Mr. Bowden, the contractor, he said, had asked that someone be appointed to supervise the work, and Mr. Woolston thought it would be well if Street Commissioner Emmons could be assigned to look after the work.

Mr. Bowden was present and he was given permission to speak. He said:

"As a contractor on the Watchung avenue work I am very sorry that a mistake in the grade was made, but I believe that there will be a better road now that the decomposed material has been removed. The greatest cut would hardly have averaged fourteen inches. If the above material had been left the road would not have been so good. As a road builder with twenty-eight years experience I will state that my sole interest is to give the borough a first-class job."

Mr. MacLaughlin stated that he thought Mr. Dunham was to be inspector of the work according to the contract.

Mr. Dunham was given the privilege of the floor and said:

"Several mistakes have been made in the work on the avenue. I was away when the mistake in the grade was made, but better material has been put back than that which was removed. I didn't want to put the borough to a great expense by supervising the work continually and remaining on the avenue all the time. Mr. Bowden expects to remain on the work now until it is completed. I would prefer that the borough secure an outside inspector or I would be glad to help the street commissioner. From now on I shall not charge the borough one cent for supervision. I am interested in the city and borough, where I pay taxes. The re have been reports that Mr. Bowden and myself are in business together, which is entirely false."

Mr. Valiant thought that the borough should have some one to look after its interests, and he made a motion that the street commissioner supervise the work. Mr. MacLaughlin thought it would be additional expense to put Mr. Emmons on the work, and as Mr. Dunham is held responsible as per contract, and was not going to make a change, he saw no reason why Mr. Emmons or anyone else should be secured.

Mr. Woolston did not agree with him and thought that Mr. Emmons should give some of his time to the work.

At this time Mr. Valiant took the chair and Mayor Hegeman spoke somewhat as follows: "When the borough started the work of opening Watchung avenue, it was in my judgment to give the borough the greatest improvement it ever had. The preliminary work was performed studiously and in a first-class manner. We employed Mr. Dunham to furnish specifications which were expensive, but complete. Mr. Bowden offered the lowest bid and secured the contract. My attention was first called to the street when I heard that it had been cut fourteen inches below the proper grade. I learned that it had been filled in with clay which the contractor thought was all right. Some parts were not of a character to build a macadam road, which is one instance where the specifications were not lived up to. Another instance of the kind true. Between Pearl and Chatham streets the binder was put on three to four inches when it called for one inch. There was also one place where it was not rolled, and the specifications called for it. I called the attention of the superintendent to the matter and it was rolled. This new street cost the borough a large amount of money which is the people's money, and the work has got to be done properly, and I don't care who it hit in saying so. The contractor must live up to the specifications or he won't get a cent. This filling in to make a better road don't count. We expect to have the contracts carried out and it is necessary to have some inspector there, for we want to know how the road is going to be built."

Mr. Valiant said that if it was impossible to have Mr. Dunham look after the work perhaps the latter could secure someone to look after the work for him. To this suggestion Mr. Dunham thought it best for the Council to appoint a man and he would assist him. Continuing Mr. Dunham said:—"I think the Mayor is right. I should have insisted on an inspector and then the contractor would not have made a mistake. I wish to say that it was not my mistake. If it had I would have made it right." This ended the discussion and Mr. Valiant's motion prevailed that the Street Commissioner supervise the work.

On Mr. Scutt's resolution a warrant was ordered drawn for $1,003 92 in favor of Engineer Dunham for Mr. Bowden on account of the Watchung avenue work. Another resolution by Mr. Schutt provided for the confirmation of H. N. Spencer's action in settling the monthly pay roll. On a motion offered by Mr. Woolston a loan of $1,000, charged to the road account, will be made and Mr. Woolston offered a resolution which was adopted that the petition for cross walks at the corner of Manning avenue and Somerset street and at the corner of Duer street and Greenbrook road, be granted.

In regard to the petition of N. B. Smalley and John Herman asking that Regent street and Whitewood avenue be accepted, Mr. Woolston stated that the top dressing had not been placed on either street, but he moved that the streets be accepted and it was so ordered. The same Councilman offered another resolution which provided for the macadamizing of Brook avenue as petitioned for by Mr. Clawson, when the funds would permit.

Mr. Peck moved that when Council adjourn it be to meet Friday evening, November 20th. After Mr. Woolston stated that the committee was making progress regarding the Manning avenue houses being placed on a line, Mr. McLoughlin moved that the Council go into executive session.

GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH PRESENT TO LAUCHABLE FARCES.

Recitations, Music and a Monologue by John Carney Made up the Ladies Aid Society's Pleasing Social Affair.

The Ladies Aid Society of the German Reformed church gave a pleasing entertainment in the Sunday school room of the church Thursday. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Hauser, with a few appropriate words welcomed all to the church and hoped that each one would thoroughly enjoy themselves. The first number on the programme was a recitation by Miss Lizzie Hoagland, entitled "Learning to Skate." This was followed with a farce in one act, entitled 'He Must be Deaf." Those who took the parts were: Father, A. Wolf; Freda, his daughter, Mrs. Goller; Butler, Paul Postler; Hunter, G. O. Kellar; constable, Fred Mentzenback. The sketch was given in German and was well received. The vocal solo by Chas. Dresselt won hearty applause. Another sketch, "The Cowboy Cousin or Don't Judge by the Hat," in three acts, was given in English by the following:

Husband Theodore Martin; his wife, Mrs. Bach; Anna Belle, the daughter, Miss Mamie Wilson; the niece, Miss Anna Doeringer; cowboy, Fred Bach.

The parts were all well taken and the entire sketch won commendation. A recitation by Miss Lizzie Hoagland given in a most excellent manner, preceded the appearance of John H. Carney who captured the audience by storm. Although "Jack" has been before the public in this locality for nineteen years, he has lost none of his good tricks and he has just the same ability to making his audience laugh as when he first started in. Last evening he reviewed a little history of recent date and when he stated that Mrs. McKinley, being jealous, was going to secure a divorce because her husband was too intimate with Hanna, the audience went wild with applause. As an encore he gave "The Bicycle, Pug Dog and Bloomers," This concluded the programme and Rev. Mr. Hauser then announced the results of the several contests among those who have been collecting money to pay off the church debt. Miss Anna Doeringer brought in the largest amount, $185 and received a costly gold watch. Miss Luey Caspar and Miss SadieBlimm were awarded rings as second and third prizes. For the women. Mrs. Mentzenback secured first prize, a handsome lemonade set. Among the girls, Florence Wolf and Minnie Freiz, were given hats, while Karl Hauser was presented with building blocks and Willie Bechtle with a tool chest. Each brought in gratifying amounts to pay off the debt.

FRANKLIN'S SMOKER.

With speeches and song, mingled with a smoker, Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., Tuesday, entertained visiting councils from Newark, New Brunswick, Bound Brook, Dunellen, New Market, Scotch Plains and Westfield. It was one of those events where everybody has a good time, and it has been a long time since the council rooms has held such a large and enthusiastic audience. The business of the evening was quickly dispatched after which the pleasant features of the evening were introduced. Excellent tobacco and pipes bearing the inscription, "Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M. Welcome," were distributed and it was a late hour when the guests left for their homes. There was was good speeches and a song to every number was loudly applauded.

The members of Somerset Council, No. 104, who were present, extended an invitation to all to attend their smoker to be held Friday evening, December 4th.

STRIKES AND SPARES.

Probably the strongest bowling league that has ever been organized along the line of the Jersey Central Railroad opened its battle for championship honors last Wednesday. It is the Central Journal Bowling League, and is now fully organized and its contests will attract the attention of the bowlers of this part of the State. That enterprising newspaper, the Elizabeth Journal, has been successful in securing all the powerful teams of the neighborhood for the league. Seven clubs now compose the league—Elizabeth A. C., Cranford Country Club, New Jersey A. C., Roselle Casino, Westfield Club, Park Club of this city, and the Bayonne Rowing and Athletic Association. All of these teams have a good record and the fight promises to be a lively one. The dues are fixed at $10 a club, and the prizes are of the following value: First team, $30; second team, $20; highest individual average, $10; highest average spares, $5. No player will be entitled to receive more than one prize, and nine games must be rolled to qualify, but the averages will be computed from the actual number of games rolled. The visiting clubs are entitled to the use of the alleys from 7:45 o'clock until the games begin, and also that the games be called at 8:15 o'clock. The Park Club will be represented in the league by the younger bowlers of the club, who have already showed their ability to cope with the best of the neighboring teams. A PLEA FOR YOUNG MEN.

DR. BARNES URGES CONSIDERATION FOR BLOSSOMING MANHOOD.

He Extols Some of the Qualities Rather Than Catechise the Young Man, but at the Same Time Gives Timely Advice.

Usually when the young man is spoken of in the pulpit it is in an appeal to him. Rev. C. R. Barnes, D. D., of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, reversed the order in his sermon Sunday night, when his subject was "A Plea for the Young Men." He took his text from 1st Samuel, 18th chapter, 5th verse—"Deal gently with the young man."

Good young men, he said, were often not appreciated. They do not like to be patronized but are glad to have others take an interest in them and confide in them. All young men are strong, he said, both physically and mentally, but some are more so than others. A man is not young by years; some men become centurians when just old enough to vote and vote one ticket, and never learn to vote any other whether it be right or wrong. The young man is called upon to answer the great question of what he is going to do, and he needs sympathy. It is a hard thing for a man to be anything except toward which he has a natural inclination, and it is also hard for a young man to learn what he should be. He has had no experience and so must try and find out. He will never succeed unless he tries, and so it is in the church life as well as elsewhere. Dr. Barnes then referred to the different kinds of success that men aim for, and which was the real one. He spoke of the two choices in a political life, of working for money or to be a statesman. Practical politics, he said, means practical demoralization.

As the ambition rises, he said, then it means more work. To reach a high position it was necessary to try hard for it. Positions cannot be gained without some effort except in rare cases and then only by accident. A man will never make anything of himself unless he tries.

PLOT TO BREAK JAIL.

ELMER CLAWSON WAS READLY TO MAKE A DESPERATE DASH.

But His Plans Were Frustrated When the Sheriff Found an Iron Bed Post and a Blade of Steel Secreted in His Cell.

Evidence has been brought to light indicating that Elmer Clawson, who is in the Somerset County Jail under sentence of death for killing George Hodgetts, intended to take desperate measures to effect his escape.

Clawson and Jacob Johnson, who is also a condemned murderer, have been confined in cells in a part of the jail separated from the other prisoners, and an extra watch has been kept upon them. On Tuesday night it was discovered that one of the iron legs of Clawson's bedstead on the side next to the wall had been wrenched off. A search was made, and the piece of iron was found secreted in the mat tress, in which a hold had been cut to receive it. Further investigation by Sheriff Wyckoff yesterday resulted in the discovery of a short blade of steel, shaped into a key, which when tried was found to fit the lock of the cell door from the inside.

How Clawson got this piece of steel is a mystery. The theory is that he had planned to unlock the door of his cell, then use the iron from the bedstead upon the keeper and turnkey and make his escape.

While the search of the cell was being made Clawson stood by, sullen and ugly, and when, upon the discovery of the steel blade, the remark was made, "Your fun in this line is at an end," his reply was: "What's the difference? I'm already sentenced to die and they can't stretch my neck but once."

Counsel for Clawson have been circulating a petition to secure his pardon.

The death watch was placed over Clawson at once, after his sentence, one deputy sheriff guarding him in the day time and another at night. No person outside of the jail officials has since been allowed to see him, with the exception of members of his family and his lawyers. To all of them he talks in a flippant, careless way, and declares that he is ready to hang at any time. He makes no effort to deny his guilt, nor does he seek to mitigate his crime in any way, except to reiterate what he said while on the witness stand, that "something told him to do it, because Hodgetts talked about my mother."

He also admitted that after killing Hodgetts he had intended proceeding on his bicycle to Bernardsville, five miles distant, to kill Railroad Station Agent Abel for the same reason. Clawson was captured before he could carry out his plan.

William Steele, of the Somerville firm of Steele & Mehan, who defended Clawson, expresses his belief that the prisoner is insane.

Mr. Steele added that a petition will be presented to the Board of Pardons at Trenton asking for a commutation of his sentence to life imprisonment.

If Clawson is hanged on December 16, his will be the first legal execution which has taken place in the county since the year 1787, when a negro was hanged at Somerville for having set fire to a barn.

SUPERSTITION MAY SAVE HIM.

Johnson May Not Be Hanged, Is the Opinion of Citizens.

The decision of the Supreme Court affirming the judgment of the Somerset court in sentencing Jacob S. Johnson to be hanged for the murder of Annie Lackman, was received with satisfaction. It has been learned, however, that counsel for Johnson have served notice upon Prosecutor Dungan that they will apply to the Chancellor for a writ carrying the case to the Court of Errors and Appeals.

The case has been pending since last March. In the opinion of the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Beasley says: "All the evidence in the case has been carefully examined and considered by each member of the court, and the unanimous conclusion is that the verdict could not reasonably be other than it is."

The application for the writ will be argued at Newton tomorrow. The citizens of Somerville are beginning to think that the old superstition existing in this country which has kept any person from being hanged for one hundred years may save Johnson.

CURFEW IN JERSEY.

AGITATION FOR SUCH AN ORDINANCE GATHERS SUPPORT.

Intended to Keep Children off Streets After 8 in Winter and 9 in Summer—Playing in Streets at Night Not Allowed.

The agitation for the ringing of the curfew at night to clear the streets of children has extended all over the State. The question is being considered by the people of twenty towns. The agitation began in the Mercer county branch of the State Charity Aid, and now it has extended to the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the New Jersey Home Societies, which have branches all over the State.

The Rev. George B. Maddock, the Caaplain of the State Prison, has become the curfew apostle. He was the first one to bring the subject to the attention of philanthropic persons in the State, and he is now kept busy writing letters to those who are seeking information. He finds that the subject is growing, and he thinks that the curfew will be put in operation soon in some of the smaller towns.

The matter was discussed at the various county conventions of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and is now the uppermost theme in many of the local branches.

The Elmer Branch has passed resolutions indorsing the plan, and the matter is being agitated in Bridgeton, Millville, Cap May, Salem, Mount Holly, Trenton, New Brunswick, Elizabeth, Orange, Hackensack, Newton, Hackettstown, and Belvidere.

The friends of the curfew have gone so far as to draft an ordinance which embraces the best features of the several ordinances of the curfew towns of the West, principally Lincoln, Neb. The provisions of the proposed ordinance provide that it is unlawful for any person under fifteen years of age to be or remain in or upon any of the streets, alleys, or public places at night, after the hour of 9 o'clock p. m. from March 1 to August 31, inclusive, of each year; and from September 1 to the last day of February, inclusive, of each year, after the hour of 8 o'clock p. m., unless such person is accompanied with a parent, guardian, or any other person having the legal custody of such minor person, or is in the performance of an errand or a duty directed by such parent, guardian, or other person having the care and custody of such minor person, or whose employment makes it necessary to be upon said streets, alleys, or public place during the night time after said specified hours.

It is provided that no child or minor person arrested under the provisions of this ordinance shall be placed in confinement until the parents or guardian of such minor persons shall have been notified of such arrest, and shall have refused to be responsible for the observance of the provisions of this ordinance by said minor person.

Mrs. John D. Townsend, of New York City, is doing much to enforce the curfew both in New Jersey and in New York. She is interested in the Boys' and Girls' National Home and Employment Association.

It is not the idea to provide a bell that will ring the curfew, except in small communities where there is no striking town clock. When there is this ringing off of the hour it will be sufficient.

Miss Ginna's Tea at "The Pines."

The storm and dullness of the weather Friday afternoon only served to bring out in contrasting relief the brightness and beauty of Stephen A. Ginna's home, "The Pines," where Miss Ginna, the daughter, gave a tea in honor of her friend, Miss Perkins, of Rochester. A large number of young people enjoyed the pleasant occasion. In the parlor receiving, with Miss Ginna and Miss Perkins, were Miss Ginna's mother, and the Misses Marion Dumont, Kittie Stewart and Edith Hyde. In the dining room, Mrs. Evarts Tracy and Mrs. Delanore served tea and chocolate and the assistants were Mrs. Fred Yates and the Misses Minnie Word and Florence Huntington. The floral decorations were beautiful white chrysanthemums from Mr. Ginna's greenhouses.

HALF DOZEN RASH GIRLS

EXPERIMENTED WITH ETHER IN A WAY THAT WAS RE KY.

Sprinkled the Field on a Shawl Under Which They Breathed in the Fumes and Became Nearly Unconscious

There were six badly frightened girls at the Plainfield High School Thursday, and all as a result of a little experimenting. One of the number brought a bottle of ether to school in the morning unknown to the teachers, and at recess showed it to her friends. The young ladies had often heard of the fluid but none of them knew exactly its effects, and anticipating no harmful results they did a little experimenting with it. They covered their heads with a shawl and sprinkled the ether on it and then waited. When the bell rang for the close of recess the shawl was removed and the girls found that they could hardly stand. The now thoroughly frightened girls managed to reach their respective class rooms in safety to find that they could hardly see, and in terror at the results of their little fun, they went to Superintendent Maxson.

They told him their woes and explained the whole matter. They felt the effects of the ether all the rest of the morning. In the afternoon one of the party went to sleep at her home, and it was only after repeated efforts that she was awakened. Several others had somewhat similar experiences and it is not likely that this same party will undertake any experiments with ether again. They are very lucky to escape without much more serious consequences.

LANDLORD AG'IN EDITOR.

WOES OF A MEMBER OF THE FOURTH ESTATE IN JERSEY.

Landlord Thinks That the Editor's Printing Machinery Affects His Building With Ague and Keeps Away Tenants

Editor J. Alfred Potter, of the Cranford Chronicle, is beset with all the trials and tribulations common to members of the fourth estate in New Jersey, and just at present he is the victim of some that are not classified in the category of a newspaper man's ills. Editors have dissensions with persons of pretty nearly every avocation and standing in the community in which they wield the pen, but Editor Potter is particularly unfortunate. He is having trouble with his landlord. This would not be unusual if the editor did not pay his rent. But Mr. Potter pays his rent and still has considerable trouble.

According to the editor's version, the only opinion that a "man up the tree" can form is that the landlord was satisfied when Mr. Potter was merely doing business enough to exist, but as soon as he evidenced more prosperity the landlord objected. That is, he objected to the machinery which the editor has equipped his office with.

Last week The Daily Press published the story of the trouble between Mr. Potter and the owner of the building—Hugo C. Fett is his name—on account of the severing of a connection of an exhaust pipe with the gas engine by a plumber employed by Fett while the editor and his employes were at lunch This, it would seem, was the beginning of the trouble, unless the latter primarily originated when the editor bought the engine. At any rate, Editor Potter had the plumber arrested for his overt act. In his next issue the editor classified Mr Fett as a champion mean man, and to prove it he related a few instances. One of them was that when nurse maids persisted in perambulating past Fett's residence with their charges in the four wheeled vehicles in opposition to his wishes, he reconstructed his sidewalk by building long planks lengthwise and leaving great cracks between each board, thus making it impracticable for the nurse maids to wheel their charges along that particular point with any degree of safety.

Now it seems that Fett followed this sally up by instituting a suit in the District Court of Elizabeth for the recovery of $200 damages from the editor because the latter's printing machinery shook the building, and, it was alleged, bothered the other tenants. Whether or not the other occupants of the structure complained of the building having the ague is not known. Among the enants of Fett is an Italian and a Chinaman, one a peanut vender, the other a shirt cleaner. Neither one of these complained of the shaking of the building, and they were the editor's closests neighbors.

But when the landlord ascended the witness stand the reason was explained. It seems, according to Fett, that several people had inspected the vacant apartments in the building and gone away and not rented them. Fett immediately concluded that it was because the trembling of the building, superinduced, as he claimed, by the printing machinery frightening them. He swore that he felt that it was his moral right to warn prospective tenants of this shaking, but when pressed he admittted that he had not told any of them.

A dozen or more other persons had been subpoenaed by the landlord, but from none of them could he really get anything that favored his side.

Finally, the case was given to the judge and he reserved his decision. All Cranford expectantly awaits the outcome of the fight between the editor and the landlord.

Machinists Find Work.

How to Prevent Croup.

SOME READING THAT WILL PROVE INTERESTED TO YOUNG MOTHERS. HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THE DISEASE.

Croup is a terror to young mothers and to post them concerning the cause first and next and best treatment is the object of this item. The origin of croup is a common cold. Children who are subject to it take cold very easily and croup is almost sure to follow. The first symptom is hoarseness; this is soon followed by a peculiar rough cough, which is easily recognized by all who have ever been by one who has heard it. The time to act is when the child first becomes hoarse. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is freely given all tendency to croup will soon disappear. Even after the croupy cough has developed it will prevent the attack. There is no danger in giving it as it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, druggist.

Many lives of usefulness have been cut short by neglect to break up an ordinary cold. Pneumonia, bronchitis and even consumption can be averted by the prompt use of One Minute Cough Cure. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

GOT A VERDICT ON THE APPEAL.

Dr. Lawler Finally Wins a Long Drawn Out Case.

Dr. J. H. Lawler, the veternary surgeon of North avenue, a graduate of a New York college, was called upon sometime ago to treat a horse owned by Mr. Jones, of Westfield, a New York lawyer. After treating the horse and making him perfectly sound, the doctor rendered his bill, which was objected to, the objection being that the animal had not been properly treated. The doctor felt aggrieved and commenced an action before Justice Newcorn and the case was tried before a jury which brought in a verdict of no cause for action. The doctor still feeling that his cause was a just one and that he had not received justice, appealed the case to a higher court at Elizabeth and on Monday last it was tried before Justice McCormick and a jury. Mr. Jones retained Wm. A. Coddington to present his defense, and after a very hotly contested trial and the examination of a number of witnesses pro and con, the jury gave the doctor a verdict for the full amount of his claim.

School Boys to Drill Publicly Soon

As soon as the school cadets of the city and borough have perfected their drill a competitive drill will probably be held in the Jersey Cycle Academy sometime this winter. It is the wish of Captain George Edwards to hold a battalion drill first and then have the two companies drill against each other. Such an affair would be of much interest to citizens of both Plainfield and North Plainfield and would attract many to see it.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY,

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

Col. Fred D. Grant was seen yesterday relative to a statement for which Dr. C. J. Charlton of Plainfield, N J., who returned recently from a visit to Gen. Miles at Washington, is authority, that he is to be appointed Secretary of War in President McKinley's Cabinet, Col. Grant said:

"I don't know anything about, but I hope it's true. Mr. McKinley has not notified me. I would be very much pleased if I got such word from him. I have been working for his nomination and election for two and a half years, but nothing has been said as to any return whatever. I worked for him because I thought him to be the best and most and most available candidate. I am as delighted with his election as if I expected some return, which I do not."—New York Times.

It must be confessed that so far as for quickly and easily determining the result of a vote, New Jersey is dreadfully slow. What is needed is a law closing the polls at an earlier hour than is now the custom. In several of the districts in this city, where a heavy vote was cast, it was almost 6 o'clock yesterday morning before the poll was finished, and in all, except the Second district of the Second ward, it was way into the early hours of morning before the count was completed.

While in some of the western States the National Democratic party will cease to exist, it is probable that here in the east the defeat of Bryan and Sewall will give them an incentive to thrive. W. D. Bynum, chairman of the National committee, says the party organization will not be continued. It is said that in this city, however, the supporters of Palmer and Buckner will endeavor to control the party machinery hereafter and be classed as regular.

In no place in this wide country was there a more vigorous campaign carried on than right here in Plainfield on the part of the Republicans. Chairman Fisk and his co-workers hustled every minute and utilized every method to stir enthusiasm and loyalty to their cause. In his limited territory Chairman Fisk was as much of a Hanna as Hanna is himself, in a political way.

Gov. Griggs yesterday appointed George T. Wurtz, editor of the Paterson Press, as state commissioner of banking and insurance, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Geo. S. Duryea. The term expires next February, when Mr. Wurtz will undoubtedly be appointed for the full term of three years. The office pays $4,000 per year.

The following is the comparative Congressional pluralities of 1896 and 1894 in New Jersey:

Dist.	1896.	1894.
1. Henry C. Loudenschlager	13,800	12,280
2. John J. Gardner	9,600	9,741
3. Benj. F. Howell	10,000	3,976
4. Mahlon Pitney	5,000	1,807
5. James F. Stewart	10,150	5,972
6. H. Wayne Ivins	11,475	5,870
7. Thomas McEwan, Jr.	4,904	293
8. Chas. N. Fowler	11,138	6,236
Totals	77,719	48,479

Through an error in the haste at*tendant to making up the election* returns yesterday, The Press printed Assemblyman Codington's vote as 2,168 in this city. It should have been 2,268, so that he did not really run behind the other candidates to amount to anything.

Now that the National election is ended Plainfield is already to jump into the excitement of a municipal contest next month. Though no plans seem formulated as yet, the election is likely to be a hot one.

In the municipal campaign just opening, as in the National contest just ended The Daily Press will be the only paper in Plainfield to present all sides without bias or prejudice.

It is a matter of regret that the police force is subject to such a lot of ignomy as is attached to the charges that are now pending against different members of the force.

The message of congratulation sent by William J. Bryan to President-elect McKinley was a clever and commendable act.

President Cleveland yesterday appointed M. J. Hickey postmaster at Raritan to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Patrick Burns.

The makeup of the Presidential cabinet affords the guessing ones plenty of occupation just now.

President Cleveland yesterday issued his annual Thanksgiving proclamation.

What's the matter with Hanna? He says he does not want office of any kind.

IS HE A DEMAGOGUE?

With boastful words Editor Frank W. Runyon prates of his honesty and outspokenness in matters of public policy. The essential quality needed to prove the honesty of a man is a conformation of his deeds with his words. Words avail nothing; acts prove everything.

Last Saturday, three days before election, The Press asked Editor Runyon three simple questions. They applied to the question of whether Editor Runyon is a demagogue or a consistent man. He has had six days in which to answer the queries, yet not a word has he written in reply.

Under the circumstances the only natural conclusion to be formed is that he is a demagogue—that is, he is preaching a principle that he does not practice.

The questions are here propounded again:

Does Mr. Runyon believe that the payment of $2.50 per week for typesetters is the conception of fair wages as intended by the Republican platform?

Does Mr. Runyon believe that a typesetter receiving $2.50 per week should be "docked" at the rate of $12 a week for lost time?

Does Mr. Runyon believe that an era of prosperity and good wages can come to the laboring masses of this country when printers are compelled to work in unwrapped composing rooms for one month without pay, and then are compensated at the rate of seven*ty-five cents per week?*

These are simple questions. If Editor Runyon can answer them with truthfulness and consistency The Press and an inquisitive public will be highly gratified.

A PETULANT DESIRE

Editor Charles McBride in the Elizabeth Journal last Saturday hurls back with many adjectives to Editor Runyon the latter's charge that Elizabeth Republicans cut Sheriff-elect Kirk simply because he is from Plainfield. When Editor McBride wrote the following as specifically applying to Editor Runyon's editorial observation on the Shrievalty vote, he unconsciously, no doubt, attributed the spirit that really animates Mr. Runyon in the conduct of his paper at pretty nearly all times:

> The blundering, unthinking and reprehensible manner in which the Courier-News dashes headlong into condemnation of Elizabeth Republicans, shows a petulant desire to be savage rather than a creditable intention to do right.

OFFICIAL RETURNS.

The official returns made by the county election boards give McKinley's total vote in New Jersey as 221,893. Bryan's is 134,995, making the plurality for the Republican national ticket 86,898. Four years ago Cleveland carried the State by 14,374, which shows a Republican gain of 101,572 in last Tuesday's election. The vote for Palmer and Buckner was 6,476. Levering and Johnson, the Prohibition candidates, received 5,008.

TAXABLE VALUES.

According to the annual report of the State Board of Taxation, which is about ready to be issued, the taxable property in the State has increased $10,000,000 during the past year. The values in Union county are as follows: Real estate, $92,800,171; personal, $4,-772,297; total valuation taxable, $35,-772,100.

William J. Bryan is now preparing to actively interest himself in the trans-Mississippi Congress, of which he is president. The exhibition is to be held in Omaha. It will be a general industrial and agricultural exhibit of the western States.

William J. Bryan does not take rosey view of the future in the statement that he issued last night to those who were his supporters in the contest just ended. He advances the opinion that no prosperity satisfactory to the masses of the people can come from the policy proposed by the administration of Mr. McKinley, and he advises bimetalists to prepare for the fight of 1900 which he says will be on the same issues as the one closed last Tuesday. A distinguishing feature of his statement is the portion where he speaks of appreciation of the devotion and support of his followers, and includes the name of his wife as an equal factor in the contest with himself.

Sheriff George Kyte retires from the office that he has filled for three years with the respect and approbation of the people of Union county. The important services of the position have been discharged by Mr. Kyte with eminent satisfaction, and where in many counties the Shrievalty has become the source of many political scandals and alleged miscarriages of justice, that office in this county has been administered with fairness and honor to all concerned. A good man is succeded by a good man.

> A word of advice. Drop politics; tackle business.—Newark News.

Good so far as it goes. But here in Plainfield it won't go till after the first Tuesday after the first Monday of December, when the city election is over.

shake it off

The general belief among doctors is that consumption itself is very rarely inherited. But the belief is becoming stronger that the tendency to consumption is very generally transmitted from parent to child. If there has been consumption in the family, each member should take special care to prepare the system against it. Live out doors; keep the body well nourished; and treat the first indication of failing health.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, is a fat-producing food and nervetonic. Its use is followed by improved nutrition, richer blood, stronger nerves and a more healthy action of all the organs. It strengthens the power of the body to resist disease. If you have inherited a tendency to weak lungs, shake it off.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been indorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Put up in 50c cent and $1.00 sizes. The small size may be enough to cure your cough or help your baby. All druggists.

JUST AS GOOD IS NOT SCOTT'S EMULSION.

FOR A GREATER PLAINFIELD.

In the excitement of the National election, the local issues which might have ordinarily influenced the legislative nominees were totally lost sight of in the campaign just closed. One of the most important things of interest to Plainfield and North Plainfield that the Legislature may be called upon to consider at the approaching session is the plan of consolidating city and borough under one government. Those who are at the head of the plan say that the time has long been ripe for the consummation of the consolidation by legislative enactment and they intend to push the matter at Trenton the coming winter. It is intended to arouse public sentiment in that direction and last night a conference of the leading advocates of the Greater Plainfield was held in the borough and the matter informally discussed. It is proposed that an association be formed of the leading citizens of both city and borough to devise ways and means to push the matter to a point where effective work can be accomplished. Such an association will probable be organized in a short time.

LEGISLATIVE FORECAST.

It is found that six out of the seven Republican State Senators elected are favorable to John Kean for United States Senator, and one is favorable to Governor Griggs. The Senators elected Tuesday of last week hold over until 1900, and in 1899 a successor to James Smith will be selected in the Joint Legislative caucus. The contest has begun, and it is a three-cornered fight between John Kean, Governor Griggs and State Chairman Franklin Murphy. The presidency of the Senate is settled, it is said. Senator Robert Williams, of Passaic, who was elected in the closing days of the last session to fill the unexpired term of Senator Lewis A. Thompson, who was made Clerk of Chancery, is to be honored with a full term. Assemblyman George Macpherson, of Mercer, may be the Speaker of the House.

The host of friends of Mayor Gilbert will be pleased to learn that he has been chosen as the executive head of one of the oldest and most substantial banking institutions in New York city after having worked himself up through all the positions leading to the presidency by sheer force of character and ability. The elevation of Mr. Gilbert to this position is doubtless the reason for his saying that it will be impossible for him to again become the Mayor of Plainfield

LOOTED THE "BUNGELO"

THIEVES SWOOP DOWN UPON AND STEAL LITTLE MEMENTOES.

Young People Go to a Mountain Lodge to Find That Its Interior is Topsy-Turvy from the Visit of Thieves

The rustic cottage built and owned by Mrs. F. O. Herring on Johnston's Drive, which has been the scene of many a gay crowd of Plainfield society people during the past summer, where the stiff conventionalities of a prosaic world were wafted away on the many breezes that cool the Watchung range of mountains in dog days, has been swooped down upon by thieves and looted of many little things that made attractive and convenient its interior. The structure was not such as to withstand the assault of anyone really bent on mischief, and through a window the thieves had made their entrance. The discovery was made by a party of young people who went from this city last Saturday afternoon and were bent on having a good time in the autumn weather that marked the day. It was a sorry looking sight, however, that met their eyes when they opened the door. The whole interior seemed to be topsy-turvy; every article that had been in its place when last seen by the owner was now strewn and scattered about in a promiscuous manner. A little investigation on the part of the visitors showed that the marauders had taken away pretty much everything of value, such as tableware, bric a-brac, etc. The missing articles considered singly were not of great value, but in the aggregate they amounted to quite a sum. But the loss that was felt most by Mrs. Herring was the disarrangement and destruction of many little mementoes of former visitations to the "Bungelo," as she had termed it. There is no clue to the depredators.

MR. MARTINE ON THE RESULT.

Addresses Words of Encouragement to the Defeated Ones.

To the Democrats of the City of Plainfield—The contest between the classes and masses has been fought and the Democracy has been outvoted—not crushed nor annihilated. Democrats, the principle for which we contended—Bimetalism—is as old as the Constitution of our country; its success meant better prices in wages for the toiling masses and increased prices for the products of humanity. Wealth, syndicates and plutocracy were an unequal foe for us, but our thoughts shall yet prevail. As President of the Democratic Association of Plainfield let me thank true Democrats for their steadfastness.

J. E. Martine,
Pres. Dem. Asso.

Ordinance for Sewer Assessment.

The following is the substance of the ordinance under which the sewer assessment commissioners are working:

* * * shall cause to be made a just and equitable assessment thereof upon the owners of the lands and real estate benefited thereby, in proportion as nearly as may be to the advantage each shall be deemed to acquire; provided, in no case or event shall be assessed beyond the benefits received by his or their lands and real estate, and in cases where such cost, damages and expenses exceed the benefits, the excess shall be paid out of the city fund, and the said board shall make a report in writing of the assessment so made, and the sum, if any, of the costs over benefits, to be paid out of the city treasury and before proceeding to sign said report.

Faces Death Stoically.

Eighteen-year-old Elmer Clawson, who is imprisoned at Somerville awaiting execution for murdering his former employer, George Hodgetts, on Aug. 29, shows a calm stoicism that nothing can shake. Throughout his life, it is said, the boy has shown the same unswerving determination. When he wanted a thing he has stopped at nothing in order to acquire it.

Middlesex Will Build the Bridge.

After considerable talk about the line between Somerset and Middle*sex counties, the Middlesex Board of* Chosen Freeholders has come to the conclusion that the white bridge over the Bound brook, south of the Lehigh Valley railroad, Bound Brook, is wholly within Middlesex county. F. M. Gise, of Dunellen, has the plans and specifications.

The total pluralities of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut for McKinley almost equal the total plurality of Cleveland in the United States four years ago. McKinley's vote over Bryan in these three neighboring commonwealths was 413,000.

The name of Councilman Barrows, chairman of the Police Board, is mentioned as possible Mayoralty candidates for the Republicans.

The Difference

"I see no difference between H-O and any other oatmeal!" We know it. The difference is not to be seen. You taste, and smell, and feel the difference, though!

H-O

is different from all others, in that it is more sweet, smooth, delicate, digestible. Its preparation begins where the others leave off. It is twice cooked, once by steam, once by super-heated air. Thus half the work of digestion is done, and the system is never over-taxed or over-heated.

Be sure to get the package with the big H-O on the end.

EDUCATING COLORED YOUTH.

The Bordentown Manual and Training School Appealing for Help.

The manual and training school at Bordentown for colored youth is the only school of the kind in the middle States. It is partly a State school or, at least, it comes under the manual training act of this State, and the board of trustees (to manage this part of the school) is appointed by the Governor. The act of the Legislature makes the Hon. Charles J. Baxter chairman of the board of trustees (as State superintendent). One of the provisions of the act of the Legislature is that all sums of money raised by private subscription is duplicated by the State, not exceeding $5,000 annually. The school also receives $3,000 annually from Congress as under the provisions of the agricultural act.

Rev. W. A. Rice, one of the found*ers of the school and who is now its* superintendent and financial agent, spoke in Trinity church last Sunday morning and handed out some circulars at the door of the church; after services he also received some substantial aid for the school, amounting to $10. Hon. Charles J. Baxter, State superintendent, being present, also made an able appeal endorsing Mr. Rice's remarks, saying among other things, that if persons of means would come to the aid of the school, it will prove a great blessing to the 40,000 colored people of this State. The school has now in roll about forty students, with twice that number of applications.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—An unknown dog was killed this morning on the Central Railroad near Park avenue.

—The literary society of Monroe Avenue chapel has prepared an excellent programme for their meeting on Friday evening.

—While Frank Hand was working at the new City National Bank building a large piece of iron fell on his foot. The injury is not serious, though it makes Mr. Hand very lame.

—Progress is making on the new street being cut through from West Front street to connect with Myrtle avenue in Washington Park. On both sides of the brook grading is going on, and all that remains now to be done is to erect the bridge over Green brook, and Plainfield and North Plainfield will be connected by another main thoroughfare, similar to the Grove street and Washington avenue roads.

MISSION WORKERS WED

MISS NOAH HERNDON BECOMES MRS. FRANK W. MORSE.

The Ceremony Quietly Performed at the Home of the Groom's Brother on Franklin Place at 7:30 Yesterday Evening.

Very informal, but very pleasant were the wedding ceremonies by which Miss Noah Mildred Herndon, of Carnesville, Ga., and Frank W Morse, of 301 West Fourth street, were united in marriage last Monday. The wedding took place at the home of the groom's brother, Joseph E. Morse, of 328 Franklin place, and was attended by the family of the groom and a few of the more immediate friends.

It was a home wedding and a very happy occasion. Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York, was to perform the ceremony, but was unavoidably detained at Northfield, and sent in his place Rev. A. E. Frink, secretary of the New York Missionary Training Institute.

At 7:30 o'clock, the couple were united by a simple, but very impressive ceremony, and then Mr. and Mrs. Morse and the guests adjourned to the dining room where the wedding supper was served, and the rest of the evening passed in a delightful manner.

Mr. Morse is well known in this city, having resided here for some time. He is superintendent of the Garwood Land and Improvement Company. Miss Herndon was a graduate of the New York Missionary Training Institute of the Christian Alliance and has been city missionary in Plainfield during the last six months.

The house was decorated with white chrysanthemums and carnations. The table decorations were very handsome, the prevailing colors being pink and white. Max Wiertz was caterer.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

Tableaux Presented and Described by Young Mission Workers.

The cosy and pretty little chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church was comfortable filled by an appreciative audience, last evening, when the Young Ladies' Mission Bands, of the Crescent Avenue and First Presbyterian Churches joined in giving and entertainment that was most pleasing and besides netted the bands a snug little sum in reward for their efforts. Miss Carrie Dewey presided at the piano and rendered some delightful music, bringing forth well merited applause.

The entertainment consisted principally of tableaux from "Pride and Prejudice," by Jane Austen, written in 1796, and the costumes were in keeping with colonial times. A list of the characters and impersonations follow: "Mrs. Bennet," Miss Grace Petrie; "Mr. Bennet," W. L. C. Glenny; "Miss Bennet," Miss Ethel Holmes; "Miss Elizabeth Bennet," Miss Sarah Richards; "Miss Mary Bennet," Miss Ruth Lindsay; "Miss Kitty Bennet," Miss Lockey; "Miss Lydia Bennet," Miss Harriet Goddard; "Lady Catherine de Bourg," Miss Harriet Gardner; "Miss Bingley," Miss Louise Patten; "Mr. Bingley," Edward Petrie; "Mr. Darcy," Henry Patten; "Mr. Collins," Mr. Bonnell. Miss Edith R. Leonard acted as reader.

On the whole the entertainment was a pronounced success, and at the completion of the tableaux home-made candy was offered for sale in the church parlors.

NEW VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

Capt. and Mrs. A. E. Ransom to Take Charge Next Thursday.

Captain and Mrs. A. E. Ransom will assume charge of the American Volunteer post in this city next Thursday after having been stationed at Newark since their marriage some weeks ago. Mrs. Ransom was well-known as Captain Mimms and she was the first Volunteer officer to serve in this city. Before the organization of the Volunteers she was in charge of the Salvation Army Corps in this city also. She is very popular among workers in this kind of religious warfare. The romantic courtship of Mr. and Mrs. Ransom has been fully told in the columns of The Press heretofore. Captain Ransom was a former reporter on the New York Advertiser and is a bright writer. The new officers will undoubtedly invigorate the activities of the Volunteers in this city to a considerable extent. Sunday night they were given a farewell at the Newark post, and much regret was expressed that they were to leave there.

An Expert at the Sewage Beds.

Allan Hazen, who was consulting engineer in the construction of sewers recently finished in this city, was in town Saturday as guest of Councilman Frost inspecting the sewage beds. Mr. Hazen has just returned from Berlin where he has been investigating the sewer farms.

Joseph Hyland, of Rahway road, near Fanwood, has been ailing for the past three months from an aggravated attack of malaria. At times he is able to go about the house and yard, but of late he has been growing worse.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co., New York

THEATRICAL.

The Kennedy Players tonight present the "Two Orphans" at Music Hall. They stake their reputation as a competent company on this presentation, and no doubt a big house will greet them. Last night's performance of "The Octoroon" was well received. Matinees will be given during the remainder of the week.

At H. R. Jacob's Theatre in Newark "The Great Train Robbery," with real Indians, an acting bear, a bowie-knife duel, representation of raids by bandits, robbery of express trains and other sensational features, will be the attraction of the week. The play promises to satisfy the most exacting admirer of the kind of wild western drama of which it is a type.

Miss Pauline Hall was heard at Proctor's Pleasure Palace Monday, making her first appearance on the vaudeville stage. She sang songs from two or three of the operettas in which she has previously had parts. Willie P. Sweetman told stories and sang songs and stirred up laughter. Other entertainers were the Garrisons, Kelly and Grey, Lieutenant Noble, the Scandinavian ventriloquist; Count Kaoly and Mlle. Vonare, equilibrists; the three Girdelies; Maud Beall Price, mimic; Douglas and Ford, dancers; Mlle. Ina, transformation dancer; Annie May and Lizzie Randall, sou brettes; Walter Hyde, trick violinist; W. H. Burke, harmonica soloist, and St. Clair and Lorena.

"Lost, Strayed or Stolen" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York, has settled into a run and a succession of audiences that tests the capacity of the theatre. "Lost, Strayed or Stolen" is undoubtedly J. Cheever Goodwin and Woolson Morse's ablest work. It is full of catchy music, sparkling comedy and strictly original business, and it is rendered by a company of clever comedians and remarkably pretty girls. The numerical strength of the organization presenting this work is about seventy-five artists, and include Louis Harrison, Joseph Herbert, M.A. Kennedy, Cyril Scott, Claude Brooke, Henry Bergman, Miss Georgia Caine, Fannie Buckley, Rose Beaudet, Florence Thornton, Caroline Leigh, Irene Verona, Sue Meade, Emma Janvier and a male and female chorus. The scene of the comedy is laid in Paris, and is speaking of the action and production, Vance Thompson, the well known critic, says: "It is Paris. A great success and moral."

Plainfield theatre-goers have had opportunity of witnessing the best repertoire companies on the road from time to time, but at no time have they been better pleased with a combination company than that of the Kennedy Players who made their debut in this city last night. As John Kennedy, who is at the head of the company, will last night, we have had pretty nearly all the Kennedy's (Lillian, James, Alfred Kelcy) here before, and he comes as the last installment. He may be last, but he is not least; as a matter of fact he is the best actor of the family. The opening piece was "The Midnight Express," recognized heretofore under the title of "She Couldn't Marry Three." But what's in a name? The melo-drama was witnessed by an audience that filled every seat in the theatre, and that it struck the popular fancy of the audience was assured by their frequent and vigorous applause. Though the piece was written expressly as a vehicle to present Lillian Kennedy favorably before the public, it must be confessed that the production last night was very much superior to that ever witnessed with the fair Lillian in the cast herself. During its presentation many specialties were introduced in an up-to-date manner with song and jest. John Kennedy is naturally unctuous in his wit and whenever he essayed to be funny, he really was funny. The much-advertised dance of "Flora" came in the nature of a surprise; much better than was advertised. Her dances are modeled after the famous terpischore exhibitions of Loie Fuller, and in the manipulation of untold yards of silk with novel effects and colored calcium lights, she poses as a very clever artist in her line of work. Tonight the company presents "The Octoroon." They will undoubtedly play to big audiences during their stay here.

baugh, of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company, went to White House this morning after the "cottontails." The employees of this same company expect to live on rabbit's flesh for the next week as a result of the expedition.

Herbert Randolph, of Woodlawn Farm, spent part of the day in the neighboring fields and secured five rabbits.

Frank Fulton, of Leggett's pharmacy, was among the hunters. He shot four rabbits and his companion killed five.

J. Hazelwood Craig, of Dunellen avenue, captured six cottontails over in the fields back of Dunellen, near Rockview Farm.

Fred A. Pasch, of Race street, North Plainfield, was one of the lucky hunters who went after rabbits yesterday, having shot eight in a few hours.

There are lots of rabbits, and squirrels, too, in the vicinity of the Fanwood clubhouse, says C. C. Irby, the proprietor. Yesterday morning he was out and shot three rabbits in ten minutes.

Andrew Vanderbeek returned last evening from North Branch, where he has been for a few days past hunting cottontails. He was well rewarded for his trip and brought with him a considerable amount of game.

There is an ordinance prohibiting the shooting of firearm within the city limits and Chief Grant says that the ordinance will be enforced to the letter during the hunting season. A violation is punishable by a fine of $20. So be careful where you shoot.

William Jones, the genial porter at Randolph's pharmacy, could not resist the excitement and yesterday noon he also went hunting. Away on Manning avenue he spied a cottontail and put an end to its earthly existence with a shot gun. He then returned to his duties satisfied.

Once every year Assemblyman W. R. Codington and two brothers and their families meet together at the old home at Millington. They gather on the day that the hunting season begins and the three brothers spend part of the day in chasing the elusive cottontail and trying to scare up a bevy. For thirteen years they have met regularly and yesterday the families again gathered. The assemblyman and his brothers wandered through the adjoining fields in search of game, but rabbits were harder to capture than votes and they returned with plenty of room left in their game bags.

ELECTION OFFICERS' PAY

COUNTY ATTORNEY CODINGTON INTERPRETS THE LAW.

In Elizabeth Election Officers Will Be Paid Per Diem, and in the Country Districts According to the Number of Voters

The question of the compensation of the board of registry and election, owing to the recent change in the State laws, has perplexed the freeholders, and they were in doubt about what they should pay the members of the board for their services at the recent election.

The election board has exhibited considerable interest on the subject, and has held several meetings.

The freeholders referred the question to County Attorney Codington, and his opinion, which will be submitted to the board at the meeting on the 19th inst., is as follows:

November 8th, 1898.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

Gentlemen:—My opinion having been asked as to what compensation members of the boards of registry and election were entitled to for services rendered at any general election in this State, I would say that under the supplemental act entitled "An act to regulate elections," which supplement is found on page 85 of the laws of 1896, the compensation to each member of the board of registry and election shall be in proportion to the number of registered voters in their respective election districts, as follows, that is to say: To each member of the boards of registry and election in districts where the number of registered voters is more than 100, $15; in districts where the number of registered voters is more than 50 and not more than 100, $20; in districts where the number of registered voters is more than 300, $25. Said sums to be in lieu of all other fees and charges whatsoever.

The above, however, will not apply to cities having a population exceeding 60,000. By the eleventh section of an act entitled "A further supplement to an act entitled 'An act to regulate elections,' which supplemental act was passed in 1898, page 46, of the laws of 1898, it is provided that in cities having a population exceeding 60,000, each member of the board of registry and election for all services performed by them shall be paid as follows: For each registry day, $3; for each election day, including counting of the votes and the delivery of returns and the moneys to the collector, $10.

I understand that the city of Elizabeth has a population exceeding 60,000 therefore the payment to the members of the boards of registry and election in that city would be controlled by the last above stated act.

I would suggest that all members of the boards of registry and election outside of the city of Elizabeth when making up their bills state in the body thereof the number of registered voters of their respective districts, so that the collector may the more readily verify their bills.

Yours very respectfully,

W. R. Codington,
County Attorney.

What They Said.

One of the yells that was given frequently in the parade Saturday night, especially by the Young Men's Republican Club, was "One—two—three—four—five—sixteen to one! Nit!" They also gave "Left—left—Bryan, he got left! In—in—McKinley, he got in!"

Admitted to the Bar.

TALKED GOLD TO WOMEN

MAYOR GILBERT ON THE DELOPMENT OF THE MONETARY SYSTEM.

Says That the Masses Are Not Able to Intelligently Decide What is Good in a Financial System for Them.

At a special meeting of the Monday Afternoon Club held at the Casino Monday afternoon, Mayor Gilbert delivered an address on the "Delopement of the Moneta y System." The hall was well filled with the members of the club and their friends who were greatly enlightened by Mr. Gilbert's talk, a portion of which is as follows:

"Among the alarming features of the great campaign through which we have just passed is that the great ecomic question was left to the masses instead of the acknowledged financers of the country of the country who are thoroughly versant as to what is needed. If the election had gone the wrong way we could not conceive the result. Savings of a life time might have been swept away and ruined. We cannot expect the masses to understand this money question. No doubt you all think you know what it is, and you would probably say that money is a medium of exchange. If we go back to Chinese history 2,500 years ago, we find the people using clay tablets as money and it performed the function of money satisfactory. That was flat, pure and simple. When Li Hung Chang visited this country he showed himself to be a close observer and a profound student of finance, and when he left the Treasury department he left a memoranda which said: 'I have travelled all over the world and I have discovered that all nations using gold as a standard are the most powerful and prosperous nations of the world.' China has made very little progress in the monetary system. They now use coppers on a string, 1,000 to 1,800 of which make a dollar. They are piled up in the market places the same as potatoes, etc. The Chinaman receives eight and ten of these coppers for a work.

"Mr. Bryan said, among other things, that if gold was demonetized and the value was destroyed, it would decline like silver. That is where he made a mistake. You cannot destroy the value of gold. If all the mints were closed, people would still demand gold until some more valuable metal was discovered. My purpose is to impress upon your minds that money is more than a medium of exchange. It is a measure of value the world over and money is worth just what it will buy. Gold is the only substance that will fill all the requirements and pass safely through fluctuation.

"No other commodity has had such qualifications. With the silver dollar today the government stands behind it, but with Mr. Bryan's silver dollar the government could not do this, for it would not have a redeeming place and its purchasing power would be limited. From the earliest period nations have regarded metals the best thing for money, principally because they were interesting to look at, receive and hold impressions easily. Prior to 1870, England was the only nation where gold was used. In 1816 she demonetized silver and wrestled with the question of bimentalism. After these years we take up the question which England settled. England found it impossible to maintain a parity. In 1871 or 1872 Germany demonetized silver. Previous to the French war she wrestled with the problem. In 1873 the United States took up the question as to what should be done with the silver dollar. There was only $800,000 coined and they were sent abroad. The monetary system has been reduced to a scientific basis and the world is constantly advancing toward better things. Gold has been selected as the best and safest for the banker, merchants and laboring man. It fluctuates less than any other metal, while silver has been demonetized the same as copper. We have no more use for silver today than we have for the old stage coach. Gold will do thirty-two times as much work. People don't want metallic money except to pay foreign indebted ness. While Bryan sought to restore the money of silver he discharged the banking system with being the cause of all ills. Years ago people used to hide money away in stockings, etc., but when banks were instituted they deposited their money, had it invested and as a result untold industries were started and the country became prosperous. Mr. Bryan attempted to throw us back one hundred years by given us the dollar of our fathers. Why not give us the hatchips and tallow-dip of fathers? The people would not be influenced and we have today the standard of the world—the gold standard." After Mrs. Sterling announced the next lecture to be held December 14th, which will be delivered by E. C. Perkins on the subject "The Man With the Iron Mask," a vote of thanks was given Mayor Gilbert for his excellent talk. The meeting then ad journed.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS.

Elaborate Machinery Is Required to Conduct Them.

The National Committees and Their Functions—Price Printed Matter Is Distributed—The Assignment of Stump Speakers.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

With the nomination of candidates for president and vice president in the national convention, the political machinery of a campaign is formally set in motion. The life of the old national committee expires by limitation; the new national committee, often composed of practically the same men, is appointed, and the contest begins in earnest.

Though the great political parties have no recognition in the constitution, they are among the chief governing forces of the country. Each party has its own internal organization. In the case of the republican and the democratic parties, their plans of organization are so nearly alike that one description will apply to both. The official existence of the national committees is from one nominating convention to another, but their permanent activity extends over a period of only three or four months. They are composed of one member from each state and territory. Membership in the national committee is considered a high political honor, which is eagerly sought by politicians. It gives the members a vote in the national councils of the party, and, in the event of the election of the party's candidates, in the distribution of the federal offices in their states.

Immediately after the national conventions, the committees organize for the campaign by the election of a chairman and secretary. The chairman must of necessity be a man of large political experience and sagacity. He is usually the friend and personal choice of the presidential nominee. The secretary's office is salaried. The chairman becomes the director general of the campaign. The secretary on the other hand is a practical manager, on whom much of the burden of detail falls. Before its adjournment, the national committee selects from its membership an executive or working committee, and designates a place for the opening of national headquarters. The members of the executive committee as a rule are distinguished representatives of their states, or group of states, chosen for their knowledge of political conditions. The executive committee remains on at headquarters during the campaign as an advisory council to the chairman and secretary, holding daily meetings, which resemble the councils of an army general. Reports from all parts of the country are received by the committee by mail and telegraph, from the chairmen of the state committees, and from prominent men in different states. It is the only duty of the executive committee to take the political pulse of the country and to act in accordance with the symptoms. Hundreds of letters and telegrams are received daily; distinguished visitors arrive from every state and territory. The drift of public sentiment is thus accurately watched by the committee. It may be compared to a great inquirer with sensitive fibers radiating in every direction.

M. HASKELL,
Sergeant-at-Arms Republican National Committee.

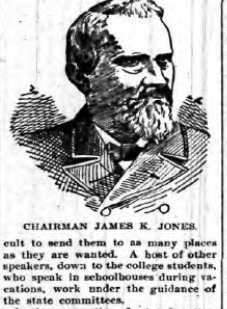
It is sometimes found expedient by a national committee to divide its forces, and to maintain headquarters in two different cities, usually New York and Chicago, or Washington and Chicago. This has been done by the national republican committee in the present campaign. The executive committee is divided between New York and Chicago. Mark Hanna, the chairman, vibrates between the two cities.

No sooner has the national headquarters been established than it becomes the center of interest to every voter in that faith. Hardly a man of national reputation in the party is not seen at headquarters during the campaign. A constant stream of visitors pours in, whose business in many cases is frivolous or inconsequential. But all must be met with equal courtesy and attention. The reception of callers, therefore, becomes a matter of delicacy and tact, which is intrusted to the secretary, chairman or his assistants. Few of the visitors can be admitted to the presence of the chairman of the committee or the heads of departments, but all must be made to feel that they have been slighted. The position of sergeant-at-arms is one requiring great tact and judgment on the part of the occupant.

So many calls for printed speeches, documents and other information are received by the executive committee that provision is made for them in the literary bureau. The strongest writers and the editors of the leading papers in the party are enlisted in the service of the bureau for the preparation of the matter to be sent out. Arguments for the platform or principles of the party are printed in the form of pamphlets, leaflets or tracts. The speeches of the leaders of the party in the senate or house of representatives are issued in printed form to be scattered far and wide. In the present campaign there is a great demand for information on financial questions, such as the coinage of silver and gold. To meet this demand the arguments for either standard are reduced to simple form for hand-to-hand circulation, and sent out by the literary bureaus in vast quantities. This distribution is accomplished by a department created for the purpose, from which printed matter is shipped by the ton to the state and county committees.

Before the campaign has far advanced, there will be a call upon the national committee for speakers. A bureau of speakers becomes a necessary adjunct to the headquarters, by which the orators are assigned to different parts of the country. It is customary for the leading men of the party to be called upon or to volunteer their services as speakers. They are assigned to state committees, under whose direction they address meetings in the cities and towns. Certain men of national reputation are always in demand, and it becomes difficult to send them to as many places as they are wanted. A host of other speakers, down to the college students, who speak in schoolhouses during vacations, work under the guidance of the state committees.



CHAIRMAN JAMES K. JONES.

In the preparation of printed matter, the assignment of speakers and the dispatch of the mass of correspondence, a vast amount of work and material are required. As a consequence, large sums of money become necessary in conducting a campaign. To meet these calls, a financial committee is appointed, whose business it is to raise the funds needed. The cost of a campaign runs into the millions, all of which must be raised by subscriptions and contributions. The wealthy men of the party are likely to be called upon for subscriptions, often as much as $50,000 being given by some millionaire. Candidates for offices are expected to contribute to the campaign fund, according to the office to which they aspire. The levying of assessments upon federal officeholders has been a favorite method of raising money, but this source of revenue has been cut off by law. Much of this money is expended in so-called "doubtful states" for speeches, mass meetings, bands of music, fireworks and other means of arousing enthusiasm. It does not follow that money is used corruptly, as the necessary expenses of an election are enormous. The expenses of the printing and distribution of tickets are largely paid by the party managers, but most of the states have now adopted the Australian system of printing ballots at state expense.

The collection and distribution of these sums of money renders a system of accounting a matter of necessity. For this purpose a force of bookkeepers is kept at headquarters. The republican managers have adopted the plan followed by railroads and other corporations of ordering all supplies by means of requisitions from the heads of departments. An exact account of all money expended is rendered to the executive committee by the heads of departments.

Not all of the detail of a campaign falls upon the national and executive committees, for each state has its own party organizations, called the state central committees. These committees are composed of one member from each county, who elect a chairman and a secretary.

Every county has its own committee of each party, townships and voting precincts furnishing the members, forming the "county central committee." In large cities the subdivision of responsibility extends to ward and precinct committees.

Secretary of Democratic National Committee.

When occasionally a faction or division of a party secedes or "bolts" from the regular organization the seceders find it necessary to form an organization from the bottom. A few men in each locality will send delegates to a conference. This may result in a larger and general conference, from which a call for a national convention may be issued. Official delegates are then chosen in a series of conventions.

Service in the lower committees fits for positions on the higher. The machinery of the parties forms a school of political advancement.

PLUNGING INTO FLAMES.

An Inveterate Life Saver Speaks of His Experience.

How Policeman Bedell, of Brooklyn, N. Y., Scorched His Heels Saving a Life—Other Interesting Biographical Facts.

What are a man's sensations as he plunges, regardless of consequences, into a seething sea of flame and smoke?

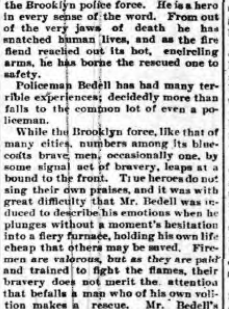
Does the heroic rescuer of some child or invalid from the horrors of a death by fire or suffocation count the chances against him, or does he cast thought and consideration to the winds and simply go where duty calls?

To the average man these questions would be difficult to answer, but there is one man who is as well qualified as any living person to tell how it feels to face one of the most horrible deaths known. And that, too, for the sake of others. The public are always interested in the motions of a hero.

That man is Officer Robert Bedell, of the Brooklyn police force. He is a hero in every sense of the word. From out of the very jaws of death he has snatched human lives, and as the fire fiend reached out its hot, encircling arms, he has borne the rescued one to safety.

Policeman Bedell has had many terrible experiences; decidedly more than falls to the common lot of even a policeman.

While the Brooklyn force, like that of many cities, numbers among its bluecoats brave men, occasionally one, by some signal act of bravery, leaps at a bound to the front. The heroes do not sing their own praises, and it was with great difficulty that Mr. Bedell was induced to describe his emotions when he plunges without a moment's hesitation into a fiery furnace, holding his own life as that others may be saved. Firemen are valorous, but as they are paid and trained to fight the flames, their bravery does not merit the attention that befalls a man who of his own volition makes a rescue. Mr. Bedell's greatest peril came not long ago, when he ran through fire and smoke to a second story room, across the blistering floor, and rescued a tiny child, forgotten by her fear-distracted mother in the horror of a midnight conflagration.



OFFICER ROBERT BEDELL.

He reached safety just as that floor made treacherous by fire came crashing almost on his very heels.

"It's funny," said Policeman Bedell, "well in one way you don't feel anything, and still you do. I mean that at a time like that a man is so excited he doesn't realize what he is running into.

"Of course you see the flames leaping up everything in sight, and seeming to leap out toward you. You feel the burning heat, and your eyes are blinded, and your breath half stopped by the clouds of smoke that roll higher and higher until they surround you on all sides. But you are, after all, only half conscious of it at the time. It is afterward, when you realize the scene, that it seems more distinct, and the full danger is realized.

"It is funny that a person's mind should act so much more quickly and sharply in times of danger and peril. But it always seems to—mine does at least. And you notice small things. I know that after eight when I went after little seven-year-old Fannie Wales at No. 1307 Bushwick avenue, as soon as I picked her up it flashed into my mind that I had better cover her head with something to prevent her being choked in the smoke. I hurried to the washstand and grabbed a towel, soaking it in the water pitcher. It didn't take ten seconds to do it, but in those ten seconds my mind had time to note a picture hanging crookedly askance. A picture of a deer wading into a lake. I envied that deer! I never thought of that picture again until I saw one like it yesterday in a shop window. Then I remembered where it was I first saw it.

"Things don't occur so quickly that you don't realize much until it is past. I know the other night, I don't recall having felt any fear until I heard the floor crash behind me, when I put my foot on the ladder. Then I must have been pretty hot as I crossed back, for the soles of my shoes were badly scorched. But I didn't do anything much after all."

This police hero is athletic and takes a pardonable pride in his prowess. It is well that he should be, for at times, for carrying frantic people down ladders reeds sinew and brawn.

Hottentots Eat Locusts.

The Hottentots are said to rejoice at the appearance of a swarm of locusts, although the destructive insects devour the herbage in the district. The natives eat them in such quantities that they soon grow perceptibly fatter. They also gather the eggs and make of them a kind of brown coffee-colored soup.

High Price for Whalebone.

The market price of whalebone is now something like $15,000 a ton, and it is appreciating in value all the time. This leads an English paper jokingly to suggest the adoption of a whalebone currency, for there is no chance for an oversupply of the article, and it cannot be imitated.

GUMBO.

BY WILLIAM F. BROWN.

Squire Mugle was tall and cadaverous. The "boys" in Habersham often called him "Meechin' Mugle" because, though locally prominent, and well to do, he wore an aspect as of one always looking for forebearance and toleration rather than expecting honor and respect.

One felt a sort of pity at sight of his hollow-cheated, angular form, which was somewhat neutralized by doubt, however, when one noted the keenness of the expression that seemed to denote the possession of more forbidding attributes.

His wife was dead, and he lived in a large, tumble-down house, two miles from the little Georgia town of Habersham. When the civil war came on he sold his negroes, retaining only Gumbo to assist in looking after his impoverished plantation. His neighbors flouted him as being a unionist, for preferring Yankee gold to good Confederate. But slave property was growing uncertain; gold was sure, and secret hiding places plentiful.

Gumbo was short, wheezy and timorous. Why the squire kept him, the least commercially valuable of his slaves, was wondered at; but the squire knew, reasoning shrewdly with himself.

"If I lose Gumbo," he would say, "I lose nothing much but a fat bag of nuisance. The rest of my niggers were worth their price."

Nevertheless, when the squire rose one night and hid his gold anew under a great hearth-stone in the kitchen, he saw a sight that made him, for the moment, regret having retained Gumbo to torment and wait upon him. That sable worthy, barefooted and in shirt and drawers, was staring at his old master from the doorway, while each hair on his kinky head seemed to be slowly straightening.

A devilish transformation convulsed Squire Mugle's face. Dashing down his candle, he sprang forward and seized Gumbo by the throat, as he stood in the pale moonlight streaming down from without.

"Did you see it?" he hissed, fairly choking with passion.

Gumbo gasped, gurgled, and at last managed to say: "Didn't see nuttin', 'ceptin' you, marse."

Squire Mugle slowly loosened his grip, tightened it again, then took his hand away, hesitatingly.

Gumbo knew. Where else could he hide his money? This spot was handy—right under his fingers, so to speak. He desired no distant swamp or hollow with tell-tale tree marks, as a place to be hunted for or forgotten, as the case might be. Here was a fixture, full of warm, personal affection. Next to the joy of handling it was the feeling that it was near by, unseen, yet felt, as by a sort of delicious sixth sense—dead to most people, yet psychologically alive to miners and Jews.

But Gumbo gazed at his old master with something like moisture in his little eyes. He was wounded to the quick by the nature of the squire's evident suspicion, and before the latter's scrutinizing look unflinchingly, though with an aspect of reproach. The squire seized Gumbo by the chin, raised the black face and glanced at it harder than ever. Then he released the negro and sighed.

"I will trust you," he said, at length. "But if you speak, or even think much about what you have seen and heard, you are a dead nigger."

One night a band of bushwhackers descended upon them, for the neighboring mountains were full of these pests then. They were a set of compound rascals, clad indiscriminately in blue and gray, and equally a curse to both confederate and union sympathizers. They served Gumbo no better than the rest of loyal, but let or lash could invoke that deity from the curious hiding-places wherein warstricken families bestowed their valuables.

The squire was routed out, but stood protestingly on his dignity. He had but a few head of poor cattle left, too poor even for army beef.

"Durn yer stock, old man!" said the leader. "We want yer money, so rush around and fork it up."

Gumbo stood quaking behind his master. Though not above pilfering the squire's tobacco, or rifling some henroost when fare was hard, he was faithful to that one great trust concerning what lay under the hearth-stone.

"Is dey unyunners er is dey rebs, marse?" he whispered.

"It makes no difference. They are thieves—so hush up. My all is in your keeping, Gumbo. Be—be!"

One of the men, approaching from behind, laid a hand on Gumbo's shoulder.

"I'll bet this nigger knows where it is," he remarked. "We've learn 'bout you and yer ole man, squire. Yer've got money hid away and we're jes' goin' ter hev it—eh, boys?"

An echo of assent from the others followed, and the man continued:

"I also learn what yer said to this nigger 'bout now. So, as the scads er we'll find a way ter make him talk."

"Boys," exclaimed the leader, "it's cold work palaverin' out here! Tote their squire inter the kitchen. I see that's a fire in thar."

Once all were inside, some pine knots were thrown on the embers, then the leader unwound a coil of rope from his waist.

"Zeb," he commanded, "you and Tom go and cut some hick'ries."

The men left the room. Gumbo's teeth chattered with fear and cold, for he was again clad only in a shirt and drawers.

"I'll give yer two minutes ter tell, squire. After thet we takes other means thet yer won't be apt ter like so well."

"Meechin' Mugle" had planted himself on the hearth-stone, over his idol.

"Gentlemen," said he, "you are troubling your sleeves for nothing. Don't we look poor enough? There is meal in the corner, a little corn in the cellar and a side or two of bacon. That is all—isn't it, Gumbo?"

"Fo' Gord, yes, marse! We-uns makes coffee—tea—nuffin, an' rubs oak ashes on de meat in place er salt—"

"Shet up, will yer!" roared the leader. "Two minutes are about up. Boys, grab thet cussed nigger."

Gumbo was seized by practiced hands. Before he really realized what was happening to him, he was swinging to a joist by the thumbs, with his toes barely touching the floor. His groans and entreaties were pitiful, yet he would tell nothing. The squire raved helplessly, from his station on the hearth. Finally Gumbo's head fell to one side and his jaws hung loose.

"Lower him down," ordered the leader. "When he comes to we'll put the wood on him if he don't blab."

A pail of cold water was thrown on the negro. He revived, drenched, shivering, and looked round at his master. Then the foolish, faithful creature moaned:

"I hain't tole yit, marse!"

"No—God bless you, boy—you haven't. I will have satisfaction for this outrage, men. I have been a magistrate, and I—"

"Will yer shet up?" shouted the leader. "Now boys, throw thet nigger over a barrel and nachilly warp the hide offen him with these hick'ries."

Soon the kitchen resounded with Gumbo's cries; yet still he would not tell.

"Up with him!" shouted the captain, now furious. "Put ther rope roun' his cussed neck. Take him out ter a tree."

While this was being done, the leader turned to the squire.

"See here," he said, "if yer don't give up thet money yer'll lose a nigger right here. We're in a hurry. Some of Wheeler's cavalry are about and we hain't over anxious ter tell 'em howdy tonight. So speak fast, lively now, er yer'll be short one more slave—sure as God made little apples."

"Fo' Gord, gen'l'men! don't hang a po' niggah fo' stickin' ter his po' ole marsee—"

Gumbo was in the air now. He was struggling, while merciless hands tugged at the rope. The squire leaped at the cord, cut it with his knife and stood over his prostrate slave, his eyes blazing like coals.

"Ye cowardly, heartless dogs!" he cried. "You shall not murder the boy. If you will have money, come with me, and may God curse the last one of you!"

He loosed the rope, raised Gumbo up and led him toward the kitchen, while the astonished bushwhackers followed, talking among themselves. The squire, still grasping his slave's arm, entered and strode to the hearth-stone, where he again faced the guerrillas.

A confused noise was now audible down the public road. Two men entered and whispered hurriedly with the captain. The noise increased to a clattering roar.

"Git outen here, men!" shouted the leader. "Wheeler's men are comin.'" Then to the squire: "We'll be back ag'in, fust yer know. As fer thet blamed nigger—here's fer him!"

A pistol flashed through the room. Gumbo screamed, and the guerrillas rushed out pell-mell, mounted and were gone in a trice. Other troops surrounded the house. A mulatto woman ran in and fell on Gumbo's neck in a fit of disconsolate.

"I hearn 'em!" she cried. "We hearn 'em et mother's. I knowed de sojers wuz in town a-furragin', so I up an' run an' hi'n dem. One on 'em shot at me an' hi'n him, an' year I is—bless Gord! What's de matter wid yer, Gumbo?"

Gumbo rose to the emergency again, for his injuries, though painful, were not serious.

"Why, howdy, Em'line," he responded. "Yer all come jes' in de nick oh time—sho'."

Gray-coated cavalrymen now swarmed in, and shots were fired about the place as the bushwhackers were captured, and a guard was left, at the squire's request, lest the scoundrels were to suddenly return. Meanwhile Emeline made Gumbo some corn coffee, a soldier gave him a drink of sorghum rum, and he began to feel quite himself again. His master watched him with kindly eyes.

"I didn't tell, marse," said Gumbo presently.

"No, you did not, but you have placed your old master under a deeper debt than mere money can repay, Gumbo. The New Year is pretty near here, and I am going to set you free—you rascal, you might have run away to the Yankees, but instead you have stood your master's best friend through thick and thin. If that doesn't deserve freedom, I hardly know what does."

"Den yer won't make me leab yer we'es I's free, marse?" Gumbo looked up anxiously, scarcely thinking enough of the boon, apparently, to say "thank you."

"No! If you want to stay—and I hope you do."

"I—how 'bout Em'line? Me an' she wants ter marry pow'ful, don't we, Em'line?"

"O' way, niggah! I hain't talkin' now." And yet Emeline looked pleased.

"Well—well—I'll see about it then."

It was easier to give Gumbo freedom than gold. The negroes would probably all be free before long, anyhow. "Times is mighty tight, but you can have the two geese, Gumbo, and—yes—hang me if I don't! Emeline can have $50 for house fixings."

"Fed'rit money, marse?" asked Gumbo, anxiously.

"No—gold!" shouted "Meechin' Mugle," desperately, though his pulse bounds that emotionally afterward. "It's extravagant — it's wasteful: but — you've earned it, boy—that's all!"

The squire hurried off to bed to escape thanks and to reconcile himself to his own liberality. Gumbo threw his arms round Emeline.

"Fifty gole dollahs an' de ole blin' mar'!" he shouted, ecstatically. "Em'line — honey—we's rich!"—New Bonem'n.

ICE CREAM IN JAPAN.

Made and Served on Street Corners While You Wait.

The little brown men of the mikado have just as sweet a tooth as their fellow cousins across the sea, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. They are very fond of American candy, when they can get it, but our cheapest candy is as dear to them that they cannot afford to buy more than half a cent's worth at a time. Chocolate, however, they make their own candies and sweeties, and some of them are very nice.

They have an ice cream which is cooler and perhaps more healthful than the cold, which they make ourselves. It required no machinery and no cooking. It is made for you on the street corners of Japan while you are looking. The dealer has in a box any number of chunks of ice. You give him an order and he takes it out a clear, clean piece half as large as a brick. With a coarse iron grater rubs the ice into a thick snow, which fall into a cup or goblet. He rubs up enough ice to fill half fill the vessel, throws over the top of it a spoonful of fine granulated sugar, squeezes into it the juice of two lemons.

He hands the vessel to you, with a spoon, and you can eat it in whatever style you like. You can mix it up and it becomes like water ice, or you can pick out the ice and sugar together and consume that separately. In the place of lemon you can have, according to the season, lime, orange, pineapple, wild berry, cherry, tea and coffee. For a small cup of this simple but pleasant delicacy the charge is two cents, and for an eggcup full, one cent.

A LIVING MEAL.

A Fish That Watches Its Own Destruction in a Japanese Restaurant.

The most daring dish to the European epicure is none other than a living fish. This horrible delicacy is served as follows: Resting on a large dish is a mint formed of rounds of glass held together by plates of bronze, on which is a living fish with gills and scales moving regularly; at its back rises a bunch of white shreds resembling damp isinglass, but in reality a colorless seaweed, while the fish itself rests on damp green algae. In front is a pile of small cubes of sawfish garnished with a ruddy tuft of variegated bamboo leaves. A portion of the raw fish from the pile in front of the living victim is now placed on a saucer and passed to each guest, and so on until the contents of the pile is consumed. Then the waiter raises the skin (which has been cleverly loosened) of the living dish, and proceeds to take slice after slice from the upper parts. The creature is thus carved while still alive, the pile of fish first served consisting of the lower half of the body. This has been done without consummate skill that as one part has been touched; the heart, the liver, the gills and the stomach are left intact, while the camp seaweed to which the flesh rests suffices to keep the lungs in action. The miserable victim looks on with lustrous eyes while its own body is consumed, probably not only for the gratification of a living creature assisting as a spectator at its own entombment.

AN ARIZONA MUMMY.

Once a Very Rich Person of the Ancient Aztec Nation.

An Indian mummy has been found in Arizona, near Prescott, that is believed to have once been one of the great men of the Aztecs, says the New York Herald. It was found by John F. Bush, who communicated the facts to George F. Kunz, the New York diamond expert, says the Chicago News.

Beside the mummy was a basket filled with a half peck of turquoises. With the Aztecs green was a sacred stone and wealth was gauged generally by the number of green stones one person owned. Every man's treasure in those days was buried with him, and neglect to do this was regarded as highly sacrilegious. For the nourishment of the departed soul a few ears of corn were added.

The turquoises Mr. Bundy found were in the form of beads. These the Aztecs firmly believed would ward the wearer from fevers, serpents' bites and diseases.

The mummy is a singular specimen, altogether unlike the Egyptian variety. The skin is dried firmly over the bones, giving it a withered appearance. This is due to the dryness of Arizona, which dries but seldom has the decomposing effect of our atmosphere.

Chinamen Buying Wives.

The Chinamen of Australia, when they take a notion to marry, write to a matrimonial agent in Hong Kong and tell what as follows: "I want a wife. She must be a maiden under 20 years of age, and must not be the daughter of a bone. She must also have never read a book, and her eyelashes must be half an inch in length. Her teeth must be as sparkling as the pearls of Ceylon, her breath must be like unto the perfume of the magnolia blossoms grown in Java, and her attire must be from the silken weavers of Ka-la-Ching, which are on the banks of the greatest river in the world—the everflowing Hang-tse-Kiang." The price of a Chinese woman delivered in Sydney is $100, but two Chinese women only cost $150, and therefore, the Chinese import the women in couples. The importer never sells the women before they arrive, and then the greatest one has the best one. The other is shown around to a number of well-to-do Chinese, and after they have inspected her she is submitted to what may be called public auction.

Dance in Church.

There was a curious, and to most English people an incredible, sight to have been seen in Seville recently, viz., a dance in a church. Saturday was the feast of the assumption and one of the four days on which the dance is performed, the others being the first two days of the carnival and the feast of the purification. It is danced by eight small boys, and its measure is slow. That of the minuet.

TALK WITH A JEW.

Things Seen and Heard in Northern Michigan.

An Unprejudiced Estimate of Our Jewish Fellow-Citizens — Economical Potato Planting—Landscapes That Hurt the Eye.

[Special Letter.]

Usually the first man I meet when away from home is a Jew. But as I have a great admiration for the Hebrew race these meetings by no means disagreeable. I admire the Jews because they possess the knack of adapting themselves to conditions and circumstances, and because they know how to live. Several years ago I became a convert to their theory that a man's food influences his mental and moral condition. And observation has strengthened my faith in this doctrine. The Jews eat the choicest food, as soon as they have the means to buy it. Note the result. Instead of having been in bondage and mere workers in sages they have become the prime movers in magnificent enterprises and give employment to tens of thousands of gentiles. While I admit that native shrewdness had much to do with gentile success here and abroad, yet I am firm in the belief that good cooking and the wise selection of food products has been quite as important a factor. Still another cause of the phenomenal progress made by the Hebrew race since the emancipation from bondage is its love of travel. A Jew never stagnates, either commercially or socially. When business is dull in one town he moves to another. When the society of his adopted place tires him he takes his family to a summer or winter resort. In short, he is progressive in every phase of life—whether selling goods on the road, or running a store, or dealing in options, or winning a place in the social realm, or wire-pulling political preferment. He is not satisfied until he is on top, and when on top he wants to direct the movements of the society in which he moves. What a combination of oriental tact, Christian tenacity and cosmopolitan genius! No wonder that even the Jewbaiters of Germany and Austria seek to emulate the race they hate so much by exhorting their followers to meet Semitic persistency with an imitation of Semitic aggressiveness.

Too Many Christians by Four.

The oft-repeated statement that half of our pleasure resorts would have to be closed should the Jewish population withhold its patronage received convincing emphasis in my mind during a summer trip through northern Michigan, a section of the country which has developed into a veritable Mecca for recreation seekers. The large hotels at Petoskey, Harbor Springs, Mackinaw and Mackinac Island entertained hundreds of representative Hebrew families, hailing from Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, New Orleans and other southern points. In some hostelries they formed the majority of guests, notably in one inn at Petoskey, where a peculiarly American face was hard to discover. Coming down in the train from Charlevoix I overheard a conversation between two clothing manufacturers from Cincinnati, one of whom had been to Petoskey, which, although a trifle ancient, hit the nail exactly on the head. "Well, Israel," said one, "how's things at the Blank hotel at Petoskey?" "All right, Ikey," responded the other, "only dere's too many Christians there. I met four of dem in de corridor yesterday morning." The first time I heard this story it was applied to Long Branch, but as it fits the Blank hotel at Petoskey equally well, we will let it go without further comment.

Economical Potato Planting.

Once upon a time I read that Scots and Swedes were exactly alike in one respect—a total lack of the sense of humor. The man who originated this statement must have been a dull observer indeed, for some of the brightest sketches I have heard were of Scotch origin, and Gus Heege, in his clever Swedish-American plays, has succeeded in proving that Swedish humor is worth at least a smile. Ole Olson has done more than his share to convert Michigan's great wilderness of stumps into a huge potato patch, and one of the family at least has an eye to the pecuniary advantage this summer. Seven truck Mecosta county some time in April and made arrangements with a land owner to plant a large field of potatoes "on shares." He was to furnish half the seed and all the work. The land was to rent him eight cents a bushel, and Ole was heavily on his savings; but when he looked at the large extent of soil to be worked in his heart almost failed him. However, instead of giving up in despair, he studied Mecosta county nature, and then proceeded to invite all of his neighbors to meet him on his "patch" on a certain Monday morning for the purpose of partaking of some liquid refreshments. His guests arrived on time, and so did three kegs of beer and a lot of agricultural implements. Ole asked his neighbors to hitch their horses to the machine and give him a "lift" with his potatoes before indulging in the amber fluid. By five o'clock all his seed had been planted and all the beer had been consumed. "But do you think," said I, when he had told me his story, "it was hospitable to make your guests work like slaves?" "Hi'm," responded Sven; "if dey ben fool enough to do de work, Ay vust ben fool enough to spend de dollar for beer." Now I contend that this Swedish peasant has not only lots of humor in his make-up, but enough shrewdness to accumulate a competency, no matter how discouraging conditions and circumstances might be.

Where Nature Is in Mourning.

An artist in search of a landscape depicting "Desolation" could find plenty of material in northern Michigan. After having traveled over the rich prairies of Illinois and Iowa and through the picturesque valleys of New York my heart almost bled when, for the first time, my eyes beheld mile after mile of country covered with nothing but rank grass, sand and stumps. Where a few years ago stately hemlocks and giant pines had lifted a tall man to worship his Creator nothing remained but decay

THE GIANTS OF THE PAST.

[WHERE NATURE MOURNS.

ing roots and here and there a leaning trunk scorched by forest fires. Everything else man, in his greed for gold and without a thought for posterity, had destroyed. Towns which once contained hundreds of busy inhabitants, stores and dance houses, were deserted, save by the few who had not the means to get away. The busy sawmills were moved to other points where the work of destruction promised fresh returns to conscienceless capital. Occasionally a small potato patch in the sand, laboriously cultivated around gigantic stumps, bore testimony to the industry of the few remaining inhabitants of these deserted villages, but otherwise all was desolation—a picture of want, a sermon on the thoughtlessness of man and the shortsightedness of greed. Where hundreds could have dwelled in affluence for generations, had the stock of lumber been husbanded, a few now struggle along on the borderland of starvation. The lumber mill became a millionaire in a year or two, the paupers are paupers still, and the farmer has to spend years in clearing land which, after all, promises but lean returns for his hard toil.

Stranded in a Deserted Town.

Sven, the Swede whose potato-planting experience testifies most significantly to his thrift, accompanied me to one of these deserted lumber towns located on the shores of a beautiful lake. The first man we met was a middle-aged native mechanic who, in the palmy days, had had charge of an engine in the woods. His tale of woe was pathetic, in a way. He had worked at "lumbering" for many years. "Work was always plenty," said he; "for 12 years I never earned less than $3.75 a day and for a year or more I got $7.50 a day. But lumbering is dead now. I can't get any work and I haven't enough money to get away. Don't you think that's rather hard lines?" I didn't answer his question, but Sven remarked, sententiously: "Ef Ae ben earning tree dollar seventy fi' cents a day for ten yare, Ae not have to stay here an' ben catch bullhead to keep from starvin'." Sven took the words out of my mouth. Any workingman who earns as much as this man had earned, and has not enough good American sense to make himself comparatively independent in 12 years, is not a worthy object for sympathy, although we may pity his wife and helpless children.

G. W. WEIPPERT.

Largest Bet on Record.

The biggest bet on record, according to Mr. G. H. Sims, was made a few years back by a young American who was assistant at "a main" held in the grounds of a notorious young sporting marquis, now deceased. One bird was badly crippled and the other was fighting with terrible force. "Twenty thousand to a pinch of snuff on that one," said the young American millionaire, which was taken. The American won.

DOTS.

A Cowboy's Ride with Snakes Dangling from His Overcoat.

"That's a funny looking cover on your saddle; what is it?"

"That's rattlesnake's skin. Now, you know I don't go much on them fancy notions about a saddle; fact is, it's tenderfeet go in more for such things; fancy spurs, silver on bridle, fur chaps, ivory-handled revolvers and such like. But that snakes' skin took off some rattles that fastened onto me and stayed with me near a mile. There's plenty of rattlers west of the Missouri. Mighty lucky it is they rattle and are generally where there ain't much grass, and you can locate 'em quick. I've often thought how many of us cowboys would catch it if rattlesnakes roamed around nights or lay around in the high bottom grass. I'll give 'em credit—they are square and fair and there. You get warned and they'll give you fair warning, so if you want to let them alone you can. 'Long in August they are the maddest—then they are blind and strike out wicked. Take it 'round them prairie dog towns; there's where they are thick; I've seen 100 of 'em in one town, at one sight. How in the nation they get along with their pards, the owls and the prairie dogs, blamed if I know. Some say they eat their pards, swallow 'em and get control of the concern, just as some business men do. It's one of the stock topics of discussion around the campfire whether peace and brotherly love reigns in the dog holes, or incompatibility of taste. Snakes live for choice to the owls and dogs. If the darned snake don't eat his fellow lodger, blamed if he ain't as self-denying as he is pizenous. Makes a mighty good cover for a saddle, rattlesnake skin. Stretch it over or tack it down and then shellac and it looks first rate."

"Tell me the snake story, Hank."

"Well, sir, 'twas last August. One morning I started out to hunt up a stray pony. I took the trail after and white gotch-eared horse picketed out there, meaner than he is now; always looking for a chance to dig out. Last month one of our fellows came in leaving the bronco lying down all right. He got off his horse and a old devil to a ox yoke. Well, sir, off he started. The yoke rattled, and that scart him, and why he went out of sight into the dark, into the herd, that ox yoke rattling at the end of a rope. Why, man alive, we didn't get them steers together for two weeks, and the half of them was lame from running. Much as 20 head we never did get. That old cuss out there, we found him and the ox yoke in a deep, brushy patch, a mile on the starting point. But I started in 'bout my time with them snakes; I was careless; ought to knowed better; 'twas over near Dirty Woman's ranch. My saddle girths got loose, so I stops to fix 'em right in the center of a big dog town. Like a fool I unloosened my lariat, threw it down carelessly and then got off. Wasn't holding the bridle rein. Before you could say scat old Punkins and Mollycoddle a sauced and pumped away just as I stepped into a coil of the lariat; and—by cats, before I could realize anything, the rope pulled me down and kinder half hitched under my arms and away went, that blamed plug dragging me through the town at the rope's end. Gad, how the alkali flew! The prairie dogs barked furiously, the owls screeched and the rattlesnakes rattled, but, by jiminy, 'twas rapid transit in that town for a minnit. I reckon I was hauled over a dozen dog mounds.

"Fast as I was goin', I knew the danger. Somehow one takes in a good deal in a minute. Sometimes a jiff I was in the suburbs and was sort of chuckling to think no snake had give me a dig; still I heard an infernal rattling keeping up right alongside. Punkins was hopping like a little kind, the lariat ing 140 pounds through the sage brush. As he slowed up I got a chance to make a hurried observation. Then I see at a glance how that rattling was a-keeping up. There was a big rattler about four feet long a-hopping right in front of my legs. You see, they had struck at me as I passed by, and their fangs had caught in my loose overalls, and I was going at such a lively rate it kept the snake stretched out and they couldn't get free. I knew old Punkins would stop pretty soon, and you bet I knew them snakes would likely get loose, and before I could rally would be mighty apt to hit me a lick. Luckily, both my arms were free. With one hand I managed to catch hold of the lariat above my head. Reaching down with the other I unloosened the buttons of my overalls. Just then we struck a bed of cactus. The critters hurt, but they helped strip off the overalls just the same, snakes and all. The overalls turning wrong side out caught a rattler in each leg. Just as soon as I came to a stop and could stand up I took off my hack and jumped on to them overalls, and never quit stamping them snakes as long as there was a sign of life left. The skins are the ones now on my saddle."—Hartford Times.

The Woman of It.

She read that article and went to speak to the motorman," and she said: "I wonder why not." Then, in winsome voice, she inquired of that functuary: "Why mustn't one talk to the motorman?" He told her it was against the rules. "But what is it against the rules?" "Because it is." "Then you don't like to be talked to?" "Oh, yes; but—thunder! I came within an ace of running down that old gent." "But I should think it would be nice to have somebody to speak to, instead of talking to nobody all day long." "Lady, you are to stop talking, or there's going to be a smash-up on this line, and a big one—see?" "The hateful thing! And I did so want to be sociable like. He's married, I'll bet; he's just like Henry when he's got his paper under his nose."—Boston Transcript.

THE HUMAN TARGET ACT

How a Circus Canvasman Won Fame and Fortune.

Pat Clancy Was the First to Introduce the Feature, and John Juan Was an Escaped Lunatic from Mount Pleasant.

"The knife-throwing-at-a-human-target act is now an old turn," said the old showman to a Chicago Record reporter.

"Sice here," he said, and he drew from the inside of his ragged old coat a greasy old pocketbook; then, undoing the string that bound it, he opened it and displayed a lot of dirty old letters and frayed newspaper clippings. From the latter he selected the following advertisement:

WANTED.—A MAN OF NERVE TO stand as a target for an expert knife thrower. ROBINSON'S CIRCUS.

"It's 30 odd year since this first appeared," he said, "and times is changed since then.

"We was down in Texas with old John Robinsch's circus. I was a canvasman then, and my right-hand bower was Pat Clancy, a canvasman, too. Pat was an ambitious feller, and was all the time thinking up some way to better himself. 'I don't see,' says he, 'why I should be sledging stalls and piling ropes when other fellers without half my brains or muscle is getting big money faking.'

"So Pat went in training for a performer, but he was a dead failure, and only got the laugh on all sides, till one day he struck a bright idea, and the next thing I knew he had a dozen big, ugly-looking knives, and was putting in his spare time throwing 'em at a target.

"He'd discovered himself at last, for the way he could throw them knives was really a wonder, and astounded even himself.

"After he was able to plant his knives in the target at just about where he wanted to, he drew a figger of a man on it, and took delight in seeing how near he could come to the outline without feeling it.

"Finally he was perfect. 'Now's yer chance, Billy,' he sez to me; 'you be the target. I'll throw the knives; we'll be the Lorezo brothers and be famous. Will yer do it?'

"'No on yer life,' sez I.

"Then he gits mad and walks away. And the next day the papers has this advertisement in it. I've kept it here among all the other missed opportunities of my life—you can see there's a lot of them, too.

THE SENSATION OF THE SHOW.

"But about Pat. Well, a couple of weeks passed and nothing had been heard from the advertisement, and Pat was in despair. But one day an odd-looking stranger, a tall, well-built fellow with a far-away look in his eyes, applied for the posish—and got it.

"I was there when Pat and the stranger, who said his name was Juan, had their first rehearsal, and I never seed a feller look so happy as that Juan did when he stood up before the target and let Pat stick knives around him from 30 feet off.

"We had got up into Iowa now; Pat's act was the sensation of the show, and old John Robinson gave him big money and 'featured' the act on the three-sheet posters.

"But, howsomever, things went all right until we struck a little town called Mount Pleasant, and Juan announced that he was too sick to appear and went to bed.

"The Rubes was dreadfully disappointed 'cause there was no Roman knife throwing at a human target, as advertised, and they hissed Sig. Palanci (as Pat was called) when he just threw at an ordinary mark.

"'We'll git mobbed if Juan don't do his turn to-night,' said old John Robinson to Pat. 'He must do it.'

"So out Juan was dragged; he was sheared. I could see that, but it wasn't the knives he was sheered of; he seemed frightened of some one in the audience.

"Nothing happened, though, and the next day Juan, bright and smiling, was waiting to go on in his best act, when in tall, fur-looking men, with big fellows in uniform, entered the dressing tent.

"'That's the man I want,' sez he. 'I'm the superintendent of the Mount Pleasant lunatic asylum, and that man is an escaped patient of mine.'

"Juan recognized him, too, and said: 'Well, if I must go with you I must, that's all.' And up he gets and goes.

"The superintendent afterward told us that Juan was crazy as a bed-bug on one thing, and thought he would lose his soul if somebody didn't kill him some day with a knife. Outside of this he was as sensible as you or I.

"That was the end of Juan, but seeing that Pat was so good at the biz a dozen volunteered to be the target, meaning 'em. Pat was mad at me and took a young darky, and I was left again

"'And now,' added the old circus man, plaintively, 'the knife-throwing act is an old-timer. Human targets are as plentiful as human bums on the Bowery; Pat Clancy owns a show of his own, and I am still a canvasman, and almost too old for that."

VICTORIA'S HENCOOP.

Britain's Queen Owns Some Fine Specimens of Poultry.

There are plenty of proofs that the tastes of Queen Victoria are decidedly domestic, but none seems more convincing than that she is an enthusiastic chicken raiser. The royal aviary, or, as the good New England housewife would spell it, the queen's henroop, as described in the London Feathered World by Artist Ernest M. Jessop, is a very elaborate affair.

The queen has her head "chicken man," who is aided by a large corps of experienced assistants. For 40 years the royal poultry farms were under female supervision, Mrs. D'Albertanson now in charge of the queen's room at the kennels, being supervisor. A man named Hammond has succeeded her. He knows all about chickens, their value and their artful ways.

Many breeds are kept in the royal aviary—gold and silver-spangled Hamburgs, gold and silver-penciled and black ones besides. Black, white and speckled Dorkings strut about in company with proud American Plymouth Rocks, black Minorcas, white Leghorns, Andalusians, white Rocks and Houdans. American Plymouth Rocks are, by the way, among the queen's favorites.

The bantams, as usual, are the pride of the roost. One named Toby is as tame as a kitten. He is Hammond's toy. When the keeper claps his hands the midget runs to him, jumps upon his hand and chanticleers to his heart's delight.

The chickens are let out daily in the same breed for an hour's run on the grass. For breakfast they get soft food and for the evening meal they get an abundance of wheat. There is no hospital at the royal aviary. As soon as one of the birds appears to be ailing it is put to death and afterwards cremated.

The most formidable creatures in the lot are the wild turkeys imported from Canada, but now thoroughly naturalized. Two beautiful golden eagles are among the curiosities of the collection. One was captured 30 years ago in Windsor forest. There are Aylesbury ducks, but not many. There are also golden pheasants and pigeons of various kinds.

An average of 10 eggs a day are laid by the hens. They go to the castle, Buckingham palace and Osborne house only.

The queen has an apartment at the aviary. It is a bright, sunny room, with nearly pure white walls. A case of stuffed birds shot by the prince consort is the principal ornament.

The aviary was once one of the popular resorts of the royal family, and a series of dark blue and white Dresden china is still in the house.

The royal aviary, as well as the royal kennels, is on the private road between Windsor and Frogmore, and when at Windsor the queen never fails to look at some of her pets daily. The pictures used to illustrate this story are copyrighted by the artist, E. M. Jessop.

CRETE'S NEW GOVERNOR.

He Is a Christian and Favors the Christians in His Rulings.

Georgi Pasha, the new Christian governor of the island of Crete, does not seem to please the Christian Cretans, even though his rule is such as to elicit objections from the Mohammedans, who are in the minority. The new governor's name is Georgi Berovitch, prince of Samos, and he was given his present post at the request of the European powers. Berovitch is a Christian himself, and his policy will no doubt be ultimately satisfactory to the Christian population. He is an Albanian of the Greek church, and was formerly vice governor of the island. In his new position he is not clothed with powers extending over the military, which remains under the command of Abdullah Pasha.

Bamboo for Cavalry Lances.

It is proposed to substitute bamboo for ashwood for the lances of English cavalry regiments, as the ash used is said to be brittle and not to be trusted in actual warfare.

Steel for Pens and Sword.

At the present time there is more steel used in the manufacture of pens than in all the sword and gun factories in the world.

REVIVAL OF BUSINESS

The Long Hoped-for Change Now at Hand.

CLOUDS DISAPPEAR SINCE ELECTION

Gold Premium Vanishes, Interest Rate Collapses and Millions of Dollars Are Unlocked from Hoarding—Factories and Mills Resuming.

New York, Nov. 7.—Dun's weekly review of the condition of trade will, to-day, say: A great revolution has been effected this week in the conditions which control business. It could not be in any fair degree reflected as yet in transactions or in records, but there is ample evidence already that a weight has been lifted and rolled away, and the business world has begun to adjust itself to a state of security which it has not known for years. Dread of disaster no longer locks up capital, paralyzes enterprise, and new contracts involving many millions have become binding since the election. The rush for stocks on Wednesday lifted the average for all railways $1.16 per share in a single day and least stocks $1.54, and in many of the most active the advance was so sudden that heavy sales for realizing caused some reaction. The wild advance of over 3 cents in wheat on Monday and 2 cents on Tuesday was also followed by realizing and decline on Thursday. But the instant vanishing of the premium on gold, which reached about 2 per cent., the unlocking of many millions which had been hoarded, the collapse in the interest rates from 6 and 12 to 6 and 8½ per cent., and the quick demand for American securities on foreign account, are signs of more lasting promise.

Interest in the Election Retarded Business.

Records of the past week could not be expected to show a normal result in volume of business. So engrossed was the country with the political contest that Saturday was almost a holiday at many cities as well as Tuesday, and clearings showed a decrease of 10.5 per cent. compared with last year and 13.5 per cent. compared with 1892. Railway earnings in the last week of October were relatively smaller than in other weeks, and for the month, though better than in September, were 5.2 per cent. below last year's and 6.3 per cent. below those of 1892. Tonnage west bound and north and south at Indianapolis is the heaviest for twenty years, was not 1 per cent. less at 1 per cent business than the record and an average of $49.75 per share on Wednesday, but millions of the unlocked hoard sought investment, and about 40,000 shares were taken on London account. Prices were not for some time will be governed by estimates of this better things that are coming.

Prices Stiffened.

The evil effects of a speculative rise in materials are already seen in restricted purchases of boots and shoes, resulting from the small advance in prices, which has made no progress in the past week, but was caused by a rise of 14 per cent. in leather. Behind that is the speculative rise of over 40 per cent. in hides since the first week in September, for which no valid excuse appears. The rise this week at Chicago extended to nearly all grades of packer and country hides. The advance in sole leather has an excuse in these mercurial changes, but results last year are not yet numbered that boot and shoe dealers are below buy, although in men's brogans and women's grain and buff shoes orders have been secured for some time ahead. The steadily increasingly stiffened prices of pig iron, which reached $12 at Pittsburg for Bessemer, and the certainty that many large orders for buildings and bridges and other finished forms would now become operative within the next two months, the future of this trade now depends upon the extent of increase in demand for finished products of iron and steel, which is likely to be materially affected by the course adopted by various combinations. The billet pool, which is still openly undersold at Pittsburg, and has caused no end of disturbance in business by favoring one class of producers to the detriment of another, has been in session here, and is said to have changed its basis of allotment so as to secure fairer results.

Cottons and Woolens.

A slight advance in sheetings and print cloths is the only change which yet appears in the market for cotton goods, and practically has not been yet appeared in woolens, but the reported purchase of wool, including one of 11,000,000 lbs. of territory, said to have been made by a syndicate, amounted to 18,561,000 lbs., against 5,571,150 last six years, and 8,215,650 in 1892. The average of prices rose about half a cent in October, and since Sept. 1st 104 quotations by Coates Brothers have risen from 11.16 to 12.92 cents to 4.3 per cent.

Trade Activity at St. Louis.

St. Louis, Nov. 7.—Railroad ticket agents state that during the past twenty-four hours a greater number of commercial travelers have left the city in the interest of their respective houses than at any time since last March. There is a general revival of business in all manufacturing concerns, and it is estimated that by the starting up of iron mills, factories and other establishments which have been idle during the summer, at least 4,000 men have found employment. The local banks report heavy deposits in gold during the past twenty-four hours.

Employment for 200 Men.

Milwaukee, Nov. 7.—The Milwaukee Harvester company has just placed 300 additional men at work, and its officers say 200 more will be employed within a month.

INTERESTING NOTES CONCERNING THE FOOTBALL PLAYERS.

Comment on Local Players and What Their Chances Are With the Teams That They Are Matched to Play Against.

The members of the Y. M. C. A. football team will meet at the Jersey Cycle Academy tonight and Friday night for practice. It is very necessary that all candidates for the team who wish to play in the Westfield game on Saturday should be present.

The long postponed game between the Alls eleven and the second team of Pingry's School, of Elizabeth, will be played in that city next Tuesday if the weather permits. The Plainfield boys will find dangerous opponents in the Elizabeth team, for the latter have had the advantages of a regular coach and numerous candidates.

The Alls football team seems to be in hard luck this year, so far as scheduling games are concerned. The expected to play the Paterson High School at Paterson on Saturday, but a letter has been received from the captain of the latter team in which the game was cancelled. Now the Alls boys don't know who they will play on that date.

Interest in the game at Westfield next Saturday, between the Y.M.C.A. team of Plainfield and the Westfield eleven, is rising to a high pitch. The Plainfield players will go down via stage and will meet in front of the Baldock building at 2:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon. A big crowd of enthusiasts are expected to accompany the team and will root for the local eleven in good old fashion. All who attend the game from Plainfield are requested to wear the colors of the team, maroon and black.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Frank L. C. Martin found his wheel and instead of some naughty rascal having possession of it, the missing wheel was found in Moy's Pharmacy. The clerk had seen it outside and when he locked up at night, had taken the wheel in for safe keeping. Now Mr. Martin rejoices exceedingly, but declares that he learned a lesson.

A party, composed of Tieger and Harry Hines, of Orange, Edward Ward and Fred Keer, of Newark, all members of the Essex Bicycle Club, and George M. Macintyre, E. H. Bogardus and F. L. C. Martin, of this city, on the Cleveland triplet, rode to Philadelphia, yesterday, via New Brunswick, Princeton and Trenton. The ride was a very enjoyable one and various adventures along the route lent some excitement to the ride. All arrived in Philadelphia without accident and then returned by train.

WHIST.

The New Jersey Whist Association intends to play sixteen men against the same number from the New England Whist Association for the auxiliary association trophy at Boston, Saturday, December 5th.

The interclub contest between clubs of the State Association, which begins Tuesday evening, November 17th, will be played by teams of four instead of eight. Many of the clubs will enter two "fours," and in some cases three "fours."

The Park club will play again for the New Jersey State whist trophy on Friday night. The challenging team is from the Jersey City Whist Club. The Jersey City team is a rather uncertain quantity, as it has been recently changed and has not yet had a chance to show its strength.

H. A. Dunbar, one of the strongest players of this State, and chairman of the card committee of the Ridgewood Club, at Ridgewood, has been prevented from playing in any of the games in the State for some time owing to illness. The whist players will shortly have the pleasure of seeing him again at the whist table, as he is fast recovering.

AT THE TRAPS.

The Climax Gun Club will hold its regular monthly shoot this afternoon.

John U. Reger, of North Adams, Mass., editor, was a pleasant caller at the Press office yesterday. He is visiting his sister, Mrs. A. Y. D. Honeyman, of Duer street.

CENTRIFUGAL FORCE.

Able Dissertation in a Stage Coach Which Mr. Lincoln Remembered.

"I see that Col. Thomas Nelson, of Terre Haute, is dead," recently remarked A. M. Murphy to a Globe-Democrat reporter. "Nelson belonged to that class of individuals to whom the growing generation invariably refer as gentlemen of the 'old school.'

"Col. Nelson possessed a rich fund of humor and he enjoyed telling a story just as well if the joke were on him as when the other fellow caught it.

"At an old settlers' meeting in Terre Haute in 1885 Col. Nelson related a story about his first meeting with Abraham Lincoln. It was in the antebellum days of stage coaches. One morning the stage arrived at Terre Haute from Paris, Ill., and stopped at the Clark house, the principal hotel in the city in those days, and among the passengers was a long, lanky individual, who, after partaking of breakfast, resumed his journey to Indianapolis. Col. Nelson was one of the passengers and on the way endeavored to scrapean acquaintance with the lanky-looking passenger. The latter told several funny stories in the course of their rather tedious journey. Nevertheless the colonel took his fellow-passenger for some green country merchant on his way to Indianapolis to replenish his stock of groceries, hardware, etc. The colonel also talked very learnedly and soon the stranger was gazing upon him in a manner that evidently betokened admiration of the great wisdom of his traveling companion.

"Arriving at their destination the colonel put up at the principal hotel, and after making an elaborate toilet made his way to the hotel office. There he observed his fellow-passenger, the central figure of a group of gentlemen, most of whom were well known to the colonel. Stepping up to the clerk he inquired as to the identity of the tall individual, and his eye was guided by the finger of the clerk to the open register, where he read: 'A. Lincoln,' written in a bold hand. A scoring of moisture oozed through the pores of the colonel's countenance; he was thunderstruck, dunfounded, and hastily calling for his 'carpetsack' sought quarters elsewhere.

"In 1861 the friends of Col. Nelson succeeded in securing an appointment for him, and Gov. Morton, who was in Washington, telegraphed the colonel to come on, and when he arrived at the capital he was told that he would probably be appointed minister to Chili. When he made his call upon the president it was with the hope that Mr. Lincoln would not recognize in him the stage-coach passenger who had aired his erudition during the journey of a few years before.

"Mr. Lincoln greeted him cordially, and after notifying him of his appointment and expressing the hope that he would accept, looked at the colonel with a merry twinkle in his eye and said: 'Col. Nelson, do you know I have often thought of your talk on centrifugal force during the stage-coach ride? Now, colonel, I am going to toss you away off to Chili.'" — St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Tales of Hoary Old Egypt.

Many centuries before recorded history begins the old Egyptians had developed a religion, an architecture and a mode of life of which imperishable traces are found to-day. Before Herodotus wrote or Homer sung, before the sacred songs of Hindostan were dreamed of, before the first books of the Bible were put into writing, the Egyptian hieroglyphics recorded on the walls of their temples and tombs or on the scrolls of their papyri the mysteries of their religion, the doings of their kings or the stories of their chief reciters. Maspero, the great French Egyptologist, first gave these stories to the modern world, but to the skill and scholarship of Flinders Petrie the world owes the first useful and entertaining form in which the earliest romances of the childhood of the world appear in English. There are many of these stories. In them appear the prototypes of characters in fiction that have been used by writers in all ages and all languages. In one story told by King Khufu's reciter at command of that monarch, who even in his early days was aware of the hollow splendor and tedious ceremonials of his court, appears the original of "Sinbad."—N. Y. World.

An Irishman's Reply.

Judge Morton, of Virginia, used to tell a story of an Irishman who was brought before him for pommeling one of his friends in a fit of rage. He was sentenced to a month's imprisonment. "Now, Larry," said the judge, "you will have time to think of your folly. Thirty days in jail; your lost work; your family without food; all because you thrashed a man against whom you say you have no grudge. Did it pay?" Larry looked up, with a shrewd smile. "Arrah, yer honor! Do ye mind the pleasure to me fists!" The thoughtful, earnest reformers who urge that all national disputes should be referred to arbitration, and not to the decision of brute force, should not overlook the strength of the savage instinct that is so powerful a factor in the decisions that influence the conduct of a large proportion of even ordinarily peaceable and large-minded men.—Youth's Companion.

MUST FILE PETITIONS.

National Democrats and Prohibitionists Vote Under Legal Limit.

There were cast in the State last Tuesday 367,038 ballots. This was an increase of 29,709 over the vote cast in 1892. In eight of the twenty-one counties McKinley electors had more of a plurality than the Bryan electors had votes. The Prohibition vote fell off 2,590 from the vote cast four years ago. The National Democracy polled more votes than the Prohibition candidates, and is therefore the third party. So far as the State law recognizes there are but two parties in the State. The vote cast entitled a party to recognition to nominate by convention must be 2 percent of the total vote cast. Two per cent would be 7,356. Only the Republican and Democratic nominees polled more than this. The Prohibitionists and National Democrats must file petitions to have their candidates' names printed on official ballots. In some of the counties the National Democracy will be able to nominate county officers by convention. The four smaller parties polled a combined vote of less than 5 per cent of the total vote cast.

RECTOR DYER RESIGNS.

Metuchen May Soon Have Another Minister.

Metuchen has heard that Rev. E. Paige Dyer has resigned, his resignation to go into effect on Dec. 16. Dr. Dyer is the rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church. He succeeded Dr. H. H. P. Roche, rector for many years. Dr. Roche was a bachelor.

Dr. Dyer assumed the rectorate in August last, hailing from Philadelphia. He was considered a good preacher. Saturday night, when the vestrymen met in regular session, he surprised them by tendering his resignation. In it he stated that he desired to give up the rectorship for "family reasons." The reasons it is understood are that Mrs. Dyer does not like Metuchen.

The official board is expected to accept the resignation.

WARM IN THE FIRST, HOT IN THE SECOND.

A Riproaring Political Scrap in One Republican Primary.

THIRD AND FOURTH WARDS SERENE.

But the First Ward Was the Only One in Which an Opposition Ticket Went to a Vote—William N. Runyon Nominated for Councilman Much Against the Will of Councilman Frost and His Cohorts—Results in All Wards.

In the Third and Fourth wards last Tuesday Republican primaries were carried on without contest of the rule of administration faction, in the First ward there were some signs of opposition and an administration ticket was nominated but lightly supported, while in the Second ward the candidates nominated went in without opposition when the balloting time arrived, but before this there was a lively contest, and the result has given rise to considerable enemity between the various party leaders. The details of the primaries are given below:

FIRST WARD.

The First ward primary was largely attended and there was some mutterings of a contest in the by-talk and actions of some of the attendants before the meeting was called to order, but when the vote came anti administration people were in a very small minority. The primary was called to order by J. H. MacDonald, who was made permanent chairman. The rest of the officers were: Secretary, R. F. B. Huntsman; judge, John H. Tier, Jr.; tellers, Lewis Dunham, Harry MacDonald. The first business taken up was the selection of eight delegates to the city convention. The following were the nominees, and the fir t eight are the administration delegates who were selected: H. C. VanEmburgh, 134; Benjamin Fredericks, 130; Alex. Sargent, 127; Wm. Addis, 124; Joseph Neal, 131; Fred Beckman, 133; Henry Peterson, 129; John H. Tier, Jr., 127; C. H. Bugg, 14; Geo. W. Moore, 14; John Rowland, 16; A. D. Mallinson, 13; J. E. Flannery, 18; H. C. Corsa, 13; Amos Andrews, 13. Since the vote was so large it was moved and adopted that the balloting for the rest of the offices be continued and the votes counted at the conclusion of all voting. For Councilman the following nominations and votes were made, the first named securing the honor, as was expected: Charles J. Newman, 124; C. H. Bugg, 24; Dr. A. W. Anderson, 4. U. B. Crane was unanimously nominated for justice of the peace, and F. Beckman unanimously for constable. The following were unanimously made members of the Republican city executive committee: J. B. Coward, W. R. Codington and Albert Barber. The delegates were empowered to fill any vacancies that might occur in their number.

SECOND WARD.

Everybody expected a fight in the Second ward primary last night, for it was known that there was a split among the leaders and that each side was preparing to support their rival candidates. The greatest conflict was expected to be over the nomination of Councilman.

The primary was held in the Bryant School building and there was an unusual amount of button-holing and whispered conversations before the meeting opened. The attendance was large, 122 voters being present, among whom were to be noticed a number of men who have heretofore been identified with the Democratic party, but who, in the recent campaign, espoused the cause of McKinley.

The meeting was called to order by George D. Patten, of the city executive committee, and Geo. H. Goddard was elected chairman and Arthur C. Runyon, clerk. Mr. Baynon read the call and then the officers of the primary were elected. W. H. Drayton was made judge and the two Inspectors were, J. Winthrop Travell and W. W. Crocm.

Councilman J. B. Dumont evidently wanted the excitement over at once for he moved that the Councilman be nominated first. When nominations were called for, H. R. Ayers and Councilman George H. Frost were on their feet in a moment and in the same breath, almost, Mr. Ayers named William N. Runyon and Mr. Frost named E. H. Ladd, Jr. Charles V. Corwin arose to second Mr. Runyon's nomination and stated that Mr. Ladd was a "mugwump" and voted for Cleveland in '92. He said he thought that there were enough good staunch Republicans in the ward to chose from instead of putting up a man whose allegiance to the party was not sure. There was a general opinion that the fight had started most vigorously when Mr. Dumont brought all to a sudden end by stating that he was authorized by

JUDGE NASH NOW ON TOP

THE SECOND WARD KNOCKS OUT THE "PARLOR CIRCLE."

There Was Plenty of Fun in the Second Ward Primary Last Night—What a Sound-Money Democrat Thought of It.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—The Republican primary of the Second ward Tuesday evening at the Bryant schoolhouse was a corker! As a Gold-Money Democrat of the Third ward I went over to help "Billy." It was a "monkey and a parrot" time; a regular Waterloo. All the old "Parlor Circle" were studying astronomy at the Crescent Avenue church lecture course. The "few old and tried" standard bearers who did attend were turned down in beautiful style—and saw stars before the meeting was over.

Justice Nash was again on top. A year ago he was "downed," but it was "chestnuts in his pocket" last night that "Billy" turned out.

For once all hands were strange bedfellows. Guttridge, of Netherwood, was fighting the ticket bearing his name. He stood in the doorway of the old schoolroom looking at the figures on the blackboard to learn just where he was at.

Major Miller and Charles Corwin had a "scrap" over Grover Cleveland. The darkies attempted to defeat Justice Nash, believing he had discriminated them in regard to collecting their back taxes.

Councilman Frost and Councilman Dumont attempted to outspeak each other in presenting their candidate, Mr. Ladd.

"Brother" Lovell was in doubt as to Democrats being allowed to participate in the primary proceedings which gr eatly disturbed the presiding officer, Mr. George Goddard, who was told by some one in the audience that any one could vote providing he intended to vote the ticket at the next election. That was where we gold Democrats came in and helped elect "Billy." It didn't seem to make much difference that some of us came from the Third ward.

All seemed to be forgiven when Spangenberg of "Big Six" fame was elected a delegate to the City Convention.

The young Republicans, it seemed to me, did good work last evening and I have no doubt will next year attend all the Common Council meetings to hear "Billy" sing and spout. It will not make much difference to the tax payers if it interests the "boys." It was richness itself to see Justice Nash march "Billy" in from the lobby to decline to act on the 'City Committee," in place of Mr. Patton who was willing to continue to disburse "the patronage" to the "poor and needy."

Revolutions come and go but I am sure that the Second ward "politics" is in good hands. Nash, Patton, Drayton and Corwin is the style of the new firm who propose doing business at the old stand. "Billy" gets the nomination and election, but who is responsible for the defeat of his "good friends?".

Already it is said in a whisper that all the trouble arouse from Charlie Fisk's interferring in the Second ward. But when Charlie is Mayor who will look after the "finances" in the Common Council with Dumont in the chair? "John" will have to connect a telephone to each of the members seats and pull more wires than he ever has done before.

Joking aside, my dear Mr. Editor, there was more fun last night in the old Bryant school house than was taken up in the collection for the benefit of the school janitor, even though it was in Mr. Bowen's hat.

Old Fashioned Palmer Democrat.

DUNELLEN'S POSTMASTERSHIP.

Several Candidates All Ready Looking for Appointment.

There are four candidates for the postoffice in Dunellen all ready. Thomas Tood thinks he would like to have it, although he has voted the Prohibition ticket for the past ten years until he voted for McKinley. Adam Dealaman is another candidate, as well as Charlie Dickenson, the mail carrier, and last, but not least, Paul Kratzel thinks his chances are good and that he would make an efficient postmaster. He has always been a good Democrat until this fall. The office will not be vacant until next October, and before that time, no doubt, there will be many more who will want the postmastership.

Mrs. Lawrence Wins Again.

In Union County Court Wednesday in the case of Ford against Lawrence, for recovery of wages as a domestic, Judge McCormick sustained the decision of Justice Nash, which was in favor of the defendent and awarded costs. This is a very interesting case to all people who employ held, and full particulars will be published in tomorrow's Press.

THE LIGHT OF OLD SOL.

SECOND OF THE SERIES OF THE UNIVERSITY EXTENSION LECTURES.

Professor Prentiss Talks of the Sun's Light and Heat—Difficult to Explain But He Made it Quite Clear of Comprehension.

The second illustrated lecture on astronomy in the University Extension course was delivered by Professor Prentiss Wednerday, in the chapel of Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church, and was very well attended and thoroughly enjoyed. The subject was "The Sun," as on last Tuesday, but treated in an entirely different manner, taking up spectrum analysis and the sun's light and heat. This was a difficult subject to explain to a popular audience, but Prof. Prentiss explained it in such a way as to make it perfectly clear and comprehensible to everyone.

"So fat," he said, in opening, "our knowledge of the sun has been derived from the use of the telescope. Evidence of an entirely different kind and of very great importance is furnished by spectrum analysis, the instrument used in this method being the spectroscope."

Spectrum analysis is a mode of distinguishing the various species of matter by the light proceeding from each. The light may have its source a foot away in our laboratories, or billions of miles distant in the stars, the results are the same. The first picture thrown upon Professor Prentiss' screen was that of Sir Isaac Newton, whose discovery it was that when a beam of sunlight passed through a prism and fell on a screen, it was spread out into a band of colors arranged as in a rainbow. This band of colors is called a continuous spectrum. Wollaston, another scientist, found that in the sun's spectrum the colors were separated by a few dark spaces, and that light from different sources gave different dark spaces. Fraunhofer, whose picture was also shown, viewed the spectrum with a telescope. He became convinced that the dark lines owed their origin to the nature of the sun's light. Different lights gave different spectre.

Prof. Printiss then showed pictures of the modern spectroscope, which consists of a collimater, a tube which receives the light to be examined, a prism or a train of prisms, and a viewtelescope, through which the student views the spectrum. He also had an instrument mounted upon a table during the conversation class, which was eagerly examined by all.

It is now known that the sun's light must be produced by the vivid lights of liquids or solids shining through a flame of mixed vapors. Each element has its own peculiar lines in the spectrum, and a comparison of the sun's spectrum with the spectra of various substances in the laboratories shows thirty-six chemical elements, all metals except hydrogen, to be found in the sun. Spectroscopic investigation of the chromosphere reveals the prominences in their various forms and colors, and shows them to consist mainly of hydrogen mixed with bellum, a substance which until lately was supposed not to exist in terrestrial substances.

The quantity of sunlight equals that which would be derived from 1,577 billions of standard candles at the distance of the sun. The sun's surface is 150 times as bright as the line light, and four or five times as bright as the electric arc-light. The darkest part of a solar spot outshines the line light. Different parts of the sun's face vary in brightness, the limp being darkened by the absorption of the sun's atmosphere. The real color of the sun is blue.

If the amount of the sun's heat which falls on a square yard of the earth's surface could be converted into energy utilizable by properly constructed machinery, it would furnish continuously one-eighth of one horse-power. The radiation of heat at the sun's surface is beyond comprehension but not beyond computation. To sustain it would require the hourly combustion of one ton of coal per square foot of surface. Experiments with a burning glass show that the sun is hotter than any terrestrial source of heat. The temperature is inferred to be about 18,000 F.

Various theories of the maintenance of the sun's heat have been advanced, but the one most widely accepted is that of the slow but steady contraction of the sun. This theory points back to a time when the constituents of the solar system was totally different from the present, and also forward to a time, millions of years to come, when the sun will no longer give out sufficient light and heat to support organic life on the earth.

AIM OF CHRISTIAN LIFE.

UNITARIAN WOMEN MEET AND DISCUSS PRACTICAL RELIGION.

The Aim of Life Should be to Glorify God Above All Things Else—People are Better Fitted to Live and Die Then.

The Plainfield Branch Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women held their first meeting for the season Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in All Souls' church. The members will hold a series of meeting this winter and discuss subjects under the topic of "Religion for Week Days." The subject introduced yesterday was "The Aim of Life" and it was sub-divided as follows: "To Glorify God and Enjoy Him Forever," "Self Culture," "Philanthropy," "The Nearest Duty" and "The Kingdom of Heaven." Mrs. David P. Hall presided and Mrs. Krom acted as secretary.

The several members present discussed the subjects with much enthusiasm. It was held that the aim of life should be to glorify God above all things else and then a person would be better fitted to live. The members considered that self-culture was not always born in a person, but was a thing to be cultivated. Emerson was mentioned as a representative of self culture. Another strong point advanced was that self-culture was by all means a duty to be exercised by every person. One member thought it would be well for mothers to teach their daughters to wear less embroidery and button their own shoes, instead of allowing them to think that these duties are not important. It was thought that men with fine intellects often choose women who are not so intellectual.

Under the head of "Philanthropy," it was stated that many abused the principles of it. "Nearest Duty" was discussed quite generally. One important point was brought out, that the smallest deed should receive as much attention as the greatest and thus the larger things would be accomplished. The last subject, "The Kingdom of God," was made an important one and all agreed that if all lived up to the requirements of the other subjects they would certainly have title to "The Kingdom of God."

The next meeting will be held December 15th and the topic will be "Domestic Service."

TWO CLEVER DIALOGUES

MONROE AVENUE CHAPEL ENTERTAINMENT A SUCCESS.

The Various Numbers on the Programme Were Executed With Finish and Pleased the Audience Very Much.

As is characteristic with entertainments at the Monroe Avenue chapel, the entertainment given there last Tuesday by the Ladies Aid Society of the chapel was a delightful one and a decided success. It was gotten up and given by home talent which made the dialogues and tableaux all the more pleasing.

The dialogue "Mrs. Podberry's Views on Education" was given by Miss Brower, Mrs. VanPelt and several children. The other dialogue, "Aunt Betsey's Beaux," included Miss Mary Beekman, Miss Ada Wenzel, Miss Bertha Wenzel, Miss Lizzie Foster and L. C. Batson. In the tableaux "The Harvest Field," a quartette composed of Mrs. Brown, Miss Florence Burt, L. C. Batson and Walter McGee, sang.

The programme was as follows: Piano duet, Stephen Haff and Mrs. Haff; recitation, Miss Haberly; vocal solo, Miss Filmer; recitation, Mr. Staats; violin solo, Mr. Petrie; dialogue, "Mrs. Podberry's Views on Education;" piano solo, Miss Charlotte Aldrich; recitation, Miss Edith L. Burt; violin solo, Mr. Petrie; dialogue, "Aunt Betsy's Beaux;" recitation, Walter McGee; piano solo, Stephen Haff; tableaux, "The Harvest Field;" tableau, "Young America." "Young America" was represented by Victor Houston. During the tableaux the platform was illuminated with red fire.

After the feast for the mind, the visitors were invited to feast their bodies on ice cream and cake and thereby increase the funds in the treasury of the Ladies' Aid Society. They adjourned to the smaller rooms at the side of the chapel, where the good things were served by the members of the society under the direction of their president, Mrs. LaRue.

Went to Jail.

John Dorgan was sent to Elizabeth jail this morning for thirty days, as he failed to pay the required fine of $10. Sergeant Kelly arrested him on West Second street Tuesday for being drunk and disorderly, shouting and otherwise disturbing the peace. It was his third offence, so Judge De-Meza made it $10 or 30 days.

A BRILLIANT WEDDING.

FORMER UNITED STATES COUNSEL WEDS A PLAINFIELD BELLE.

The Bride Was Miss Maud Helen Henderson and the Groom Frederick M. Ryder, of New Haven—Guests Present.

The most brilliant society event of the season took place last Tuesday at 6.30 o'clock when Miss Maude Helen Henderson, daughter of Mrs. Archibald Henderson, of 514 West Seventh street, and Frederick M. Ryder, manager and treasurer of the Evening Leader Company, of New Haven, Conn., were united in marriage at the home of the bride by the Rev. George Williamson Smith, president of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn. The affair was one of remarkable charm, and the number of distinguished guests present made it an incomparable prestige seldom witnessed in this city. The home was exquisitely decorated with Southern smilax, palms and chrysanthemums. As the guests entered the reception room they found themselves surrounded by a profusion of smilax and palms arranged in a most attractive manner. Behind a massive bower of vine and stately palms were seated the orchestra which discoursed a select classical programme. The parlor was a scene of rare loveliness.

The Southern smilax, palms and chrysanthemums were so arranged as to represent an altar and the effect was grand. In the centre an opening was left for the bride an groom to kneel. The beautiful and impressive strains of Lohengrin's wedding march were heard and at the same time the bridal party entered. The charming bride, gowned exquisitely in white satin, cut court train, trimmed with old point lace, a family heir loom, and wearing a veil, passed through the reception room and entered the parlor from the dining room. She was attended by Miss Constance B. Holt, of New York City, as maid of honor, who was richly gowned in pale green silk, trimmed with embroidered chiffon.

The groom, accompanied by his brother, Edmund H. Ryder, of Montreal, as best man, entered the parlor, from the reception room and the bridal party met at the altar where the ceremony was performed, during which favorite strains were rendered by the orchestra.

The bride was given away by her brother, Archibald Henderson, of Plainfield. The favorite Episcopal service was used in its entirety, and the congratulations were showered upon the happy couple after the ceremony. The supper which followed was complete in every particular. An admiring feature was the table decorations, consisting of a profusion of the choicest pink roses. The reception which followed was truly delightful. Mr. and Mrs. Ryder left during the evening on a bridal tour, and when they departed they were recipient of a large quantity of rice. On their return they will reside in New Haven.

The groom served the United States as Consul at Quebec under the administration of President Harrison, and distinguished himself for his able service. There were many notable guests present, including United States Senator O. S. Platt, of Meridan Conn.; Congressman Lemuel E. Quigg and wife, Col. and Mrs. W. S. Coggswell, of New York; Hon. James Graham, of New Haven; Commodore James D. Smith, of Stamford, Conn; Mr. and Mrs. John A. Robinson, of Kansas City. Other guests present were: Mr. and Mrs. Enos Wilder, Miss Wilder, Robert S. Holt, Henry R. McMurray and family, James A. Flurry, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Crane, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Livingston, of New York; Miss Helen W Smith, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Smith, o Stamford, Conn; Charles E. Graham, Mr. and Mrs. F. Chillingsworth, W. H. Ely, of New Haven, Conn; W. M. Ryder, of Montreal, Canada; A. E Ryder, of Boston.

The gifts were numerous and valuable and consisted chiefly of silverware and gold. Music was furnished by Prof. Wack, of New York.

Death of James Praed.

James J. Praed, a well-known and respected resident of this city, died at his home on West Fourth street, Tuesday afternoon, after a brief illness from heart trouble. Deceased was a clothier by trade, and was at one time a resident on Madison avenue, but a few years ago he took possession of the West Fourth street house, where he continued up to the time of his sudden and unexpected illness. He was sixty-one years of age, and leaves a family. Notice of funeral appears in another column.

MOTHER AND TOTS DESTITUTE AND POOR.

Pitiable Condition of the Family of the Late Jeptha Wagoner.

LIVE IN A COLD AND BARREN HOUSE.

It Seemed as Though the Faults of the Father Had Descended With Cruel Force on the Widow and Children.—Left Without the Actual Necessities of Life.—No One to Appeal to But a Charitable Public—Children Go to a Benevolent Institution.

Over in the valley beyond the Watchung mountain, where the bleak winds blow and avenues of ingress and egress become choked and blocked with great piles of snow soon to come in the approaching winter months, lives a mother and three children—widow and fatherless—destitute and in want. Bowed down with grief at the blow of death hurled down on their only protector—poor, though he was, but still better than none—the heralds of a merciless winter are evidenced in the frosty mornings, chilly evenings, and barren fields where nature's growth is stifled and hibernating.

While the sturdy neighbors are prepared for this siege of the season's evolution with well-filled cupboards and accumulated fuel to soften the ravages of winter, this little group of mother and three tots are left forlorn and dependent on the good will of their more prosperous and fortunate neighbors for the necessities of life.

Huddled together in a squatty, rickety old house, shaking like an aspen leaf when the winds blow, the cracks inviting the chilly blasts to invade and chill its occupants to the marrow; the roof a veritable sieve every time the rain falls, and leaving a damp, musty smell in its wake; the floor decayed in one spot and rough in another; in fact, the whole interior more of a pen than a home, Mrs. Jeptha Wagoner and her three children are objects of pity.

The erratic and flighty characteristics of Jeptha Wagoner are too well well known to many Plainfielders to need repetition, but now it seems as though the faults of the husband and father have fell with crushing force on the family he has left and they are fluttering about on the cold charity of the world; and just at present, it is very cold, indeed.

Four years ago Wagoner leased a little patch of ground and a house from Michael Marcely in Warren township. His advancing years and general lack of knowing how to manage soon got him into the slough of despond and things went from bad to worse, until finally he was unable to provide for his family. Charitable neighbors helped the family along till Mrs. Wagoner, who was forty years younger than her husband, went out in domestic service and sent home what little earnings she could for the upport of her incapable husband and dependent children. The oldest girl also entered the employ of a Washingtonville family as a servant, but this was a slight relief on the demands of the family and things continued to grow worse in the Wagoner home. But some how or another they eked out an existence. Then one day Wagoner ascended to the roof of the house to stop its leaking and his foot slipped. Before he could catch himself he had fell with terrible force on to a pile of stones at the side of the house. Bruised, bleeding and generally battered up he was carried into the house, where he lingered between life and death till last Saturday when he breathed his last.

The accident made it necessary for Mrs. Wagoner to leave her position and come home to administer to the injuries of her aged husband. Deprived of the money that she had heretofore earned, and with a demand for many things for the injured man—only the most imperative of which were got—the poormaster of the township was appealed to, and apportioned to them what he could of the poor funds, but at the most it was very meagre under the circumstances. Wagoner suffered for lack of proper medicine and treatment and the whole family was deprived of actual necessities of life. Then the father died. Perhaps it was just as well, because he was not of much use to them alive.

It is said that no undertaker came to look after his remains until yesterday, when they were hastily put into a rude casket and, after a short ceremony, laid away in the cold earth.

There were no sympathizing friends to meet the bereaved mother and children when they returned home, to condole with them or to make them a cup of tea or provide a few tasty dishes with which to recuperate and invigorate their sorrowing bodies and minds. And beyond the deplorable fact that the friends were lacking.

CHOSE A PRESIDENT.

MRS. MALLI NOW AT THE HEAD OF THE IMPROMPTU ASSOCIATION.

A Misunderstanding About Arrangements and Councilman Fisk Was Not Present to Address the Woman's Association.

There seemed to be a misunderstanding regarding the fact that Councilman Charles J. Fisk was to address the members of the Town Improvement Association Friday afternoon. Although the matter was talked over and Mr. Fisk was asked to speak before the Association, the Councilman failed to receive the invitation, and he did not appear. Mrs. Pierre Malli, the president-elect, stated that Mr. Eisk was anxious to speak at a meeting of the association regarding a similar society at Washington and it perhaps at some future time an evening meeting could be held at which time Mr. Fisk could be present.

At the meeting there was considerable business transacted. It was decided to change the time of meeting and hereafter the Executive Committee will meet on the second Tuesday in the month and the public meeting will be held on the fourth Tuesday. Mrs. Malli suggested that a committee be appointed to revise the constitution and a motion was made that the president, MissTweedy and Mrs. Haviland be chosen as such a committee. Mrs. Malli gave notice that she intended offering an amendment to the constitution changing the entrance fee from 50 cents to $1. The matter will be considered at the next regular meeting, although those present did not show themselves to be in favor of a change.

The next business transacted was the receiving of Mrs. Gifford's resignation as president of the association Mrs. Gifford, formerly Mrs. E. T. McCarthy, living out of Plainfield and being unable to attend the meetings decided that it was best that she should resign. It was reluctantly accepted. Mrs. Pierre Malli was thereupon unanimously elected as president of the association. Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone offered his resignation as a member of the Advisory Board, owing to pressing and important business. The resignation was accepted and Mrs. H. P. Opdyke was elected to fill the vacancy in the Executive Committee caused by Mrs. Malli being chosen president. This concluded the business of the afternoon and the meeting adjourned.

EUROPE WANTS OUR OIL.

The Standard Company to Extend Its Plant to Meet the Foreign Demand.

The exclusive publication in The Daily Press of Thursday that the Standard Oil Company are to double their capacity at the refinery, at Constable Hook, has aroused a great deal of interest. This morning the New York Herald says this morning:

All is activity at Constable Hook, where the works of the Standard Oil Company are located. A big gang of carpenters is at work erecting new buildings, new machinery is arriving daily, and the machinists are hustling to get it set up.

These innovations are the result of an important decision recently made by the company to largely extend its plant and increase its already enormous output of coal oil.

S. T. C. Dodd, counsel for the company, yesterday said that during the last three years there has been a growing market for American oil abroad, and the company was forced to enlarge its capacity to supply the demand.

The oil is pumped through pipes from the oil districts of Pennsylvania directly to the company's works at Constable Hook, where it is refined and pumped into tank steamers for export. It is the refining plant that is being improved and added to, and the cost of the changes, it is said, will amount to $1,700,000.

The extension is also due to an understanding with the Russian oil companies for a division of foreign territory. The agreement gives the Standard company the exclusive control of a large part of Western Europe, certain Mediterranean countries and also a part of Asia.

Farmers' Institutes.

The State Board of Agriculture has issued its list of proposed "Farmers' Institutes" which will be held during the months of November and December. These meetings will be conducted by the secretary of the board. Three of them are scheduled for Somerset, as follows: November 28th, Harlingen, two sessions; December 14th, Millstone, three sessions; December 17th and 18th, Basking Ridge, four sessions. Much profit is derived from these meetings, and farmers are urged to attend.

WHIST CUP STAYS HERE ONE DEFIANT, ONE MAD.

PARK CLUB POSSESSORS NOW THE PERMANENT POSSESSORS.

Won it For the Tenth Time Last Night in Their Game With the Jersey City Club—The Score Was 20 to 6 Points.

Another trophy of victory will now adorn the walls of the Park clubhouse. The silver cup, offered by the New Jersey Whist Association, has been won by the famous "four" of the Park Club by the ten necessary victories. Friday night the last match necessary to win to give the Park Club permanent possession of the trophy was played, and the Park "four"easily defeated their opponents, the team from the Jersey City Club by a score of 20 points to 6.

In the first round, the score was 6 to 3, in favor of the Parks. They led in the second round 7 to 3, and in the third round as well, 7 to 0. The Jersey City Club representatives were Messrs. Mecabe, Watson, D. Bowly and C. Bowly. The same four that has so well defended the honors of the Park Club in the past represented them last night. Messrs. Townsend, Rogers, McCutchen and Howell. Messrs. Heuman, of Jersey City, and Clarence Peck, of Plainfield, acted as scorers, and Mr. Kleb, of Fanwood, as umpire.

The trophy, which, last night, became the property of the Park Club, is a handsome silver loving cup and was offered the first of last season by the New Jersey Whist Association. It was first played for at the State Whist Congress over a year ago and was then won by the Parks. The latter have been defeated only twice and have won eight matches and two congresses thus giving them the necessary ten victories.

The Park Club now intends to offer a trophy to the State Association to be known as the "Park Trophy" and it will be played for under conditions similar to those of the cup just won. Although they have not decided exactly what the trophy will be, it is sure to be something worthy of the club that offers it.

The game last night was a well played one but the Parks were too much for their opponents and led from the start. The Jersey City players used the "short suit" game known as the "Foster game" and it would not stand before the "long sent" game of the Parks. The Jersey City team was a gentlemanly lot of players and they were well pleased at the hospitable manner in which they were received. They played well but frankly admitted that the Park Club four was their superior. One of the team told a Press reporter that he considered the Park Club four of the strongest in the State or this section of the country and one of the best in the United States. Messrs. Howell and Rogers were formerly members of the Jersey City Club and the Jersey City team was proud that two of their old club mates should stand so high.

ASSEMBLYMAN'S APPOINTMENT.

Mr. Codington Awards a Scholarship to Lottie F. Johnson.

By an act of the New Jersey Legislature passed in 1894, every Assemblyman and Senator has the right to award a free scholarship in the Colored Industrial School at Bordentown. Assemblyman W. R. Codington, of Union county, has made his appointment. The person to whom he gave the free scholarship is Miss Lottie P. Johnson, of 211 West Third street, a colored girl of industrious habits.

The school is an excellent institution and has done much good in giving a good industrial education to a number of the colored people of this city. Three colored people from Plainfield have already enjoyed its benefits, Harry Thomas, Harry Dundy and Elinora Williams.

Bishop's Visitation.

Right Rev. John Scarborough, Bishop of New Jersey, made a visitation to St. Stephen's church, Friday. The service for confirmation was held (with choir) at 5:30 p. m, when two persons were confirmed. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and the congregation a very fair one for an afternoon service on a week-day.

Fire at Millington.

A small house located at Millington and belonging to the McGowan estate, was totally destroyed by fire early last morning. It is not known how the fire started, and as the town is small and has no fire protection, all hope of saving the house was given up. As far as can be learned there was no insurance.

A Successful Fair.

The accounts for the recent G. A. R. fair have been completed, and it has been found that the amount cleared was between $500 and $600.

FEUD BETWEEN EDITOR AND LANDLORD STILL RAGES.

Suits of All Kinds Now Pending in Various Courts-Exciting Incident of Putting Coal into the Printing Office.

The dissensions between J. Alfred Potter, editor of the Cranford Chronicle, and Hugo C. Fett, his landlord, go on with unabated fury. What appeared to be simply a trifle ruffle on the suburban serenity of the two gentlemen has now developed in all sorts of law suits and exciting incidents to afford the wagging tongues of Cranford's gossips a delightful morsel.

All ready The Press has recorded the initive incidents in what might be termed the feud of the editor and the landlord—how the steam exhaust pipe was disconnected from the editor's engine and the subsequent arrest of the plumber performing the work, on complaint of the editor; then the roasting of the landlord over the editorial flame of the editor and the instituting of a suit for damages on the part of the former. From that time on the quarrel has been melodramatic in action and the fourth, fifth and sixth acts have been capped with climaxes in which the hand of the law has been prominent.

The last record The Press had of the case was the report of the suit for $300 damages instituted against the editor by the landlord. Soon after this suit was brought to trial, the editor brought a counter action in Justice Newcorn's court in this city for the same amount against the landlord. Mr. Potter based his claim on the charge that Fett had interfered with his business by ordering the plumber to disconnect the offending steam exhaust pipe, and the attendant publicity given the affair in the press of Plainfield and New York had deterred prospective customers from patronizing him for fear that their work could not be executed on time. The trial of this suit is set down in Justice Newcorn's court for next Monday, while the decision in Fett's damage suit has not yet been announced in Judge Allen's court in Elizabeth.

Now to make things still interesting for the gossips and at the same time to cause the editor more worriment, Fett last week started another suit against Potter, and this time for defamation of character. The complaint is based on the column editorial that Editor Potter published concerning some alleged uncomplimentary incidents in which the landlord was the stellar setting. Though it is usual for people who feel aggrieved at an editorial to sue on their character, to ask for not less than $10,000 as a balm for their injured feelings, Fett was more modest and only names $200 as the amount of his damages, so that he might keep the suit in the District Court at Elizabeth. This case will come up for trial in a short time, and the editor and his lawyer are mapping out a plan whereby they can escape a mulcting. Up to date the legal recourses end here, but the exciting by-play still rages on.

Yesterday Editor Potter ordered a ton of coal. To get the coal into the bin in his office it was necessary to drive the wagon near a shuttle hole in the side of the building. To do this a narrow lane on Fett's adjoining property had to be utilized. Sometime ago Fett nailed up the gate at the entrance to this lane. When the driver of the coal wagon arrived at the printing office with his coal he found the entrance to the lane to the gate. He asked the editor what to do. The latter told him to break open the gate. This the driver proceeded to do, but not before his actions were observed from a distance by Fett. Fett started on a run towards the coal wagon, but before he arrived at the spot the driver had opened the gate and drove in.

Fett was in a white heat and demanded to know who had given the driver authority to drive on his property. The driver told him of the editor's order.

"Get out of here," yelled Fett, "I won't have you on my property. Get out, I say."

The driver looked up and replied with the admonition that Fett go to a place where there is no use for coal.

"Well, I'll see about this," exclaimed Fett and off he went.

The driver continued shoveling the coal into the printing office and just as he had finished, Fett returned in company with Mr. Rankin, the coal-dealer.

Fett demanded that the wagon be taken off his property immediately. Since the coal was now in the printing office it was the natural course of events that this action should be taken without any orders. The wagon was backed off the property and Fett again closed the gates while the editor "laughed up his sleeve" over the little coup.

It remains to be seen whether or not the landlord will again go to court for redress.

THOUGHT HIM A ROBBER.

SO ROUNDSMAN TOTTEN STOPPED MR. MACDONALD IN HIS FLIGHT.

But MacDonald Was Only In a Hurry to Catch a Train as His Friend Explained—An Early Morning Incident.

'Stop! Stop!" shouted Patrolman Totten Friday morning about 3:30 o'clock as a man sprang out of a house on Grant avenue and rushed towards the station. The officer's shouts brought white robed figures to the windows in the surrounding houses. The fleeing man looked longingly at the station and then slowly came to a standstill. He was excited and said he must get the train that was then approaching. This looked suspicious and Patrolman Totten determined to investigate. The train could be heard in the distance and the man began to fairly dance up and down in his excitement. He begged to be allowed to go and declared that he had only been running to catch the train.

Another figure appeared at the same door from which the stranger had come and it proved to be that of the owner of the house, William G. Gray. The stranger, he explained, was his friend, John McDonald, of Jersey City. He had come to Plainfield to attend the big meeting of the A. O. U. W. and had a very important engagement in Jersey City early in the morning. He had returned home with Gray and was planning to catch the 3:35 train from the Grant avenue station.

When Patrolman Totten saw how the land lay, he allowed Mr. MacDonald to go and the latter sprinted for the train at a lively gait. He swung himself aboard and the white robed figues at the windows in the vicinity returned to their rest and said all sorts of uncomplimentary things about different subjects.

PAPER ON WHITTIER.

Literary Features at Monroe Avenue Chapel.

A new and very delightful plan is now being tried at the Monroe Avenue chapel. Last week the first of a series on Friday evening literary meetings for the benefit of the people of the chapel was held in the Epworth House, and an instructive and very interesting lecture on "John Greenleaf Whittier" was delivered by Miss Gertrude McCowan, of Tottenville, S. I. Miss McCowan is a pleasant speaker and held the interest of her audience throughout the lecture. She told some things of his early life and his political career, and also introduced selections from the various works to show his style and improvement. His many works of both prose and poetry were referred to, and Miss McCowan made even the dry details of his life seem interesting by her delightful way of telling them.

The meeting opened with several hymns, Miss Charlotte Aldrich acting as accompanist. Then James McGee introduced Miss McGowan.

SCHOOL CONTRACTS.

Board of Education Make Awards for Flagging and Curbing.

The Board of Education building committee, consisting of President Probasco, Fred C. Lounsbury and L. N. Lovell, met at the home of the president last Friday and awarded the bid for flagging and curbing around the new Lincoln School building to H. C. N. Johnston, of 308 East Front street. His bid for four-foot flagging was 47 cents per foot, and 34 cents per foot for curbing. Michael Powers bid 54 cents for flagging and 35 cents for curbing, while J. T. Vail's bid was 48 cents for flagging and 38 cents for curbing.

Mr. Lounsbury submitted plans for the work, which met with the approval of the other members. This was the principal and only important business transacted.

War in the Alley.

There was a war of words on Paradise Alley Friday and a scene in the city court, this morning, was, of course, the result. Mrs. Frances J. Miller and Miss Kate Miller, both reflected that famous thoroughfare, claimed that Gordon and William Parsons had called them naughty and improper names. Now the Parsons live there, too, and all four had been talking at the same time and, perhaps, not in the most gentle way imaginable. At any rate, City Judge DeMeza found them guilty and suspended sentence.

FERRYBOAT IN A CRASH.

THE FANWOOD RUN INTO BY SOUND STEAMER NASHUA.

Plainfielders on Board the Ferryboat, and There Was Great Consternation Among Them Over the Collision.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey ferryboat Fanwood, left the foot of Liberty street with 500 passengers for Jersey City at 5:38 p. m. Friday, many of whom were Plainfield commuters. An unusual strong tide rendered deeper than usual by the stiff wind blowing down the Hudson made Capt. Smith's task of navigating the boat a difficult one.

As the Fanwood left her berth the Providence and Stonington freight steamer Nashua was dropping down the river with her engines running with only part of their power. The tide and wind were sufficient to give her a strong headway.

The Fanwood kept on and the Nashua drifted too fast to be checked in time to avoid a collision. Although the freighter's captain at a late moment saw that the crash was coming and shouted the engineer to reverse, the white boat smashed into the starboard side of the Fanwood forward of the men's cabin.

There was a crash, followed by the griding, cracking and splintering of the thin shell of the ferry-boat. The Fanwood's entire hood forward was knocked off and the cabin half way from the paddle-box to the bow was knocked in. Every seat was occupied on the outer side and the standing space was all filled with men.

As the Fanwood gave a lurch to port those in the seats were thrown forward against those standing. Then there was also a rush to the other side of the boat.

Several men had their shins and hands bruised by flying splinters and by being thrown to the deck by the shock. Among the women panic prevailed. As the Fanwood kneeled they screamed, and the more frightened ones wept and prayed.

The deck hands, as the Fanwood righted after the collision, reassured the passengers, and confidence and quiet were soon restored.

The captain of the Fanwood said that the manner in which the Nashua was managed after the collision was commendable and skilful in the extreme. "If the steamboat had not been handled exactly as she was she would have cut the ferry boat in two," he said.

After the Fanwood had righted forward the Nashua kept on for the Sound. At the Jersey City end the crushed ferry-boat was laid up and they will be placed in dry dock. Her guard was not cut at all, only her under and joiner work being carried away.

None of the Central Railroad of New Jersey officials were willing to place the responsibility for the accident last night.

William M. Pangborn was one of the Plainfielders on the ferryboat and when the collision occurred, he was pitched to the floor and in the excitement several persons walked all over him Mr. Pangborn fells pretty sore today.

A Midnight Marauder.

A man, with more liquor aboard than he could conveniently carry, tried to kick down the door to the office of Hedden's livery stable Thursday night. He roared around in a most unpleased manner until Frank Hedden started to call an officer and then the intruder disappeared.

Visited the Coal Bin.

It is usually a cold day when Frank Hedden gets left, but the mercury was not low on Tuesday and someone visited his coal bin near the stables on East Fourth street and disappeared with nearly a ton of coal. Now that the coal is gone he has a padlock on the door.

RASORES HERE A DECADE.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF A PROGRESSIVE WOMAN'S CLUB.

The Celebration Observed at the Home of Mrs. Baker, on Stelle Avenue—Other Woman's Literary Club in This City.

The Rasores Club, the oldest women's literary club in Plainfield, celebrated its tenth anniversary last Friday, at the residence of Mrs. J. T. Baker, on Stelle avenue. This club was originally organized by Mrs. W. D. Miller, Mrs. Walz, Miss Brown and other prominent ladies, who are accustomed to meet during the winter on Tuesday mornings, to read and discuss current events, and is limited to forty members.

Mrs. Dr. Kimball, the president, Mrs. Patterson, vice-president, and Mrs. Halloway, secretary, all of whom received last evening with the charming hostess and her daughter, Miss Baker, assisted by the Misses Pierson, Miller, Cahoone, Brower, Halloway, Leonard, Gilbert, Miss Walz, Miss Jaynes and Bowers.

The house was beautifully decorated with flowers and potted plants. Prof Condo, violinist, was assisted by a pianist, and rendered choice selections of music all through the evening. The supper was served by Mrs. Wertz.

During the evening in reply to a question as to the origin of the club's name, Mrs. Halloway reported in a very bright and charming manner much to the delight and applause of all present.

Among those present were: Rev. Dr. and Mrs. W. R. Richards, Ex-Mayor and Mrs. Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Andrews, Dr. and Mrs. W. D. Murray, Miss Cleveland, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, Major and Mrs. W. D. W. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cahoone, Mr. and Mrs George Goddard, Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Bowen, Mr. and Mrs. Rice, Mrs. Ernest Lambert, Mrs. I. C. Pierson, Mr. and Mrs. Walz, Miss Brown, Mrs. George Frost, Mr. and Mrs. Strong, Mr. and Mrs. Leander Lovell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Newhall, Everitt Kimball, Miss Newhall, Dr. and Mrs. King, Mrs. Wills, Mrs. Brower, Mr. and Mrs. Jayne, Mrs. Leonard, Mr. Gilbert, Mrs. J. Wesley Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Bushnell, Mr. and Mrs. Bowers, Mr. and Mrs. Howland, Miss Lugar.

Miss Halloway said: "I could hardly refuse to say a word in explanation and defence of our much-abused club name. When the child of our regard was young, and the momentous time for naming it had come, several names were discussed and rejected as too unusual for such tender years. Knowing that we intended to lay out no severe plan of study, but in a modest way hoped to associate intellectual profit and social pleasure, one of our number, a charter member, who is with us tonight, suggested that we call ourselves after the natural history class of birds that scratch for their livelihood. The suggestion pleased us, and we adopted it, naming ourselves the Rasores; and in the years that have passed many a golden grain of knowledge have we found, in our leisurely, comfortable way, in the rich fields of mythology, history, biography and poetry.

"But many a time in those years have I wished that those who had occasion to use name would follow our example and scratch for the knowledge they evidently so much needed. We have been, by the unlearned and ignorant of course, mis-spelled, mispronounced and mis-called. We have been called Sorosis—that is our sister's name, but it is not ours. We have been called the Scratchers. Well, nobody expects a razor to be dull.

"We have been called The Scratchers, but that conveys a distinctly wrong impression. We have been called Tuesday Morning Club, and that always reminds me of the boy's answer to the question: 'What is a synonym?' It's a word you use when you don't know how to spell the other one. But against the last, a real dignity, we most earnestly protest—we are not 'raw sores.' In fact we are not sore at all, least of all at this happy time, when, with the congratulations of our friends, we are celebrating our tenth anniversary,—the oldest of Plainfield's clubs.

"And as we look back and remember all that the club has been worth to us through the years. And what a real loss it would be to us, if it were taken out of our lives, we say from our inmost heart: Long life to the Rasores, and may they always scratch with the same happy results."

The officers are:—President, Mrs. Horance Kimball; Vice President, Mrs. A. Stuart Patterson; Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. Henry B. Halloway.

—Smalley Bros. started their crusher on the mountain again Thursday, but their product, or most of it, is being sent out of town.

FIRFIEND WORKS RUIN

Isaac Lederer's Drygoods Store Gutted by Flames.

LOSS RUNS INTO THE THOUSANDS.

The Fire Was Started by Cotton Batting Coming in Contact With a Burning Gas Jet—Flames Spread Rapidly and Threatened the Business Center of the City—But the Stock Was Practically Ruined.

Plainfield saw the largest fire last Sunday afternoon that she has seen for a long time but, thanks to the efficiency of her fire department, a much larger conflagration was prevented. The flames started in the basement of the dry goods establishment of Isaac Lederer, on West Front street, near Park avenue, and threatened the very heart of the city with destruction but after two hours of hard fighting the fire was completely extinguished after many thousand dollars worth of property had been lost by the combined effects of flames and water. The water was necessary, however, as, had it not been used so plentifully, the entire business section of the city might have burned out.

Yesterday was not a pleasant day, especially in the afternoon. The rain had been falling at intervals all day and everything was wet and muddy under foot. The hands of the town clock pointed to about 3:10 o'clock when two of the salesmen in Lederer's store went to the basement to arrange some new shelving for the cotton batting. They started to lift a case of cotton batting from the shelf.

"Look out for the gas jet," called one of the other clerks. They looked, but only in time to see the inflammable cotton batting all ablaze, for they had accidentally carried it right into the flame from the gas jet.

Albert Lederer, son of the proprietor, was not far away, and he and the clerks tried to extinguish the flames. Water was brought in buckets and blankets were thrown over the blaze but the fire was spreading rapidly and the big rolls of matting and carpets caught. The smoke was so great that they were driven from the basement and soon from the store itself.

Mr. Lederer was at his desk and left it, books, money and all, and hurried out to give the alarm. R. J. Shaw heard the cries of fire and sent in an alarm from Box 12, across the street from the scene of the fire. When the alarm was sent in there was no sign of the fire on the outside, but soon a dense cloud of smoke rolled out of the windows and doors, demonstrated the upper story and warned the occupants of the rooms there to make their escape, which they did. Everyone in the building rushed into the street and all arrived there in safety.

It was less than a minute after the alarm blew that Alert Hose Company's wagon reached the scene, and the other apparatus were not far behind. To enter the store was impossible on account of the stifling smoke and the firemen were forced to remain at the door. Crash went one of the big plate glass windows, and the smoke poured out in an increasing volume. The fire was located in the basement, but the dense smoke made it impossible for the firemen to reach it.

About ten minutes after the first alarm, Chief Doane sent in a second alarm and all the remaining apparatus responded. Seven lines of hose were laid, not including the stream from the chemical engine. One tank of the latter was discharged. The fire burned away furiously in the basement, and set fire to the beams of the first floor. One stream was used at the front entrance of the basement and three more were thrown into the store, while the other three were used in the rear of the building.

The big extension ladder was used for the first time at a fire, and allowed the men to reach the roof of the four story brick building without trouble. The windows were all opened to allow the smoke, that went up the stairway, to escape. William Addis, Jr., was overcome by the smoke while on the second floor opening the windows and had to be dragged out. It took some time for him to recover from the effects. B. B. Rogers, of No. 2 Engine Company, was also overcome by the smoke at the entrance and had to be carried out.

Part of the floor began to sink, and at 4:30 o'clock there was a loud crash and a portion of it over the heart of the fire gave way and show cases, counters and all went tumbling down in a confused mass on the wreck of the floor. The firemen turned their efforts especially to prevent the fire from reaching the first floor and in this they were successful. Holes were cut in the floor and torrants of water poured in through them.

George Studer climbed in the back window and reached Mr. Lederer's desk and rescued the cash box, books and all. They were rather wet, however.

The seven different streams of water soon began to have their effect and the basement was flooded. The water reached the depth of four feet before the last of the fire was extinguished. It is estimated that about 200,000 gallons of water was thrown into the building. There was three thousand feet of hose in use.

As the firemen gained control of the flames, the smoke lessened in volume until they were able to move without trouble about the store and then it was only a matter of a few minutes before the last spark was put out. It was then about 5.15 o'clock, and the work of loading up ladders began.

Although the damage is great, it is not as large as was first supposed. Everything in the basement is either burned or water soaked, and much of the goods on the first floor are ruined by water. Part of them, however, were saved and but little damaged by the water.

The family lived on the second floor and the third floor was devoted to the stock room. The smoke and the heat did some damage here. Mr. Lederer had a large stock of goods on hand and a great deal was stored in the basement. He has been working hard preparatory for the holiday season and he felt the effect of this sudden catastrophe very keenly.

The work of cleaning up and repairing will be begun at once as soon as the insurance appraisers are through, and the store will be re-opened as soon as possible.

The loss has been variously estimated, but good judges place the loss on the stock at about $20,000. It is estimated that his stock was valued at over $30,000. An examination of the goods on the first floor, this morning, showed that all had been more or less injured by the heat and water while part was completely ruined. The insurance on the stock amounted to $9,500. The stock was insured in the Franklin Company, through M. M. Dunham, for $1,000. The rest was through the agency of J. C. Pope & Company and is in the following companies: American, of Philadelphia, $1,000; German-American, $3,000; Home, $2,500; Williamsburg, $1,000; New York Underwriters, $1,000.

The damage to the building, which was also owned by Mr. Lederer, will be covered by insurance. The loss is estimated at about $2,000 and the insurance is for $9,000. $800 is in the Franklin Company, through M. M Dunham, and the rest through J. C. Pope & Company in the following companies: Transylvania, $1,200; Fire Assurance, $4,000; German American, $3,000.

As soon as the alarm blew, a crowd collected and surrounded the front of the burning building. As soon as the police arrived, fire lines were formed and the crowd driven back to give the firemen plenty of room. The numerous lines of hose made traffic on Front street and Park avenue impassible and the trolley cars were blocked until nearly 6 o'clock. Carriages and wagons had to go around by another street.

The only flames that were seen appeared from the back basement windows where several oil barrels had caught fire. The smoke was terrible and half suffocated the firemen. It hung in clouds over the burning building and part of the time filled all the adjacent streets. It was visible for several miles.

Fist Assistant Chief Martin was struck from behind with a stream of water while working at the rear of the building and part way down the back stairway. William Towley, driver of the Alert hose carriage, grabbed him and pulled him out just as the flames burst out in his face. His eyes were injured by the flames and smoke.

I. H. Boehm, who keeps a dry goods store next to Lederer's establishment, suffered some loss from the smoke and water. He made a claim this morning and the insurance men will meet tonight to consider it. J. H. Hackett, whose shoe store is on the other side, packed his books in his safe to be ready for emergencies. J. A. Smith & Brother, the grocers, did the same.

Skandia Junior's Dance.

Another of the regular Saturday night hops, given under the auspices of the Skandia Junior Society, was held in the hall over the Republican headquarters on East Front street, Saturday evening, and some fifty to seventy-five young people were present and danced to Prof. Guttman's music until the hour of closing—midnight. The committee in charge of the entertainment consisted of Messrs. Charles Culberg and Charles Rydell. These dances are becoming very popular, and they are to be continued every Saturday evening from now until spring.

ABOUT FRESH AIR WORK.

MISSIONARY YOUNG PEOPLE LISTEN TO INTERESTING REPORTS.

Rev. Mr. Fox Describes the Conditions Under Which the Poor of New York Live in Their Squalid Quarters.

The young people's service at the Crescent Avenue church last Friday was one of special interest along the lines of home missionary work. Miss Mary Miller was the leader and, after reading an appropriate chapter from the Scriptures, she made a few helpful remarks. Miss Miller stated that she was interested in the Westfield Fresh Air Camp. Rev. Mr. Fox, of New York, who is connected with city mission work, and also the Fresh Air Camp, was present and made a few remarks. Mr. Fox stated that he had started a mission on the east side of New York city, in the Seventeenth ward, and since its opening, five years ago, much good had been accomplished. He related some of the terrible conditions to be found in that ward where there was about 3,000 persons living in every block. He spoke of the fearful mortality among the children and of the grand work performed by the Fresh Air Camp last summer in caring for the children. As a result of this work he said that during the last year no less than ninety-six mothers han given their hearts to Christ.

Miss Clary, who has charge of the nursery at the camp, was called upon and briefly related some of the grand results in her department. Many remained at the close of the meeting to converse with Mr. Fox and Miss Clary regarding their work.

CONWAY NOT GUILTY.

He Was Charged With Stealing Watches by Maria Stetson.

Samuel Conway, a colored man from this city, was tried before Judge T. F. McCormick and a jury of twelve men, Friday, in Elizabeth, on the charge of grand larceny, and found not guilty. Maria Stetson was the complaining witness and she charged Conway with getting away with two gold watches, a silver watch and a revolver. He pleaded not guilty and was represented in court by his lawyer, Clarence L. Murphy, of this city. Assistant Prosecutor Dunn represented the State.

The different witnesses were sworn and their testimony heard. The lawyers summed up and then the jury retired. After being out only five minutes they returned with a verdict of not guilty.

Mr. Bacon Wants No Office.

It has been hinted in some quarters that the name of F. M. Bacon, Democrat, was in nomination by petition for the present city campaign the following ticket: For Mayor, James D. Martine; for Clerk, Charles W. Johnson; for Collector, Frank M. Bacon; for Treasurer, John W. Shumpp; for Assessor, Frank Vosseller. In case any vacancies occur Mr. Martine is appointed committee to fill them.

I cut the above from the News, stating that the silver party was about to inaugurate a volcanic eruption in city politics by petitioning and thrust upon me the honor of Plainfield's set of candidates which is liable to break the serenity of the G. O. P. Now, I should judge the author has got one of those things called the swelled head or a gouty substance forming under the big toe. It can't be an overstock of gray matter which has corroded just beneath the occipital bone, causing him to overflow with such brilliant thoughts and scaring the more sedate people into an unsettled condition of mind. If such be the case, I will say I have never sought an office of any kind whatsoever, neither would I accept one from any party unless there was sufficient salary attached to it to guarantee my full time and attention, and leave me enough to protect myself from the slanderous pen of editorial light.

Dangers in Food Supplies.

A lecturer on cooking the other day made the surprising statement that the asylums are being filled with country people in much greater proportions than city people, mainly because they are more careless in regard to their food. While a diet of fat meats may be more characteristic of people living in rural districts, there are other dangers just as insidious to which the residents of the big cities are subject. Scientific research is every day emphasizing the fact that man is what he eats.

Probably there have been no more active advocates of pure food than the manufacturers of Royal Baking Powder. The vigorous campaign against adulterations carried on by them was due in a large part to the fact that in scarcely any other division of food supplies are harmful ingredients used so widely as in the compounding of baking powders. The absolute purity of the Royal has become in the nature of an axiom, and its proprietors are naturally disposed to spread broadcast the doctrine of pure food. It has been claimed, without contradiction, that no other of human food has ever received so many emphatic endorsements from the highest autorities.—Journal of Health.

Soothing, and not irritating, strengthening, and not weakening, small but effective—such are the qualities of DeWitt's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills. L. W. Randolph, 143 West Front street.

FIRE IN THE BED.

Department Called to Netherwood Last Evening.

A mattress caught fire in the attic of Jepp Erickzen's house on South avenue near Woodlawn avenue last Friday and an alarm was sent in from box 18, close by. The fire was easily extinguished by a stream from the chemical engine.

Mr. Erickzen is station agent at the Netherwood station. A friendrode from Plainfield on his bicycle and visited at Mr. Erickson's house yesterday. He decided to remain over night and was given the attic room. When he went to his room at about 10:30 o'clock and found the bed a mass of flames. The alarm was sent in and the department arrived in the very brief space of six minutes. This was the fastest run yet made to that box. The stream from the chemical engine extinguished the flames without doing but trifling damage. The cause of the fire is unknown. The damage to the furniture was about $18 and to the room $12. The house was insured for $1,000, and the furniture for $500.

The chemical engine, the Alert hose carriage, No. 2 hose carriage, No 2 steamer and the hook and ladder truck responded to the alarm.

"CIDER-JOINTS" MUST GO.

A Flourishing Asbury Park Industry Stopped by the Court.

The Asbury Park "cider-joint" industry has encountered a check which, on account of its far-reaching consequences, has cast a funeral like gloom over the entire bibulous fraternity within a mile of Senator Bradley's resort. A jury in the court at Freehold recently convicted Joseph Sammuzzi, a prosperous West Park cider-joint owner. The result of his trial practically closes about thirty similar places.

At the trial old whiskey drinkers testified that one glass of Sammuzzi's cider was equivalent to a full pint of rum, and that three glasses invariably produced a paralyzing effect, from which it was difficult to recover without the aid of a hand-cart and a long sleep either inside or outside the county jail.

Another customer called at the Italian grocery store he asked for "a mackeral."

His Loss Was $2.98.

A Kasky, of Lake street, came to town Saturday and went to an auction room on Somerset street, where he purchased a quantity of chinaware, cooking utensils and other things needed in his household. At 5:30 o'clock he stood on the corner of Watchung avenue and Front street, waiting for a car, when his bundles broke away and fell with a crash on the sidewalk. The chinaware was broken into a thousand pieces, and the pots and kettles were cracked and rendered useless. Mr. Kasky felt his loss keenly, and took a philosophical view of matters by boarding a car and going home. He estimated his loss at $2.98.

A Fireman and Life Saver.

Few people are aware of the fact that Charles H. Herring, father of the Rev. C. E. Herring, is an old fireman and a life saver. The elder Mr. Herring joined the old No. 13 Hook and Ladder Company in New York some forty years ago when Chief Alfred Carson was in command. He served seven years with honor and bravery, and during that time was instrumental in saving 13 human beings from being burned to death. Some years ago during the great conflagration at Broad and Bleecker street, he rescued three persons from a fiery tomb, and for this he was rewarded for his bravery. He has also saved several persons from drowning during his lifetime.

Philharmonic Concert.

The Philharmonic Sextette, with Richard Arnold, first violinist, of New York, will give three concerts in the Casino in December, January and February. These concerts will probably furnish the best music that will be heard in Plainfield this winter. There will be special soloists at each concert.

How to Prevent Croup

SOME READING THAT WILL PROVE INTERESTING TO YOUNG MOTHERS. HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THE DISEASE.

Croup is a terror to young mothers and to point them concerning the cause, first symptoms and treatment is the object of this item. The origin of croup is a common cold. Children who are subject to it take cold very easily and croup is almost sure to follow. The first symptom is hoarseness; this is soon followed by a peculiar cough which is easily recognized and will never be forgotten by one who has heard it. The time to act is when the child first becomes hoarse. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is freely given all tendency to croup will soon disappear. Even after the croupy cough has developed it will prevent the attack. There is no danger in giving this remedy for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, druggist.

"Excuse me," observed the man in spectacles, "but I am a surgeon, and that is not where the liver is." "Never you mind where his liver is," retorted the other. It comprises a picked lot of well-known comedians and comediennes and a comedy in "The Nabobs" that is considered one of the funniest on the boards. The fact that this is its sixth season and the twelfth of the organization, speaks volumes in its favor. John E. Henshaw, who heads the company, is known all over this country as one of the most gifted and versatile comedians. This will be the only appearance of this famous organization here this season and it will be a treat for the lovers of fun and good comedy. Prices will be the same as usual and seats may be secured in time for "The Nabobs" next Saturday evening at the Opera House.

Buy Your Stamps Here.

There are probably many Plainfielders who believe that the supply of stamps to be purchased at the local post office is limited, and that if they want 3,000 or 4,000 at one time they must go to New York for them. This is not so. Postmaster Hetfield says that his office can supply any quantity on demand.

An Important Office.

To properly fill its office and functions, it is important that the blood be pure. When it is in such a condition, the body is almost certain to be healthy. A complaint at this time is catarrh in some of its various forms. A slight cold developes catarrh in the head. Droppings of corruption passing into the lungs bring on consumption. The only way to cure this disease is to purify the blood. The most obstinate cases of catarrh yield to the medicinal powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla as if by magic, simply because it reaches the seat of the disease, and by purifying and vitalizing the blood, removes the cause. Not only does Hood's Sarsaparilla thus build up and renew vigor to the whole system, making it possible for good health to reign supreme.

TO MAKE BETTER CITIES

MR. FROST'S REPORT OF MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENT CONVENTION.

The Councilman Was Honored by Being Made a Member of the Committee on Sewers—To Make a Report in the Future

The following is the report of Councilman George H. Frost concerning his trip to the convention of the Society of Municipal Improvement held at Chicago:

Last meeting, as is known, I was made a delegate to the convention of the Society of Municipal Improvement at Chicago. I attended that convention which lasted four days, and I wish to say that it was an extremely interesting and profitable meeting.

The delegates there from the different cities were not simply civil engineers, as one might suppose, but there were mayors of several cities. The Boards of Public Works were also largely represented by the presidents of several Councils.

The city of Plainfield was the smallest city represented; in fact circulars had only been sent to cities of 30,000 inhabitants, but, notwithstanding, the city of Plainfield was needed.

The subjects taken up were those generally discussed over the whole of the United States. The subject of street pavement occupied very a special attention, and particularly in the laying of asphalt pavements. I learned enough from the information there to know that for a small a city as Plainfield it would be a very difficult matter to lay asphalt pavement with any success. I am in favor of good pavements and I think that Plainfield can be very much contributed indebted to for those who have work is equal to any in the country, and that we have the means and ability to make as good roads as can be found anywhere in this country. I found in my travels through the country, aside from the cities that are paved with stone or asphalt, that I find hardly any city that has as good streets as ours.

There is a very valuable paper on the subject of laying out pavements which will be submitted in the annual report which will come to the city soon. I am sure we will be of a great deal of value to the city. Among other matters that I found of great importance. The cities being all of considerable size, I found that there was no single engineer there among them that had not had charge of a sewage disposal on land. They are all turning into sewage disposal on land. Considerable attention was expended on the subject of disposal on land was something very little understood or known, so that I found when I spoke to them about the sewage disposal in Plainfield that it excited a great deal of interest, and I was instructed to prepare a report to be presented at the next meeting in Nashville, which I expect to do.

The subject of garbage is not a matter that is taken up and discussed by the Society, but I always some that is given considerable attention and a good deal of interest. A representative of the city of Syracuse told their experience and it was very favorable. A representative of the city of Minneapolis told about their garbage crematory and that after they had started a crematory influence was brought to bear so that they had to destroy it and could not do it legally.

The president of the Board of Health of the city of Milwaukee was a very good specimen of the system in Milwaukee. He said that the people would now be perfectly disposed against and I found with talking with people generally interviewed opinion was that it was very much needed, in fact it was almost a necessity, for the city to own their garbage disposal instead of allowing it to be done by private corporations.

On the subject of electric lighting there was a very elaborate paper. It was so large it could not be distributed around, and it will make quite a voluminous report when we come to get it. I can also be purchased for a few cents, and it will be of value to every municipal officer in the country.

The next meeting will be held in Nashville next October, at the semi-centennial there.

I feel that the city of Plainfield was honored by having its delegate put on the committee on sewers, which is one of the principal committees, and I shall do my best to give them a pretty good paper next year.

Real Estate is Booming.

Restored confidence has given a great impetus to real estate dealings. Sales are consequently increasing and there is every prospect of their going higher as time advances. If you want to buy land for speculation now is the time to do it, or if you want to buy for building purposes it is better to do so while the values are low than to wait until they increase. In another column the Plainfield Real Estate Company tells interesting facts with reference to buying property. They have some great offers to make to intending buyers. Read their announcement.

A Funny Sign.

A man came home the other night on the midnight train and, as he reached the corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, he looked at the new sign on Morgan C. Bird's store. It read: "Morgan C. Bird, dealer in oats, hay, feed and shorty." He noticed the mistake in the spelling of the last word, told Mr. Bird and now the sign has been repainted with the last word changed to "shorts."

—T. S. Armstrong, the druggist, has just received the most complete hot water apparatus for making hot soda in the city. It is one of Lowe's art tile heaters and works automatic so that the water is always of a given temperature. It is very handsome in appearance and with Mr. Armstrong hopes to serve his customers with the finest hot soda that can be found anywhere.

VALIDITY OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

The following is of particular interest to Plainfielders since the work of determining sewer assessments is now going on:

The question of the validity of special assessments on property to pay for city improvements has been tested in these States—Iowa, Rhode Island and Delaware, in the last named quite recently. In Delaware an assessment for the construction of a sewer was resisted by property owners on the ground that he did not use the sewer and therefore was not benefitted by it. Even on the assumption that sewers are a public benefit, it was argued for the protestant that he should not be required to pay specially for the sewer in front of his premises, but that the public at large should pay for the public benefit by general taxation. Further, accepting the city's contention that abutting property is benefitted by the construction of a sewer, it was claimed that the special assessment was unjust, as if the assessors did their duty, the increased value of the property, according to the benefit, would annually pay a larger tax, and thus the property would be doubly assessed. But the Delaware court agreed with the courts of Rhode Island and Iowa in pronouncing the ordinance valid. The court ruled that the city was only exercising the functions granted it by the Legislature and that the latter body, in its general taxing power, had the authority, when authorizing sewer assessments, to fix the proportion which the abutting property should pay.

801 GARRET A. HOBARTS.

A committee, which is arranging for a sound-money demonstration in New Brunswick on Monday, went to Vice-President-elect Hobart to secure his attendance. Mr. Hobart begged to be excused. Then he added:

"Gentlemen, the demands upon my time are enormous. I have about seventy-five invitations to attend dinners and celebrations on Monday. If I did nothing but write autographs for the babies I would be very busy."

"Babies! What do you mean," asked one of the committeemen.

"Why," said Mr. Hobart, "I have had 800 of them named after me so far, and the end is not in sight."

ODD REASONING.

"There are things that would have been better left unsaid" in the communication of Charles J. Noel, published in The Daily Press yesterday—that is, if Mr. Noel has any regard for the eternal fitness of things. If C. J. Noel is, was, and always will be, a citizen of this country why did he ever take out naturalization papers, as he admits he did in one part of his communication, but tacitly denies in another. Mr. Noel's erratic reasoning would seem to indicate that he did not know "where he was at."

INTEND TO BE PERMANENT FACTORS.

Though William D. Bynum, chairman of the National Democratic party, announced soon after election that the organization would not be continued in a National way, efforts are making in many sections of the country to organize its supporters into permanent factors in State and local politics. Here in Plainfield a conference of the leaders to determine their future course will be held on Saturday evening next.

GIVE US A HORSE SHOW.

With all its blooded stock, stylish turnouts, accomplished drivers and fashionable and pretty women, why can't Plainfield indulge in the joy of a horse show? The horse show has become a great social event in Orange, and surely Plainfield can do as well as its sister town. Such an event would not necessarily depend entirely upon the entries of Plainfield, but would attract exhibits from the whole metropolitan district.

KEAN MAY BE DUMPED.

If John Kean keeps his eye fixed on the political chess board, he can see the moves which are being make with a view of landing Governor Griggs in the United Srtes Senate, and of awarding to Mr. Kean the empty and expressive honor of being a candidate for Governor two years hence.—True American.

The Mercantile and Financial Times of New York has the following to say of Mayor Gilbert over his selection as President of the Market and Fulton Bank: "Mr. Gilbert is also a veteran of finance, having joined the bank when Mr. Bayles did. He is a man of conservative methods, of sound and accurate judgement and of thoroughly up-to-date methods, and it may be looked upon as a foregone conclusion that the business of the bank will continue to prosper and grow under his administration as it has done in times past."

The present Republican rule in Plainfield is not devoid of clever politicians by any means.

"Man Killed While Hunting" is the cause now assigned to numerous fatalities where he "Didn't Know It Was Loaded" was the factor before.

The Press is not giving advice, but simply observing, when it says that the Republicans cannot be defeated in the coming city election unless all op position is centered.

WAS A HUMAN TORCH.

MRS. PHILIP RADIN HORRIBLY BURNED ABOUT HER BODY.

Her Clothes Caught Fire From a Kitchen Stove—Thought at the Hospital That She May Not Recover From Her Injuries.

A most horrible accident, which will probably prove fatal, occured at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Irenaeus Allen, 97 Jackson avenue, Saturday evening about 5 o'clock, when Mrs. Philip Radin, a boarder, was frightfully burned from her waist to her head. Mrs. Radin has been living with Mr. and Mrs. Allen about a month, and her many peculiar acts caused Mrs. Allen to watch her very closely. On Saturday the latter went out riding for a little while and returned about 4:30. She made no special effort to find Mrs. Radin, and as she had some work upstairs to look after she hastened to perform it. Presently Mrs. Allen's children ran to her calling for help. They were excited but she could understand in the childish talk that Mrs. Radin's clothes were on fire.

She very quickly returned with the children and found Mrs. Radin in the back yard with her clothes in a mass of flames. Mrs. Prentice, a neighbor, was near by, and she ran to a carriage, grasped a horse blanket and wrapped it around the unfortunate woman. This smothered the flames, and in the meantime Dr. Adams, who was summoned, arrived and gave proper treatment.

Mrs. Radin was taken in the house when an examination proved that there was scarcely any flesh left on the body from the waist to the head. The woman apparently did not suffer any pain and she retained consciousness. On the advice of the doctor Mrs. Radin was at once taken to the hospital, where she now lies in a critical condition, and there are slight hopes for her recovery.

Details of the horrible affair are that Mrs. Radin was left alone in the house with Mrs. Allen's children. She discovered that there was no fire in the kitchen stove and acting on the impulse of the moment, started to build one. She placed a quantity of paper in the stove and after lighting it placed some wood on top. While doing the latter the stove-lifter dropped into the fire, and in her attempt to rescue the lifter her apron caught fire. Quicker than a flash her clothing was in a blaze and in her frantic efforts she rushed through the back door into the yard, which was the worst thing she could do, as the air only caused the flames to burn more fiercely. A somewhat singular incident in connection with the sad affair is that a pair of corsets worn by Mrs. Radin were so tightly laced that the heat from the steels burned the flesh to an alarming degree. As soon as Mrs. Radin was taken to the house Mrs. Allen removed the unfortunate woman's clotnes and in doing so large pieces of burned flesh came off. Mr. Geo. Kim, a neighbor, gave his assistance, which was appreciated.

Mrs. Radin is better known by her maiden name, Miss Theresa DeFario. She was a granddaughter of the late ex-Governor Bedloe, of New York, and now receives an income of $430 every three months from the estate.

She is a well-known person about town, due to the fact that she is very eccentric.

AN ABLE ACQUISITION.

Assemblyman Codington, of Plainfield, gives it as his opinion that "it would be a proper thing to have a portion of North Plainfield township, Somerset county, set off and added to the county of Union. The borough of North Plainfield, embracing some 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants, is virtually a part of the city of Plainfield—divided, however, by a small stream, which is the county line, and, of course, necessarily under a different government." There is some weight in Mr. Codington's suggestion, and if carried into effect it would make Senator Reed, of Somerset, a resident of Union county, and one of our able coterie of politicians. —Elizabeth Journal.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

At a public meeting of the Cranford Sewer Commissioners last evening the hall was well filled with interested property owners who discussed the subject of assesments before the Commissioners, very freely. That's the way they do in Cranford. Here when the Sewer Commissioners meet and ask the interested property owners to appear before them and discuss the subject of assesment, only two or three respond. Who can tell the cause of Plainfield citizens disinterestedness?

The removal of William G. C. See, to Jersey City, takes away a good citizen and a faithful and conscientious officer. Mr. See has presided in a dignified and fair manner over the proceedings of the Common Council for three years, and though his official path has been made easy by reason of not having to contend with a resourceful political minority, his ability in quickly dispatching business has been marked and appreciated. As his successor Councilman Ginna will fill the office with equal credit and satisfaction.

The general belief among doctors is that consumption itself is very rarely inherited. But the belief is becoming stronger that the tendency to consumption is very generally transmitted from parent to child. If there has been consumption in the family, each member should take special care to prepare the system against it. Live out doors; keep the body well nourished; and treat the first indication of failing health.

GOLF CUP CONTESTS AND

THE REINHART AND THE CHAPMAN TROPHIES DECIDED.

Both Are Challengable, However, and They Will be Contested For Again in the Spring—The Presentations Made.

There was not as many persons present at the golf links Saturday afternoon, as usual, owing to the sudden change in the weather, but the interest in the finals of the match play between Lee Ashley Grace and Dr. F. C. Ard, for the Reinhart cup, did not diminish with those who were present. After a very exciting game, Dr. Ard beat Mr. Grace two up and one to play. The former's handicap was 34 and the latter's 27. This places the cup in Dr. Ard's possession until next spring when he will have to defend it in a similar match play.

A pleasant feature of the afternoon was the presentation in the clubhouse of the Chapman cup to H. Reeve Stockton, the winner, by the donor, Geo. H. Chapman. The fact that when Mr. Stockton won the cup, which was on election day, he celebrated the anniversary of his eighteenth birthday, made the event one of peculiar interest. Another fact worthy of note is that Mr. Stockton was born on election day eighteen years ago.

Mr. Chapman, in a neat and appropriate speech, presented the cup to the winner. He expressed a hope that it would prove an incentive to the good golf players to become better players, so that they could compete with the best clubs in the country He paid a compliment to Mr. Tracy, through whose efforts the club was now occupying comforable quarters. Hearty applause greeted Mr. Chapman's remarks, and Mr. Stockton accepted the cup with thanks. He was too much overcome to make a speech, though it was called for. Mr. Stockton will hold the cup until next Decoration Day, when it will again be placed in competition. The one winning it three times becomes the permanent owner.

The tea was, as usual, an enjoyable part of the afternoon, and Mrs. C. J. Fisk poured tea, assisted by Mrs. Wm. T. Kaufman, Miss Walz, of Plainfield, and Miss Fisk, of New York.

The Republicans and Democrats of Somerset must have forgot themselves when no nominee for Coronor was put in the field, and the Prohibition man slipped quietly in with a total vote of 126, which was also his majority.

HOT IN THE FIRST, ETC.

Mr. Ladd not to have the latter's name run as a candidate for the Councilmanic nomination. The Runyon faction looked delighted while many of Ladd's supports were greatly surprised. Mr. Frost remarked that it was better to run a good Democrat than a poor Republican.

At this point, L. N. Lovell started a discussion on who was eligible to vote at the primary which the chairman finally had to summarily stop. Mr. Dumont spoke a few words in behalf of Mr. Runyon, the president of the Young Men's Republican Club and referred to the good work done, especially in the Second ward by Mr. Runyon and the young men. He then moved that the secretary cast a ballot for Mr Runyon and the motion was unanimously carried.

There were two tickets in the fight for the seven delegates to the city convention; both, however, it was understood would support Fisk for Mayor. The faction that supported Runyon for Councilman carried their entire ticket despite the opposition. Chas. W. Smith was named on both tickets. The vote was as follows: Charles W. Smith, 111; Richard J. Jackson, 95; J. B. Drayton, 91; H. R. Ayers, 87; James Babbitt, 86; Clifton Wharton, Jr., 66; Leonard Spangenberg, 66. The above were elected as delegates and the other candidates were: S. A. Ginna, 59; Charles H. Hand, 50; Rob't Guttridge, 47; A. W. Duxberry, 45; M. S. Ackerman, 13; W. N. Runyon, 12; C. V. Corwin, 1; W. D. W. Miller, 1; E. C. Mulford, 1.

Messrs. Wharton, Ackerman and Corwin all stated that they could not act, but were voted upon nevertheless.

V. W. Nash was then nominated for justice of the peace without any real opposition, and the three members of the city executive committee were chosen as named by the Runyon faction, Geo. D. Patten, J. E Keely and William H Drayton. Several others were nominated but declined. Justice Nash then moved that the executive committee be given power to fill all vacancies and the motion was carried. A collection for the janitor was taken and after the result of the vote for delegates was announced the meeting adjourned.

THIRD WARD.

The Third ward primary was held in the Casino, and the attendance was large. Roger F. Murray called the meeting to order, and Mayor Alexander Gilbert was chosen chairman and O. B. Lonard, Secretary. Mayor Gilbert thanked the voters for the honor thus conferred upon him and stated that it was not the first time he had had the honor to address his constituents. The Mayor said everything looked brighter since the last election and at the coming election the party would triumph same as it did on November 3. The party, he contended, was one based on a standard of morality and honor.

At the conclusion of Mayor Gilbert's remarks, the secretary read the call, and the chairman was empowered to select the other officers whose names follow: Judge of election, Frank Bushnell; inspector, George A. Chapman; clerk, William T. Kaufman. The following nominations were made without a dissenting vote: Delegates to city convention, E. S. Barrows, B. F. Manton, Jr., H. A. Force, R. F. Murray, William T. Kaufman and R. F. Murray, Jr.

For Councilman, John T. Baker, of Stelle avenue, was the unanimous choice of the convention and J. Oakley Nodyne was declared the nominee for Justice of the Peace. Amos Moffett was nominated for constable. For members of the city executive committee, R. F. Murray, W. T. Kaufman and F. E. Marsh, were nominated and a committee consisting of J. W. Moody, Sr., W. T. Kaufman and O. T. Waring was appointed to fill vacancies. The meeting then adjourned.

FOURTH WARD

In the Fourth ward there was not the slightest opposition to the regular ticket offered. Justice William Newcorn called the meeting to order and E. E. Anthony was made chairman. Thomas King, was chosen secretary; F. B. Ryder, judge; Lewis Morgan, Inspector; and Stephen Higham, clerk. The following nominations were made unanimously: Delegates to city convention, John Arden, Stephen Higham, Peter Hansen Edward Gallagher, Joseph Chapot John Poirter, John Cose, James Stewart, Edward McCray, D. W. Brown and F. S. McCarthy. For Councilman, Isaac S. Randolph; city executive committee, William A. Westphal, William Newcorn, Alonzo Ayers; justice of the peace, Adam Young; constable, Aaron Mattox. Each delegate was authorized to fill his own vacancy, and the officers of the primary was empowered to fill any vacancies on the ticket if there were any. The delegates stand for G. J. Fisk for Mayor, E. H. Bird, collector; Alex. Titsworth, treasurer; Fred C. Lounsbury, school commissioner and for the rest of the ticket. There was a large number of citizens present,

HAS COME TO STAY.

Ex-Senator Henry E. Winton, of Bergen county, Chairman of the National Democratic State Committee, has announced that the National Democratic party has come to stay. He says:

"The National Democratic vote in New Jersey was 4,671. To get a legal status as a party under the New Jersey Election Law it should have polled two per cent. of the total vote, which would be 7,421 votes. The two per cent. was secured in Bergen, Burlington, Middlesex, Monmouth, Morris, Somerset and Union counties, and candidates for county offices can be nominated by convention instead of by petition. The National Democratic party will perfect its machinery in each county of the State by the formation of county committees, in order that there may be a Democratic organization free from Populism, Silver Republicanism not being in harmony with Democratic principles, the National Democratic party cannot and will not have anything to do with it as an organization. The new Democratic party is the only genuine Democratic organization now existing, and the future of the Democracy is in its keeping, its principles are those laid down at the Indianapolis Convention; they are Democratic to the core and as such will renew public confidence in the Democratic organization as soon as it is demonstrated that such Democrats are in control of the machinery and are guiding it once more through the paths of true Democracy for the nation's honor."

—The Borough Council will hold an adjourned session on Friday evening next.

—A portion of the roadway on Front street at the corner of Somerset, has sunk below the grade, causing a continual mud puddle. A gang of men is now at work filling it up to grade.

—On Friday evening there will be an Epworth League rally at the First M. E. church. Leagues from Westfield, Dunellen and Plainfield have been invited and an excellent programme will be presented.

—T. J. Carey's men who returned from Yonkers on Saturday where they delivered several loads of furniture, report that they found a considerable amount of snow at that place and for awhile they were obliged to stop work.

—The case of Arthur against Dickson, on contract, came before Justice Mosher Monday. City Judge DeMeza appeared for Dickson and asked for a non-suit. His request was granted after the Justice heard the circumstances.

—Joseph A. Blatz, of Somerset street, is having a stone walk laid in front of property owned by him on Green brook road. Richmel Powers is doing the work. This will make a continuous stone walk on Green brook road from Somerset to Grove street.

—David Gray, an employe of the Pond Tool and Machine Works, sustained a slight injury to a toe Friday afternoon while at work by a piece of iron falling on his foot. Mr. Gray went to the hospital and had the injured member dressed and soon afterward returned to his work.

"CONVENTION ECHOES."

REV. C. E. HERRING TELLS OF THE GOOD IT HAS DONE.

Many Are Prone to Criticise When There is No Need For-It, and Mr. Herring Points Out the Error of Judgment.

"Convention Echoes" was the text chosen last Sunday by Rev. Chas. E. Herring for his sermonette, and the speaker in his usual plain and forcible manner told something of interest regarding the recent Christian Endeavor State convention held in this city. Mr. Herring's remarks were of interest and to the point. He said:

"It is customary at the close of Christian Endeavor conventions, when the delegates reach their homes, to have echo meetings. Such meetings have been held all over this State. The convention does not stop at adjournment. The delegates, filled with new ideas and spirit, go home to their own societies to impart the enthusiasm they have received at the convention, organize new societies and encourage weaker ones until every town and hamlet feels, at least, something of the impulse. That is the meaning of the convention. That was the object of the Plainfield convention, and from report the object has been realized. Some of the echoes we have heard have a discordant sound. These have been echoes in this city which were not all that one would desire.

"One criticism is, the convention was a dress parade. The criticism is probably sincere, but very indefinite. There is nothing tangible to answer. The programme committee sought to bring to this city the purest minds to stimulate the young people to greater activity.

"The prime object of conventions are to educate, and that along definite lines—evangelistic, missionary and patriotic. Methods of work are suggested that otherwise would never be learned. The convention is a university-extension course. This was the plan of the committee and surely it is not to be criticised for securing the best speakers possible. To secure the worst would make it a fiasco; to secure the best a dress parade. It is so easy to criticise.

"Another criticism was good—The convention showed the power lodged in millions of young people. The general movement is right. Two or three millions of young people organized in the Christian Endeavor is a power of hopefulness. We do not recognize the young people sufficiently. They are enthusiastic and we are setting on the safety-valve. Thirteen millions of young men in the United States with only one million church members should stir us to do all in our power for young people.

"Another criticism—That this convention had value only for the time it existed, the moment it dissolved it left nothing of real value. It hurts no truth. If you could hear the echoes all over the State you would not make the criticism.

"If Moody's sermons, his talks to the public of Plainfield on how to get men to church, and on his Endowment of the Spirit, had no effect on this city, I am at a loss to know what agency would affect it."

THEATRICAL.

That excellent comedy organization, The Henshaw-TenBroeck Company, is now touring for its twelfth annual season and will appear in their new edition of "The Nabobs," that has made all America laugh. The company this time is stronger than ever, comprising as it does John E. Henshaw, Frank David, William Blaisdell, Edward Webb, C. R. Burroughs, Louis Mason, Clara Lavine, Carlotta, Sophie Witt, Clara VanVeachen and Miss TenBroeck. Those who enjoy good clean fun, bright and catchy music well rendered by singers of undoubted ability and a play with real plot, will certainly be well pleased with the "New Nabobs," who appear at Music Hall next Saturday evening.

"A Bowery Girl," which is to be the attraction of the week at H. R. Jacob's Theatre in Newark is a realistic New York melodrama. The Bowery, the Grand street elevated railroad station and the palisades on the Hudson are among the scenes represented. Florrie West plays the leading role and Carrie Exter that of a "tough girl." Songs and specialties enliven the play.

—A quartette from the Midmer Glee Club will sing at a concert at Matawan the first of next month.

An Important Office.

To properly fill its office and functions, it is important that the blood be pure. When it is in such a condition the body is almost certain to be healthy. Consumption at this time is catarrh in some of its various forms. A slight cold develops the disease in the head. Droppings of corrupted matter fall into the lungs bring on consumption. The only way to cure this disease is to purify the blood. The most obstinate cases of catarrh yield to the medicinal powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla as if by magic, simply because it reaches the seat of the disease, and by purifying and vitalizing the blood, removes the cause. Not only does Hood's Sarsaparilla do this but it gives renewed vigor to the whole system, making it possible for good health to reign supreme.

ECCENTRIC MAN DEAD

ONCE RICH AND INFLUENTIAL, DIED POOR AND A MENTAL WRECK.

Jeptha Wagoner Succumbs to Injuries Received from Falling Off a Roof—Some of His Many Visionary and Erratic Ideas

If there was a man in this section of the country who enjoyed the distinction of being more eccentric and visionary than any other, that man was Jeptha Wagoner, of Warren township, and his death, which occurred at his home on Saturday, brings to mind many of his peculiar acts which made him a noted person in this locality.

About two weeks ago Mr. Wagoner fell from the roof of his house while making repairs, and sustained injuries from which he could not recover. He was about 80 years old and died in a most pitiable and impoverished condition. Years ago he was a wealthy man and was at the head of the Wagoner Fertilizing Company, of Syracuse, which concern is now owned by Mr. Wagoner's sons. While in his prime Mr. Wagoner was considered a sharp and shrewd business man. He secured many patents of more or less note, but the old story, the patentee getting left, was true in his case. His latter years were spent on his farm and the many reverses in his life left his mind in a weakened state. It will be remembered that a few years ago he was put off of a train on the D. L. & W. Railroad, and he sought redress by suing the company for $1,000,000. He did not realize anything from the suit. On another occasion he sought ex-Judge W. A. Coddington's law office and attempted to give the latter a horsewhipping, for some act which he held was an injury to him. Among his many peculiar ideas was one to cast a large block of Washington Rock and name the rooms after the various States in the Union. In connection with this he planned to erect an electric light of such large proportions that it would illuminate Plainfield so that a newspaper could be read in any part of the city. He submitted his plans to the Government but they failed to see the advantage in such a work. These set-backs all worked on his mind and caused him much trouble. He leaves a wife and four children. His age is about 35 years old and the children Martha, Mary, Elsie and David are all under fifteen years of age. The funeral services were held today from his late home.

Mrs. Townsend Surprised.

Mrs. J. E. Townsend, of Coddington avenue, was given a surprise party Saturday evening by her husband, J. E. Townsend, and William A. Crawford. It was a complete affair in every respect and the evening was devoted to the playing of all sorts of games after which refreshments were served in abundance. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Townsend, Mr and Mrs. F. C. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Corra Ryno, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Townsend, Miss Elizabeth Dunn, Miss Ella K Fenner, Miss Mabel Wilson, Mrs. Bertha Richards, of Plainfield; Mrs. Townsend, of Westfield; Horace J. Martin, William A. Crawford, Fred Townsend, Harry Canfield and Willard Martin.

Stone Work Finished.

The stone work of the large dam for the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company is completed by the contractor, W. H. Smith, and about one-half of the earth work finished. The dam will not be completed until next spring, as the company state that they do not intend to use it this winter.

Mrs. Hall to Lecture in Newark.

Improvements Planned.

L. W. Randolph, the popular West Front street druggist, has leased his present store from its owner, Dr W. H. Voorhees, of Brooklyn, for four more years. He is now planning several marked improvements in his already well equipped store and a large handsome up-to date wall soda water fountain will take the place of the present fountain.

PIG SKIN INVINCIBLES.

PLAINFIELD AGAIN EASILY DEFEATS WESTFIELD AT FOOTBALL.

The Game Played at Westfield, But the Plainfield Boys Put Up a Great Game on the Strange Field—The Lineup.

There is no doubt whatever now as to the superiority of the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. football eleven over the Westfield team. The few faint ideas that the Westfielders had that they could defeat their rivals from up the road disappeared Saturday afternoon under the crushing defeat that the Plainfield eleven administered on the Westfield grounds. The Plainfield boys won easily by a score of 30 to 0.

Even the most sanguine had not expected that such a large score would be rolled up by the Y. M. C. A. team, as it was well known that Westfield had strengthened her team and the team was hard at work practicing for the game. But they failed to figure on any improvement among the Plainfield eleven. The Westfield team did put up a better game, especially on the line, but the team play of the Plainfielders was far ahead of their previous efforts, while the men were all in good condition for individual work. The new plays that Waring has been teaching the team proved very effective and several of the best plays were not used at all. The game was free from slugging, and although there was some kicking on the part of the Westfielders, Freeman and Waring agreed to anything so that the game might go on before it became too dark to play. As it was, only five minutes instead of thirty minutes were played in the second half and had the game been played to an end the Plainfield team's score would have been dangerously near 50

The teams lined up as follows:

Plainfield.		Westfield
Serrell	right end	Richardson
Dupee	right tackle	Crook, Whorry
Brown	right guard	Woodruff
Cuming	center	Ayres
Milne	left guard	Bussing
Peck	left tackle	Manheim
Peck	left end	Griswold
Waring	quarterback	Sanday
Freeman	right halfback	Catherts
Cathcart	left halfback	Harbison
Darling	fullback	Voight

Score—Plainfield, 30; Westfield, 0. Touchdowns—Milne, Cathcart, 4; Peck, goals from touchdown—Dupee, 2. Referee—J. S. Titsworth, of Plainfield. Umpire—Mr. Ayres, of Westfield. Linesmen—Oliver Crosfield, and A. Willis West, of Plainfield. Time—Two half, 30 minutes; second half, 15 minutes.

Plainfield won the toss and Freeman chose the northern goal with the wind at their backs. Westfield kicked off. Serrell caught it and ran nearly to the center. Freeman ran for 8 yards and then several small gains and a 30-yard run by Cathcart brought the ball dangerously near Westfield's goal line. Westfield took the ball on a fumble and Voight tried to kick it out of danger. The kick was a poor one and the Plainfield boys began to make steady gains through the line. Three times the ball was carried over the line by Milne, but the Westfielders made a kick each time. Plainfield lost five yards for offside play and Brown carried the ball eight yards to within a foot of the goal line, and then Milne drove through the line for the first touchdown. Lovell missed the goal. Score—Plainfield, 4; West field, 0.

Freeman circled the right end for 30 yards and Waring on a quarterback trick and aided by excellent interference carried the ball 65 yards. Cathcart then cleared the remaining five yards around the right end for a touchdown. Darling kicked the goal. Score—Plainfield, 10; Westfield, 0.

Brown bucked center for eight yards and then Dupee kicked the ball far down the field and out of bounds, where the Plainfield man fell on it. Line plays took the ball to within five yards of Westfield's goal line and then with the backs at right end formation Cathcart made another touchdown. Darling kicked the goal. Score—Plainfield, 16; Westfield, 0.

Dupee made a long kick out of bounds. Peck upset the Westfield fullback and Serrell fell on the ball. Freeman circled the left end for a 30-yard gain, and Cathcart ran the remaining five yards in his usual manner and made another touchdown. Darling missed the goal. Score—Plainfield, 20; Westfield 0.

Westfield got the ball on Dupee's long kick only to lose it on four downs. Cathcart took the ball from Freeman on a double pass and ran 35 yards for another touchdown. Darling missed the goal. Score—Plainfield, 24; Westfield, 0.

Crooks was injured in this play and R. Wherry took his place. This ended the first half.

Plainfield had the kickoff in the second half and Voight tried, on the first play, to kick back. The kick was blocked and a Westfield man fell on the ball for a ten-yard loss. Plainfield captured the ball on four downs and pushed the ball down the field. The signal was given on the one-yard line for a quarterback trick, but the ball slipped over Brown's shoulder. Peck caught it and ran across the line for a touchdown. Darling kicked the goal. Score, Plainfield, 30; Westfield, 0.

Westfield refused to play any more on account of darkness, and the Plainfield team left for home in Conover's stage amid the glare of colored fire, the bang of cannon crackers, and the lively Y. M. C. A. yell. The team continued to celebrate all the way home, and entered Plainfield as they left Westfield. It was not hard to tell how the game had gone.

EVENTFUL LIFE ENDED.

WALTER A BASS PASSES AWAY AFTER A MONTH'S ILLNESS.

He was the Originator of the famous "Bull Durham" Tobacco and Has Been Prominently Connected with the Tobacco Trade

Death came quietly to one of Plainfield's old residents, Walter A. Bass, last evening after an illness of about five weeks. He passed away at the home, 638 West Eight steet, which he and his family have occupied for the last twenty-five years.

Mr. Bass was a native of Baltimore. Before the war he was engaged in a flourishing tobacco business in New York and Baltimore and owned a tobacco plantation in the south. The plantation was seized during the war.

He then assisted in the forming of the Blackwell's "Bull Durham" Tobacco Company, of Virginia, and was the originator of that famous brand. About twenty-five years ago he moved to this city and continued in the tobacco business in New York. Five years ago he retired from business. Three years later his wife died. He has not been in good health for some time.

He leaves two sons, Walter A. Jr. and William F., both of whom do business in New York. He also leaves four daughters, two of whom are now teaching in the Plainfield public schools.

He was about seventy years of age.

A Wide Awake Business.

There is little reason for the existence of "Plainfield newly dressed humanity"—in New Jersey, at least—while such establishments as that of Marshall & Ball live and flourish.

For over a quarter century this House has enjoyed a most enviable reputation as makers and purveyors of the right kind of clothing, and it is no exaggeration to say that they've earned every atom of such reputation.

They have solved the problem of progressive store-keeping by establishing an equitable system of selling clothing for every part of one's person, so to speak, and one day has long since past when a person looks to one source for a suit, to another for a hat, to still another for shoes, and so on ad infinitum. The busy 19th century man prefers and expects to place all his patronage provided it be of the same general character, with one and the same house, especially if he relies upon their judgment in matter of style and their justice in matter of price. Marshall & Ball are forcefully illustrated by Marshall & Ball. Not content with carrying in faultless array the best kind of apparel in the shape of suits, overcoats and trouserings, these people have from time to time added exceptionally complete departments to their regular business, until now they have a perfectly orginized men and boys outfitting store, all under one roof; thus by centralizing the various stocks, the expense of extra rentals charged by those lines' stores is saved to Marshall & Ball's customers.

These various branch lines comprise a splendid Shoe Department carrying latest ideas and makes in shoes; a Furnishing Department having best linen, neckwear, underwear and other fixings necessary to the well dressed man; a Hat Department showing absolutely latest blocks of the world's hat fashion makers.

Last, but not least, is Marshall & Ball's rarely equalled Custom Department—the State affords no better tailors than those employed to execute the vast number of orders which are constantly being handled by this house. Very latest conceits in fabric, cut and finish are embodied in their every production.

In brief, this store is the ideal centre of attraction for the lover of the proper thing in wearables—at right prices.

THE WAYWARDNESS OF A NEGATIVE MAN.

By Mr. ALEXANDER

[COPYRIGHT, 1894.]

"All I can say is, it's a deuce of a bore!" exclaimed Philip Blount, a smart, good-looking lawyer, who was on very good terms with himself, whose age might be six or seven and twenty, to his particular chum, Tom Marling, a stout, rubicund, horsey stock broker, perhaps a few years older.

"Well, it is rather hard lines," returned Marling, sympathetically.

"If they had given me timely notice, I might have managed to get down to the Grange, but such an abrupt invite looks as if Mrs. Dashwood did not want me down there."

This dialogue was going on in the private office of Mr. Marling, where the two men were discussing a light luncheon of oysters and stout, having a little time to spare at the general refreshment hour.

Blount was yet only a clerk in the old established firm of Ardell & Son; but that firm was now reduced to the surviving son, who was Blount's maternal uncle, and a childless widower.

Marling was a very well off bachelor, much given to the good things of this life and Blount's special friend.

"Down there" indicated a picturesque old place called Varley Grange, tenanted by a charming widow, whose charms were enhanced by the possession of an income which enabled her to rent such a residence. Here she gave delightful "Friday to Monday" parties, invitations to which people fished for eagerly.

"MY DEAR NEPHEW, I AM DELIGHTED TO SEE YOU."

Gwendoline Dashwood was the daughter of Mr. Ardell's deceased wife's sister, his ward, and the mistress of his house. Blount rather imagined his uncle wished to make a match between his nephew and niece, and was quite sure of his own wishes on the subject; for Gwen Dashwood was a bright, attractive brunette, with big brown eyes that could say a great deal—and he paid assidious court to the young lady.

"Were you asked?" continued Blount.

"Lord, no! I'm not at all up to the mark of Mrs. Cholmondely Morton's parties, not elegant enough by long chalks."

"Better ask you than that beast Everard. I hate the fellow."

"Blount, you're a fool!"

"No more than my neighbors."

"Rather less, in a general way; but you are a fool about that cousin of yours."

"She isn't a cousin; she is no relation at all."

"Well, whether she is or not, you'll lose your game if you lose your balance about her. From what I have seen, I am inclined to think you stand very well with her, and Everard is much too grim and sour and black browed to be a dangerous rival. Besides, that Indian forester's appointment of his is no great thing. And then Miss Dashwood is not the girl to think of a man who is obliged to live in the wilds."

"I'm not so sure, Marling. Everard has an infernal cool air of command and superiority that imposes on women, and vice a dash of romance in her. I fancy she thinks or suspects that I am what she would call 'low-minded' because I have the sense to have an eye to the main chance; but I flatter myself I've got the making way with her lately. There's nothing goes down with that sort of girl like an air of being hopelessly gone upon her, and, in fact, I am—rather! It's such uncommon luck to have a fancy for the right young woman."

"Is she the right one?"

"She is. You see my uncle is deuced fond of her, and pretty sure to leave her the bigger half of his worldly goods, though he likes me, but if we marry, we'll have the whole."

"Admirable reasoning! But if you are making way, you may snap your fingers at Everard."

"I don't know. I put away early last week and found him at tea with Gwen, tete-a-tete—and after 'sitting out' with him for an hour in the conservatory at Lady Dalrymple's ball, when I went to claim my waltz, he said, as she took my arm: 'You must be sure to write at once, remember,' in a dictatorial tone, as if she were his wife, by Jove!"

Marling laughed. "Well, I know he isn't one of the Grange party."

"How?" ejaculated Blount.

Instead of replying, Marling rummaged among some papers which lay in a square wicker receptacle on his knee-hole table, and tossed over a note to his guest. It was dated the previous Saturday from the "East India Club," and ran thus:

"DEAR MARLING: I am not going down to the Grange, nevertheless, I cannot keep my appointment on Monday. I have other and better fish to fry, and am obliged to run over to the continent on Monday night. Shall write when I know time of my return. Yours truly, "HUGH EVERARD."

"Ah, then he could not have gone to Mrs. Morton's," said Blount, with a sigh of relief. "I can't think how Gwen puts up with his overbearing swagger."

"Come now, Blount, he doesn't swagger."

"I suppose Gwen will be home to dinner at seven. I think I'll go and dine with my uncle in case he feels lonely. He was not at the office to-day, and I'm not supposed to know that his darling will return to cheer him."

"Prudent young chap, you are! Go on and prosper, Blount, my boy."

The aspiring young lawyer carried out his intention and presented himself to his uncle a few minutes before seven in accurate evening dress, a dainty flower in his buttonhole and a smile upon his lips. Altogether a handsome, gentleman-like looking young fellow, and steady, decidedly steady, thought Mr. Ardell, who was spelling over an evening paper somewhat disconsolately in his big and bounteously ornamented drawing-room.

Mr. Ardell was a well-preserved man of perhaps sixty-five—very precise and a little exacting, with severe notions as regarded conduct, principle, integrity and such like old-fashioned ways of life.

"Ah, Philip! This is an unexpected pleasure. Glad to see you."

"Thank you, sir. Thought you might like my company, as probably Gwen may not return—and—"

"Or possibly that you might find her here? Eh, Philip? Very natural, my dear boy. Very natural. Still your impulse is somewhat prophetic."

Mr. Ardell stretched out his hand for a yellow envelope which lay on a small table beside him. "I fully expected Gwendoline to luncheon, and not feeling quite the thing, a little liverish in fact, I had ordered James to meet the 12:30 train from R——, to look after her luggage and find her a cab, when, about 11:45, I received this," handing a telegram to Blount, who read: "Shall be home to-night. G. D."

"That means by the last train, I suppose," said Blount.

"No doubt. Very thoughtful of her, knowing she was expected and that I should be glad to meet every train till she arrived. She sends this to keep my mind at rest."

"When is the last train due?"

"About 10:20," returned Mr. Ardell. "Then I shall go and meet her and bring her back. I need not leave you till 9:50. A hansom will rattle across the park to the Great Western in twenty minutes."

"Yes, do, Philip. Gwendoline will be glad to see you. There is a Bradshaw in the dining-room. We'll make a note of the time."

"Dinner is on the table," said James, the solemn man out of livery, who ruled the lower regions.

Philip Blount followed Mr. Ardell down stairs contentedly enough, though, being somewhat given to suspicion and self-tormenting, he debated that telegram in his own mind. Why did she not say "shall return by such or such a train?" Why did she leave things in such a vague condition? James might have been dancing attendance at Paddington from 6:30 on, leaving his functions to be indifferently performed by the housemaid and reducing Mr. Ardell to the inconvenience of a female waiter.

Dinner was, as usual in Lonsdale Gardens, remarkably good—a matter of no small importance in Blount's eyes—and Mr. Ardell was exceedingly conversational in a careful and didactic manner throughout it.

When dessert was put on the table and James departed a short pause ensued; then Mr. Ardell said: "I think you will find a fresh Bradshaw on the writing table in the window. Let us make sure of the train before you start."

Philip rose and went to the table whence he returned with Bradshaw and another book, handsomely bound in deep red with gold letters and decorations.

"You are right," he said, "the R—— train is due at 10:20." He handed Bradshaw to his uncle and continued: "I see you have Everard's book here. 'Life in the Wild Woods.' I don't fancy him in print—doesn't give me the idea of a writing man."

"I have not read the work," returned his uncle, with a tinge of disdain in his tone. "That copy was presented to Gwendoline. I was rather annoyed at her accepting it, though I do not very well see how she could have refused it. But Mr. Everard is not a man I like. He is pragmatical and dictatorial, in fact, inclined to take liberties, or I should say, he presumes on some connection with old friends of Gwendoline's to come here much oftener than I like, and assume a familiar tone with my niece of which I totally disapprove."

"Yes, my dear uncle, I have noticed it also, and it makes me indignant. However, he has gone to the continent and—"

"Why, yes, I know. He wrote to Gwendoline explaining why he could not go to this party and mentioned that he was going abroad, a very unnecessary proceeding, as I told my niece."

"And what did she say?"

"Well, she laughed and said that for all I knew, it might be very necessary."

"A curious answer," said Blount uneasily. "What do you make of it?"

"What I? Oh, nothing. It is really unimportant, only I fancy that Mr. Everard aspires to a matrimonial alliance with us, rather an audacious project on his part."

"I should think it was!" cried Blount. "He tries to seem on confidential terms with Gwen, but—"

"She has too much sense to heed him. In fact, she would not offend me by entertaining any proposal from Mr. Everard," interrupted Ardell. "I fancy you are aware, my dear Philip, that my great wish is to see my nephew and niece united, for the most only because I am attached to you, but both and each would then be benefited equally by what I may be enabled to bequeath."

"And I desire nothing so ardently," cried Philip, "as to call her my wife. In fact, I have loved her ever since she came from school to reside here."

"I have suspected it, Philip. I have suspected it," returned his uncle, playing with the double eyeglass which hung from his neck. "But, my dear boy, I am not so sure of her."

"I am not without hope, if only no one comes between us." There was a long pause, each being occupied with his own hopes and fears for the future. Suddenly Blount exclaimed: "Could one drive from Paddington to Charing Cross in half an hour, with a minute or two to spare?"

"Yes, if the streets were not crowded, and the horse a good one. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, ah, I only wanted your opinion. That is, my dear uncle, I have an awful dread of that fellow Everard, and it's curious, but this morning I saw a note over her. I heard him say—and he repeated the story of the ball which he had told Marling in the morning.

At first Mr. Ardell was indignant and incredulous, but as Blount persisted and insisted on the weakness, gullibility and fancifulness of women, especially young ones, the elder man grew restless, irritable and blustering.

"Time will show, sir!" cried Blount at last, looking at the heavy classical bronze clock over the fireplace. "and I haven't left myself too much to get to the station by 10:20. God grant I may bring back Gwendoline safe and sound to you. I may exaggerate things, but I hardly hope to find her!"

"Nonsense, Philip. I believe you are out of your mind; but you have made me very uncomfortable," returned Mr. Ardell, ringing the bell. "Come back as fast as you can. Whistle a cab for Mr. Blount," he continued, as James appeared in answer to the bell.

"You must not agitate yourself too much, my dear uncle," said Blount, rising and feeling some compunction at having worked up his host to such a pitch of uneasiness, and he left the room.

A hansom already awaited him, and he was soon rattling towards Paddington.

By this time he had reached a condition of mind which induced him to seek comfort by recapitulating his uncle's arguments against himself.

Suppose his horrible suspicions proved true. Mr. Ardell would certainly cut off Gwen with a shilling—or, perhaps a farthing—possibly all his uncle's fortune would go to Everard. "But I want Gwen, too," he thought. "I have always been fond of her. There's such go and style about her, and just lately she has been so sweet and friendly. Such bright, mischievous brown eyes she has. There's no girl in our set fit to tie her shoes. No, all the money wouldn't be worth much, at least not now, if Gwen slipped through my fingers. Hullo! the arrival platforms. Cabby, mind what you are about. I want to meet the 10:20 from R——, and it's 10:17 now."

In a few seconds he had alighted and was pacing the platform.

The rapid bustle of the early evening trains were over. The great station looked gloomy and deserted—very few porters were about and the 10:20 was evidently a thing of no importance.

Blount paced slowly up and down revolving the possibilities of his position.

Gwen was certainly what is called a girl of spirit, not to say slightly headstrong, and there was no saying what a young woman of that description might, could or would do. What motive had she in sending that mysterious telegram, if it were not to mask her movements? "Here, porter; isn't the 10:20 from R—— behind time?"

"Well, it often is—but it's signaled now, sir."

A few more uneasy, miserable minutes and the panting engine was alongside the platform, while the porters were opening and banging the doors. The train was fairly full of better class Arrys and Arriets who had been boating, plump mothers with numerous olive branches returning from excursions along the river, lover-like couples of a higher grade, eager to jump into hansoms as if fearful of being behind time; men in flannels, girls in sunsilks and shady hats, for it had been a glorious summer's day. But no sign of the tall distinguished figure he sought for so feverishly. His keen eyes searched each carriage and scanned each group. Soon they were dispersed like grains of pepper thrown on water, while he was alone and despairing. Certainly Gwen Dashwood was not coming home to-night. He left the station and drove back to Lonsdale Gardens as fast as he could.

"No sign of her!" he exclaimed, rushing into the dining-room, where Mr. Ardell, thoroughly infected by his nephew's fears, was pacing to and fro.

"HOW DARE YOU ACCUSE ME OF SUCH BASENESS."

"Not come!" cried the old man aghast. "Why, what—what can be the meaning of this—this extraordinary disappearance! Something unexpected has occurred. She has missed her train. She has been over-persuaded to stay the night—many things might have happened, but your—your unwarrantable surmise is—is—too preposterous. If Gwen were guilty of deceiving me, I'd—I'd—renounce her forever."

"You must not be too hard. If we can only prevent scandal. I should still be ready to carry out your wishes. I—"

"What is to be done next, Philip?" resumed his uncle as if he had not heard him.

"I'm sure I hardly know, sir. Shall I call at Everard's club to-morrow and ascertain if possible when he returns? But of course he will leave little or no trace of his movements."

"I am quite certain you do Gwen the greatest injustice, but, my dear boy, come to me to-morrow morning early—as early as you can. There's not much doing to-morrow, that case is not on till—till Wednesday, and young Pounceby can manage very well, at least for a few hours, and we must know something certain by the afternoon. No use in expecting her to-night, Philip. Take some brandy and soda before you go. I want some myself."

Both felt a little more hopeful after partaking of this refreshment, when they parted with some solemnity, and Blount made his way to his own place, where he passed a wretched night, harassed by frightful dreams, in which he found himself minus both the "beau" and the "estate," of which he hoped to possess himself.

After a hasty visit to the office, for he never neglected business, Blount hurried to Lonsdale Gardens.

"What, Philip, have you telegraphed?" was Mr. Ardell's salutation.

"No, sir, I thought you would, and two wires would seem ridiculous and suspicious."

"What matter, so long as we get information?" cried his uncle testily.

"I will go and telegraph myself," said Blount, anxious to be up and doing, and bent his steps to a central office at some distance, fancying it would be more rapidly dispatched than from the little local post office in a baker's shop. Returning, a runaway horse and a smashed vehicle impeded his progress, and on his arrival James served him with smiles. "Miss Dashwood is upstairs, sir—arrived just after you went out!"

Blount rushed upstairs, two steps at a time, flung open the door and beheld his uncle standing on the hearth-rug, playing nervously with his "pince-nez," while, still in her hat—a very becoming one—an open telegram in her hand, Gwen was walking up and down in fact to put too fine a point upon it) a towering rage.

"To make all this fuss about nothing!" she was saying. "To insult me with such suspicions, and you, uncle, to believe them! Ah, Philip, I wonder you dare to look me in the face! I know it is all your doing. You have upset Uncle Ardell frightfully, he is quite ill. How dare you accuse me of such baseness! You, uncle has told me everything, and I see that you are a low-minded, disagreeable creature, and I was beginning to think better of you. The whole mystery has arisen from a mistake, either of mine or the telegraph clerk's at R——. The telegram I thought I sent—that I intended to send—was: 'Shall not be home to-night.' Either he or I omitted the negative!"

"My dear Gwen," began Blount, imploringly.

"Don't 'dear' me!" she interrupted. "As to Mr. Everard, he had a quarrel with his fiancee, an old schoolfellow of mine. I have helped to reconcile them, and she has asked him to meet her and her mother in Paris."

"But, Gwen, if you knew my feelings!"

"If you had kept them to yourself, and not tried to make mischief with my uncle, and lower me in his opinion, I might forgive you it is, I shall have no more to do with you, Philip."

And she kept her word.

[THE END.]

One Use for Wealth.

Lord Aberdeen is reported as telling the following good humored tale: He left London at midnight in a sleeping car for the north. In the morning when he was awakened he saw a stranger opposite him.

"Excuse me," said the stranger; "may I ask if you are rich?"

Somewhat surprised, his lordship replied that he was tolerably well to do.

"May I ask," continued the stranger, "how rich you are?"

"Well, it will do you any good to know," was the reply, "I suppose I have several hundred thousand pounds."

"Well," went on the stranger, "if I were as rich as you, and annoyed as loudly as you, I should take a whole car so as not to interrupt the sleep of others."—Youth's Companion.

"Une' Toby," a man for whom Bartlett's creek has more attractions than the hot and grassy cotton field, not long ago took a "day off" in pursuit of his favorite amusement. He baited his hook, and long and patiently sat upon the bank of the stream, vainly waiting for a bite. At last, under the combined influence of the warmth of the day and the sluggish movement of the stream, Une' Toby fell asleep. Eternal vigilance is the price of trout, and while our weary angler slept an enormous fish took the bait and pulled him in the creek. Of course this awakened the old man, and he was overheard to inquire, as he floundered about in the water: "For de Lord's sake, Toby, am dis 'nigger in de fish, or am dis fish a-nigger in'?"—Youth's Companion

JUSTICE IN ALABAMA.

Why a Prisoner Was Declared Not Guilty.

A Jacksonville broker, while traveling in the Alabama mountains, was invited by a friend, a local judge, to attend the trial of a "cracker" for abusing a darky, and, the prisoner having no money to hire a lawyer, the judge appointed the broker to defend him, assuring that if the broker was not a lawyer, "he was an idiot because he wasn't one." Judgment amply supported by his conduct of the case, the San Francisco Argonaut says. The broker cross-examined the witness before sending in now and then a discomfiting trajectory. When he came to make a speech, he said: "Gentlemen of the jury, I have taken great pains to show you that my client was a respectable citizen. Ten witnesses have sworn on oath, mind you—that he stands high in his community." The defendant was six feet three inches tall and the jury smiled. "Not so high in his community, and that is sufficient. Now, for the law. We find in the thirteenth verse of the sixteenth chapter of 'Chitty on Pleadings'—Chitty, gentlemen, was one of the bravest generals in the confederate army—this well-established principle of law." Here the broker adjusts his glasses, holds the book far off, elevates his chin and reads: "No respectable white man can be guilty of crime.' That, gentlemen, is enough. I leave the case in your hands."

Each juror changed his quid, looked at his neighbor, nodded and, without leaving their seats, they rendered a loud and emphatic verdict of "Not guilty." and there were three cheers for the defendant and his lawyer.

THEY WERE KIN.

But the Traveler Did Not Care to Inquire Too Closely.

"The best joke I ever heard was on me," said J. D. Buford to a Washington Star reporter.

"I was in Wise county, Va., in the heart of the mountains, in the southwestern part of the old dominion. I'm a Virginian, and as common with all loyal Virginians, claim kinship to every one of my name in the state. The landlord saw my name on the register.

"'So yo' name's Buford? he said.

"'Yes.'

"'Uster be sum Bufords kine.'

"'Well, they must have been relations. My family are all Virginians.'

"'Yaas. Yo' do favor 'em. Reckon yo' all air kin. Yo' look jess like Dave.'

"'My father's name was Dave.'

"'That war three. Bob, John an' Dave.'

"'I have uncles by those names. They are family names.'

"'Yo' sho' air kin. I thought as mini I looked at yo'.'

"'You say the Bufords moved away?'

"'Not zackly.'

"'I thought you said they used to live here?'

"'That's what I sed. Yo' see, John an' Dave was Bob's sons. Th' ole man was gwine ter marry agin, so th' boys wouldn' git th' little propity th' ole man had, an' they killed 'im, so we hung John an' Dave.'

"I did not trace the relationship of the family resemblance any farther."

SHE CHANGED IT.

But the New Subject Was as Objectionable to Him as the Old One.

He threw his newspaper on the floor and with both hands clasped on his head while his clinched teeth refused to give exit to the remarks which were struggling to come out, says the Detroit Free Press.

"What's the matter, Orlando?" his wife exclaimed, although with less agitation than she situation seemed to warrant, for she was used to his ways.

"Every time I am reminded of it," he muttered, in a voice which shook, "I am filled with indignation."

"Every time you think of what, Orlando?"

"Of the way Europe gets our money. Our heiresses marry noblemen, European actors and singers come over here and ship money home in heaps. They take it in so fast they're too busy to count it. The outflow of wealth from this country is something awful."

"Well, Orlando, I suppose it's pretty bad. But did you know that you haven't shut the kitchen faucet in the kitchen attended to yet?"

"That is not the topic under consideration," he exclaimed, savagely.

"Not exactly. But you know, if you aren't going to have nearly as much trouble with the outflow of money if you will with the outflow from the faucet if they find out about it and make you pay a fine for wasting water."

A Remarkable Nevada Wood.

One of the most remarkable products of Nevada is a species of wood known as mountain mahogany, which, when dried is as hard as boxwood, very fine grained in color, and of very high specific gravity. It has been used for bearings for shaftings, and, in some instances for slides and dies in quartz batteries. It burns with a blaze as long-lasting as ordinary wood, but after going through what is called a charcoal combustion it is found almost unchanged in form, being converted into a charcoal that lasts about twice as long as ordinary wood, giving out immense heat, greater than coal, all the time.

A Singing Fish.

A reader of the St. Louis Republic residing at Bentonville, Ark., writes as follows: "I read your 'note' on 'singing fishes' in 'Notes for the Curious' on September 12 and wish to say that during the coast of Florida and Georgia I have often heard the musical notes of which the old fishermen call the 'singing shad.' They differ from the common shad in being smaller and also in the formation of their mouths. Their singing is pleasant at first, but soon grows monotonous, owing to the fact that it is a constant repetition of the same sounds."

MAY HAVE SAT LLITES.

Chicago Astronomer Thinks the Earth Has at Least One of Them.

Louis Gathmann, one of Chicago's enthusiastic amateur astronomers, thinks he has discovered a satellite of the earth. It has generally been taken for granted that it has none, but Mr. Gathmann now believes this view to be erroneous.

"Has our earth a number of satellites revolving around its orbit similar to those of Saturn or Jupiter?" he asked, and then he proceeded to answer his own question thus: "Even Mars has two known satellites, while our earth, as far as is known in fact, has none. Like our moon, is by no means a satellite, but a planet. Luna does not revolve round our earth, as all other known satellites revolve around their respective planets in our solar system. Saturn has a great number of planets revolving around its orbit. The so-called rings consist also of thousands of satellites, only our present telescopes are not powerful enough to separate them. So likely our own earth is also surrounded by a great number of unknown satellites. At least one of them I think I have discovered. Its path is from west to east. When I got it under my telescope I was making observations of the sun's spots. I uncovered it. It took about five seconds to pass across the sun's disk from the time I first saw it, when it was at the spot indicated by the arrows. Its distance, of course, cannot be determined unless other observers had an opportunity to see it or had it under their cameras. However, at the same speed, approximately, it would move round our earth in 96 minutes, and if its distance from us be 800 miles it would then have a speed of about five miles per second.

"Our earth may have a great number of such small satellites revolving round its orbit, yet unknown, and they might never be discovered for this reason: In the daytime they are not visible because of too much light from the sun. At night, after the sun has set, they are in the shadow of our earth again, and not having light of their own they would be in eclipse. If their mean distance from our earth was 500 miles to be visible by a telescope of 180 magnifying power, such as I used, their diameter must be at least 35 feet. A smaller they would not be visible. Comparing their diameter by the transit of Mercury it would hardly be one-tenth. I hope other observations may have been made by other astronomers, so that we may be able to determine its distance."

HON. JOSIAH GROUT.

The Gentleman Who Has Been Elected Governor of Vermont.

Josiah Grout, the newly-elected governor of the Green Mountain state, was born on a Vermont farm May 28, 1842, and spent his early years in the laborious pursuits incident to the life of a farmer's son. He attended district school in the winter and later went to an academy, where he was pursuing his studies when the war of the rebellion broke out. He went to the front at once, enlisting as a private in Company I of the First volunteer cavalry. He was elected second lieutenant when the company was permanently organized, April 1, 1863, he was made a captain and the same day was seriously wounded in action. He still carries the bullet he received in that battle. In 1864 he raised a company for the frontier cavalry regiment, organized to repel the St. Albans's raid, and was appointed a major of the regiment. At the close of the war Maj. Grout returned home and resumed the study of law in the office of his brother, Geo. Grout. He was admitted to the bar in 1865, and practiced law in partnership with his brother in Barton, Vt., all the same time assisting in editing the Barton Standard. In 1878 he moved to Chicago, where he practiced his profession for three years. He then moved to Moline, Ill., and was elected supervisor of Rock Island county. He declined a proffered nomination to run for congressman, and in 1890 returned to Vermont, settling with his family in the Hinman homestead, where his wife was born, in Derby. After leaving Chicago Mr. Grout abandoned the practice of law and turned his energies to farming. He owns one of the largest farms in Vermont. He was elected to the legislature in 1872 and 1874, and the latter time was chosen speaker. After his return from the west he was again sent to the legislature in 1884, 1886 and 1888, serving as speaker the last two terms. He was a state senator in 1892 and has been vice president and president of the Republican league of Vermont.

THE WAYS OF JUSTICE.

An Innocent Man Suffered for Seeing a Another Commit a Crime.

When one reads of the newspapers a statement that a person who happened to witness the commission of a crime has been held to insure his appearance at the trial one wonders at the ways of justice, says the New York Mail and Express. In these days the only way to escape being held as a witness, if one happens to be in the neighborhood when a crime is committed, is to flee. It is almost as bad, taking into consideration the evil of the cross-examination at the trial, for a man to be caught and tried for committing a crime as to be caught as a witness to the commission.

In Boston about three years ago a man was arrested for the crime of manslaughter. There was no doubt about the fellow's guilt, but there was only one witness. This witness happened to be a poor man, without friends, and he was put in jail in default of bonds for his appearance at the trial. He occupied a cell near the one in which the fellow who committed the crime was detained. The idea of being in jail, with the knowledge that his wife and children were without the necessaries of life on account of his detention, so weighed upon his mind that before the date of the trial he had become hopelessly insane and had to be committed to an asylum, where he is now. That disposed of the only witness in the case and the man who was to be tried for the commission of the crime had to be discharged for lack of evidence. The children of the unfortunate witness were afterward placed in the care of a charitable society.

THE WELL-MANNERED BOY.

He Is Simply Charming, But Altogether Too Scarce.

Is there anything more charming in this world than a nice, well-mannered boy? I hate to be hypercritical, but I must add, as I am a strictly veracious woman, that they are, alas! as rare as they are charming., says the Philadelphia Record.

Such a boy, the well-mannered genius—thank heaven!—I met not long ago, and my instant thought was what a fine mother his must be. I know her by reputation, a celebrated actress, who has carefully shielded her private life from the public, and my estimation of that woman immediately arose 50 degrees. None but a woman of culture, refinement and true nobility of character could rear a son whose every lightest word showed respect for women, innate good breeding, and, best of all, in that most affected skepticism among the jeunesse doree, an honest belief in the existence of good among men and women in general.

And I couldn't help thinking, sorrowfully, as I chatted with this delightful boy, how few mothers really understand their metier. It's the most responsible work in the world, that of motherhood, and is entered into with the least training and preparation. Women are inordinately proud, vain, their masculine critics say, and I wonder whether they realize how they are reflected in their children? If they did, would they not make a greater effort to have reflected only their good points, their gentleness, breeding, and, above all, their faith in human nature?

THE LIVELY CHILDREN.

Showing Some of the Difficulties Attending Literary Work at Home.

"When you come in to-night," said the father to his twelve sprightly children, who were accustomed, when they came in, from their evening walk, to walk straight into the library where he was at work, and sit down and talk awhile, "I wish you would just say you d'ye do an' then go out. I have a lot of work to do to-night, and I don't want to be disturbed."

An hour later the literary man heard a latch key placed carefully in the front door and the person placing it there didn't wish to be heard. Then he heard smothered laughter in the hall; it was from the children; they were up to something, sure. A moment later they came marching through the hall, one behind the other, with military step, back toward the library. They turned in, marched like a file of soldiers alongside the library table on the side opposite the literary man, halted, fronted, raised their hands in salute, and said in unison:

"How d'ye do?"

Then says the New York Sun, they faced to the left and marched out again, one behind the other, keeping step as before, and keeping as sober as they could until they came to the parlor; there they exploded.

IRRIGATION IN THE WEST.

Millions Invested in Ditch Enterprises Along the Rocky Mountains.

The magnitude of irrigation enterprises in the west has been attracting attention throughout the country for some time.

The quantity of capital attracted to the states along the line of the Overland road for the purpose of investment or irrigation ventures is something enormous—sufficient in the aggregate to almost construct a great railroad system. In some sections the magnitude of the work in hand is something enormous, contemplating the diversion of great streams, volumes of water equal to that of the Missouri river, into immense storage reservoirs stretching over miles of ground to be gradually distributed over acres of farms at the proper time. In Nebraska there are 17 great companies on the Union Pacific lines. In Wyoming, 27; in Utah, 20, in Idaho, 30; in Colorado, 17; in Kansas, 10; in Oregon, 8. This does not include small affairs, of which there are innumerable numbers, but great concerns of from $500,000 to $3,000,000 capital, employing hundreds, and supplying thousands of acres, sometimes controlling hundreds of miles of canals, many of which assume the proportions of rivers when bank full.

CARL DUNDER TALKS.

HE TELLS THE SERGEANT ABOUT A LUMP OF GOLD.

Then He Receives Some Very Excellent Advice From His Friend, the Fat Policeman, and Goes Home Full of Sorrow.

Not All Is Gold That Glitters.

The fat police sergeant stood in the door of the station house watching a goat which was hungrily devouring an old Harrison hat which some one had kicked into the street, when Mr. Dunder came around the corner and cheerily called out:

"Hello, sergeant! I shust happened to come arondt dis vhay, und I guess I shtop a minute to see if you vhas all right."

"I thought you had gone back to Germany," said the sergeant as he continued to watch the goat.

"Back to Shermany! I doan' see vhy I should go back to Shermany. Nottings vhas two times alike in dis country, but I get used to dot. It vhas a nice day, sergeant."

"Y-e-s. Have you had a guardian appointed yet?"

"Vhy should I haf some guardians?" replied Mr. Dunder with considerable spirit. "If you belief I doan' know how to take care of myself you vhas mistooken. A good vhile ago, vhen I vhas greenhorns, somebody can shwindle me, but I like to see 'em try it on now. If you vhas my friendt you doan' shpeak like dot to me."

"Then nothing has happened?" queried the sergeant as the goat worried down his third piece of hat.

"Nottings has happened. Dot is, nobody has tried some gumgames on me. If he did, he vhas a dead man in two minutes. Shust one man come along."

"Oh, a man came along, did he?"

"I said a man came along. Vhas dot something to make you shmile? Sergeant, I doan' like dot vhay you shpeak to me. Vhas I a boy? Doan' I know some beans?"

"Mr. Dunder," said the sergeant as the goat got away with the last remnant of hat and looked hopefully around for an old boot, "we will go inside. Now, then, what have you got to say to me?"

"BUT WHY YOU DO DOT?"

"Nottings."

"Yes, you have. A man came along. What did he want?"

"He doan' vhant nottings. He vhas a poor, unfortunate man, but he doan' beg of me."

"I see. You are a great friend of the poor, Mr. Dunder. He called on you and—what?"

"Vhell, he came in my place und said vhas I Carl Dunder. I vhas. Dot vhas all right. He shust like to gase on me because he reads of me in der papers. I can't help it if he like to gase on me, can I? He look so pale und sick dot I pity him."

"Of course. Go on."

"I ask him if he doan' half some sooksness, and he cried like a shild. By and by he says dot his house in Buffalo gets on fire vhen he vhas away und his wife und shildren burn oop. His wife vhas a blond, und his children vhas angels, und he feels so bad dot he doan' care to live any no more."

"Poor man!" sighed the sergeant. "How much money did you give him?"

"I doan' gif him two cents. Dot vhas too bad, but I can' gif him no money. He knows dot, und so he doan' ask me. Vhen dot house burns oop, it burns all der shewelry mit it. Dot shewelry melts altogether in one lump, you know, und he hants arondt und finds dot lump."

"Exactly, Mr. Dunder. He had the lump with him?"

"Yes."

"And he wants to raise money on it?"

"Vhell, he likes to raise a few dollars to buy toombstones, but he vhas no deadbeat. If I doan' take dot lump of gold, he doan' take no money."

"Just so. You have the lump with you, I suppose?"

"Vhell, I shust put it in my pocket, you know. Here she vhas. Dere vhas more ash five hoonered dollar in dot lump, mit diamonds inside. She weighs shust half a pound."

"I see," said the sergeant as he received and inspected the lump. "He didn't want over $25, did he?"

"Vhell, he likes to get $30. Dot makes a payment on five toombstones. He vhill come arondt in two weeks und pay me back. If he don' do it, den I shall sell her for five hoonered dollar. Here, vhas you do mit dat lump?"

"I was just tossing it out into the alley," replied the sergeant as he gave it a heave through the open window.

"But vhy yo' do dot? Let me pick him oop quick!"

"Mr. Dunder," said the sergeant as he laid a detaining hand on him, "I can buy you all the brass you want at $1 a pound. I feel sorry for you."

"How vhas I sorry for you? Do you belief dot man vhas a shwindler?"

"Of course I do. You have plenty of water at the house, haven't you?"

"Vhas has dot wasser got to do mit him? How you know dot man vhas some shwindler?"

"When you go home, Mr. Dunder, draw a tub of water, put 10 pounds of cornmeal into it, and then soak your head for 24 hours. If you can't soak it off your neck, get somebody to knock it off with a club."

"Sergeant, vhas—vhas I tooken in again?" gasped Mr. Dunder as he got so weak in the knees that he had to sit down.

"Yes, you have been played again. That fellow knew you to be the biggest sucker in the state. Which idiot asylum had you rather go to?"

"So—so I vhas beat?"

The sergeant lifted him to his feet and led him to the door and dropped him off the step. Then he pointed down the street and said:

"If you think you can't find your way home, I'll send a small boy with you or write your address on a card."

"Don—don she vhas brass?" murmured Mr. Dunder.

"Yes, she vhas brass!" replied the sergeant. "Go home, Mr. Dunder, and be sure and have the water hot and put in plenty of bran."

And Mr. Dunder crept away, with his foot dragging and his back humped, and he turned the corner and vanished from sight without once looking back.

"That kid of mine," said one, "never seems to holler except when I'm at home."

"Then," said the other, "I suppose he doesn't commence until the early morning hours. Now, our baby yells at any and all times. I wish to thunder there was some way of stopping him."

Then the third young husband chipped in the best he could. He stuttered.

"A-a-at our ho-house," he laboriously remarked, "we ha-have just gug-gug-got a f-freak p-pair of"—

"What! Twins?" yelled both the other young husbands.

SEABORN A. WRIGHT.

The Young Populist Who Wants to Be Governor of Georgia.

Seaborn A. Wright, recently nominated by the populists of Georgia as their candidate for governor, enjoys the distinction of being the first nominee of the people's party of that state who has ever had any reasonable chances of success. In previous campaigns in Georgia the gubernatorial candidate of the people's party has not come nearer than within 25,000 votes of his democratic opponent. This year, however, because of a state alliance of the populists and democrats, the third partyites in Georgia have some chance of electing their candidate.

For a populist nominee, says Leslie's Weekly, Mr. Wright is a very unique figure, being neither a farmer nor a poor man, nor uneducated. His father, Judge Augustus R. Wright, was a prominent figure in the Georgia life of his day, and the family has always been one of means, with connections rather aristocratic than plebeian. Seaborn Wright is a college graduate, with the bearing of a tragedian. He has a clean-cut face, long, wavy black hair, and the bearing of a typical southern orator. His greatest force is his eloquence, which is of the fervid, ringing type brought into national prominence recently by Candidate William J. Bryan.

Mr. Wright lives in a handsome home in the north Georgia city of Rome, and enjoys a fortune of a quarter of a million dollars. His wife was a Miss Moore, of Atlanta, and they have a family of four bright and interesting boys. Seaborn Wright has always been a dissenter in political affairs, and his only service in office was when he was elected to the state legislature several years ago as an independent democrat. His fad is prohibition, and his campaign will be waged chiefly on that issue; an issue which is expected to focalize the strength of the rural districts, which really preponderate in Georgia politics. His friends hope that by combining the populist and prohibition votes, he will be able to defeat his democratic opponent, Gov. William Y. Atkinson, who is a candidate for reelection. The populist nominee is only 38 years old. His younger brother, Moses Wright, who was elected to the last legislature as a democrat, will oppose him in the coming campaign.

LOOKS FOR POCKETS.

An Invention That Attacks a Sacred Right of Married Women.

Another one of woman's rights has been attacked—the right of search, the same privilege for which England contended in the war of 1812, and as England lost then so femininity seems about to lose to-day. A Chicago firm of wholesale clothers has invented a locked pocket, to be put in trousers, coats and vests. The fad has captured male wearers of clothes and bids fair to become popular. It is an attachment by which pockets can be locked, and any attempt to go through them will be foredoomed to failure.

That the effort to introduce these pockets is likely to be opposed by women is certain. The very means which the manufacturers use to advertise them insures this. A circular issued by the firm reads:

"You have been there. You have waked up in the morning and found your spare cash gone and not known how it has vanished. Your wife denies that she has been through your pockets, and you cannot prove that she has done so. You can prevent such occurrences in future by placing our 'patent protection pockets' in your clothes."

Aside from this claim, others are made for locked pockets. The manufacturers say that they will prevent pocket picking, and that the universal use will force every criminal who practices the art to turn his attention to some other line of business.

There are no locks on the locked pocket, or at all events what might be called a lock is keyless. They work with a spring by a combination which is secret to all but the wearer. If locks with keys are desired they can be employed, but the danger in such an event would be that the key might be locked in the pocket, and a mar would have to go to a locksmith if he wanted car fare.

TRUNK AND BATHTUB.

A New York Man's Unique and Useful Invention.

When Not Used for Bathing Purposes the Receptacle Can Be Used for the Storage or Transportation of Clothes.

This is the season of the year when a host of city people who go to the country say they live in a trunk, but to take a bath in a trunk is something that has just been made possible.

Eugene Sandow is the man who has developed the idea, and it is as practical as his muscles. People who have tried the invention say he knows exactly what he is talking about.

The trunk tub, says the New York Journal, looks like a trunk, and that is just what it is, for when it is not in use for bathing purposes it is perfectly available for ordinary trunk purposes. It is leather bound, cornered with bright steel fittings, and finished with highly-polished, brass-headed nails. It has a massive brass lock, ornamented so as to add greatly to the looks of the affair.

To transform the trunk into a bathtub all that is necessary to do is to raise the lid, lift out the trays, and the tub is before you. The box portion of the trunk is lined with a light, waterproof fabric. The trunk, is octagonal in shape, so there are no sharp corners inside.

In one of the trays of the trunk there is a little compartment also lined with rubber. This contains a pliable line of hose, which is to be attached to any faucet of the house, so that the trunk-bathtub may be filled with water. Under this idea it is not necessary to move the trunk-tub, as the water is carried to it from the length of any ordinary house. In the same compartment with the hose line there is a little faucet.

Close to the bottom of the trunk is a little stopcock which works from the inside. On the outside all that can be seen is a little hole, showing a steel armface cut with a thread. Into this hole from the outside the little faucet is fastened after the owner of the trunk has taken his bath. Then the stopcock on the inside of the tub is turned, and the water is drained from the tub.

Now comes the drying process, and this has been well provided for. In one of the trays taken from the trunk a miniature mop is kept, made of rubber and asbestos. With this the interior of the trunk is mopped dry, the trays are replaced and no one would suspect the bathtub feature.

The arrangement of the trays is of the most improved sort, and, Sandow says, caused as much thought as the tub feature. There are three of these trays, and they fit into the trunk box, leaving a two-inch space at the bottom for air circulation. This circulation is maintained with the outer air by means of a one-inch channel, which extends along the edge of the three trays. Along the two sides of the trays are fitted a pair of steel bands, which come together between the trays, and are fastened and unfastened by a simple pressure on the bands.

The peculiar nature of the lining of the tub, Sandow claims, makes it impossible for any moisture to remain in the trunk, so that the most delicate fabrics can be packed without the slightest fear of damage.

Catholics Change Their Prayers.

No stronger indication could be afforded of the sagacity and statesmanship of the present pontiff than the tendency which he manifests to comply with the requirements of the democratic spirit of the age. In the centuries past the Catholics are annually called upon, in a midsummer papal brief, to make use of prayers for "the peace and good understanding of Christian princes and rulers." In the brief that bears the date of July 1 last, containing the customary instructions with regard to these prayers, the ancient formula disappeared, and the pope, instead of calling upon the faithful to pray for "the union of Christian rulers," asks them to pray for "the freedom of the church, and for the peace and union of Christian nations." no mention being made of the "ruler." Attention is called to this omission by the Osservatore Cattolico, one of the semi-official organs of the vatican, which does not hesitate to describe the brief in question as a sort of indirect command to abandon the special prayers for kings and sovereigns.

The Smallest Human Brain.

Dr. Gore has furnished the Anthropological society with an account of the smallest adult human brain ever examined by a professional anatomist or physiologist. It is a well-known fact that the brain of the adult male averages 49 ounces, the female 43½ ounces. The adult human being who had the smallest brain ever weighed was a female of 42 years of age. She was five feet high, and her intellect was infantile. The brain, without membranes, weighed ten ounces and five grains, being the smallest mature brain on record.

Americans as Frog-Eaters.

From present indications America will soon be outdoing France in the consumption of frogs' legs. The city of New York alone consumes 600,000 "hams" of frogs during the year. These delicacies are now sold in tin boxes like other conserved meats.

INTERESTING NOTES CONCERNING THE FOOTBALL PLAYERS.

Comment on Local Players and What Their Chances Are With the Teams That They Are Matched to Play Against.

The Y. M. C. A. team had their pictures taken in front of the clubhouse of the Westfield Athletic Club Saturday afternoon. The picture is a good one, although "Shorty" Milne and Charlie Dupee look rather fierce.

Roy Phillips, captain and fullback of the Alis team, went to Westfield Saturday with the Y. M. C. A. eleven, as substitute end. Phillips is one of the coming players of the city and it is he and his fellow players on the Alis team who, in a few years, will be the crack players of the place.

Now that the day of the great Yale-Princeton game is drawing nigh, both teams are carefully preparing for the contest. Only the team and the regular substitutes are now at the training table, and among them is Wesley Abbott, of this city. As only about twenty are thus favored, Abbott has a good chance of going to the Princeton game in his football suit. The probable lineup of the Yale team will be: Left end, Bass; left tackle, Rogers; left guard, Murray; centre, Chamberlain; right guard, Chadrich; right tackle, Murphy; right end, Hazen; quarterback, Ely; right halfback, Mills; left halfback, Benjamin; full back, Pincke.

The game at Westfield Saturday, between the eleven of that place and the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. team, showed several things very clearly. It was very apparent that the Plainfield boys have left their old class and now constitute one of the strongest teams in the State. While they don't expect to be able to defeat the Elizabeth Athletic Club or the Orange Athletic Club, yet there are many so-called crack teams that will find the Plainfield team a rather hard pill to swallow. Another very evident fact shown was that the Y. M. C. A. team has improved wonderfully since the first of the season. The interference was markable and the boys played with clockwork precision that astounded their Westfield opponents.

There has been no more faithful worker in the Y. M. C. A. team this year than Thomas U. Smith. He acted as assistant manager and did the greater part of the preliminary work in getting the team together and scheduling the games. At left half he made many brilliant runs and did his share of the team work. In the first Westfield game he received an injury that resulted in water on the knee and he has been confined to the house until last week. Although unable to play, he went to Westfield with the team Saturday and hobbled about the side lines on his crutches and yelled with the rest of the rooters, for although his knee was injured his lungs were not. He has now about recovered, but will not play again this season.

there was not even the food in the house that they might prepare their own dishes. It was truly a pitiable condition. What the thoughts of that poor mother, with three children, ranging from six to thirteen years of age, could be, is something beyond description.

It is related, however, that later in the day some neighbors brought in a few things for the bereaved family and thus prevented them from feeling the pangs of hunger during the night. There is a good deal of talk in the neighborhood as to what ought to be done to assist the family, but like everything else without a head, nothing has been accomplished more than to provide for them from hand to mouth.

It is likely that an effort will be made to have the children placed in a benevolent institution, which will permit the mother to go out and provide for herself, at least.

THE ALIS DEFEATS PINGRYS.

Plainfield's Crack Football Eleven Scores 18 to Elizabeth's 0.

The Alis football team played their hardest game of the season yesterday afternoon at Elizabeth when they met the second team of Pingry's School and defeated them by a score of 18 to 0. The eleven that lined up against the Plainfield boys was composed of Sulzer, the crack sprinter and half back on the first team, and mostly substitutes of the first team. The two elevens weighed about the same but the team work of the Alis boys was much superior. The first touchdown was made in the first two minutes of play. Cuming being carried across the line by good interference on the third play. He made one other touchdown and Dwight made two. Finch kicked the only goal. In the second half the Pingry boys braced up and carried the ball to within ten yards of the Alis goal but lost it on four downs. They used end plays almost entirely and only tried the Alis centre once. The ball was speedily carried out of danger. In this half Cuming made his second touchdown in a double pass after a seventy yard run. Two minutes before time was called the quarter back trick was tried and Dwright ran seventy yards for a touchdown. He fairly ran away from Sulzer who was in pursuit. Sulzer is probably the best scholastic runner in this part of the state.

The game was a good one and there was a pleasing absence of slugging. There was one remarkable feature and that was that the signals of the two teams were almost exactly alike.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCHOOL ROBBED.

The Thieves Took What They Could and Scattered the Rest.

The Scotch Plains Public School was visited by a band of marauders last night that stole every thing of value and wantonly tried to destroy the rest. They rifled the teacher's desk and scattered about the room what they did not take, upsetting mucilage and ink bottles. The trustees desk in the office was upset and the bottom of the drawers broken in.

The "Liberty Bell" presented to the school by J. D. Shepard was stolen; as was also a valuable sofa pillow cover, the gift of a graduating class.

The school house was entered by the front door, evidently with a duplicate key. From the way in which things were strewn about, many think that the thieves were boys or young men. They left no trace of their identity behind.

A District Rally.

A District Epworth League rally is to be held in Vincent chapel on Friday evening under the auspices of the league of the First M. E. church. The leagues of Dunellen, Plainfield and Westfield have been invited and a very enjoyable time is expected. Rev. Burt will recite and some of the local talent will also take part. Refreshments and an informal social will follow the meeting.

TELEGRAPHERS DANCE.

Annual Ball of I. O. R. T. in the Cycle Academy a Great Success.

The smooth surface of the Jersey Cycle Academy was thronged last night with 300 couples of gay dancers who were there to attend the annual ball of the Independent Order of Railway Telegraphers of New Jersey, and a pleasant time they enjoyed in gliding about in graceful sympathy with the sweet strains of music from O'Reilly's full orchestra. Many out-of-town people were present. Those in charge were as follows: General manager, M. H. Conn.; floor manager, J. A. Gaffney; associate floor manager, D. R. McCarthy; floor committee, M. J. Kelly, W. S. Banghart, Charles Roberts and Angus Allen; reception committee, W. B. Simpson, W. H. Shaffer, W. S. Smith, Frank Wager and A. R. Young; committee of arrangements, M. H. Connelly, J. A. Gaffney, J. G. Brokaw, H. P. Sebring and D. R. McCarthy. Among the notable faces seen in the crowd was Charles H. Schermerhorn, the genial manager of the Western Union office in this city, who is one of the veterans in the business.

Voight, who played fullback for Westfield Saturday, in her game with Plainfield, is an old Westfield player. He wanted to play with Plainfield in the first part of the season, but the Y. M. C. A. eleven was composed of only Plainfielders and he went to Boston where he played during the season. He came back to Westfield in time for Saturday's game, however. He played well, but even he could not stop the big gains of the Plainfield backs.

The wife of Mr. Leonard Wells, of East Brimfield, Mass., had been suffering from neuralgia for two days, not being able to sleep or hardly keep still, when Mr. Holden, the merchant there sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and asked that she give it a thorough trial. On meeting Mr. Wells the next day he was told that she was all right, the pain had left her within two hours, and that the bottle of Pain Balm was worth $5.00 if it could not be had for less. THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIX. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1896. NO. 47

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

MANY YEARS IN POLITICS

JAMES E. MARTINE IN PUBLIC LIFE WHEN HE WAS IN HIS TEENS.

Though an Aggressive Democrat He is Very Popular in All Parties—Never Held Office But Once in His Life.

James E. Martine, Democratic candidate for Mayor, was born in New York forty-nine years ago, but has resided out forty years of his life in Plainfield, where he is probably better known personally and by reputation than any other man in either city or borough.

Mr. Martine attended the public schools of New York and Plainfield and in them received his elementary education. At the age of thirteen years Mr. Martine's father died and he left school to look after the interests of Cedar Brook farm.

From the moment Mr. Martine was old enough to read the newspapers, he evinced an inclination in that direction at a precocious age, he took a great interest in matters of public nature. He had a natural gift of eloquence and a fluent tongue, and before he was out of his teens he had become a factor in politics, and that he has remained such ever since there is no question. Though he is aggressive and positive in his opinions on political subjects he has a host of friends in his political opponents. The remark is often heard that "he is a pity that Jim is on the wrong side of the fence," referring to his position in local politics, and is a tacit admission that if he would only "come over" he could have anything he wants. But he don't evince any desire to go, and on the contrary seems to become more loyal to Democracy as time rolls on.

At the age of eighteen years he was prevailed upon by Governor Theodore Randolph, United States Senator, to make a stump speech and since that time every campaign, National or State, has found him on the rostrum advocating the cause of Democracy. His services as a political orator are always in demand by State and National committees, and his campaign services have extended over New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania.

Mr. Martine first entered the political field as a candidate in 1877, when he was nominated for Assemblyman in the old Union county third district. Joseph B. Coward defeated him for the office. The following year he was the choice of the county convention for the Senatorial nomination as against Benjamin Vail, of Rahway, the Republican nominee. In this canvass also the odds were too heavy against the Democrats and Mr. Martine was defeated with the rest of the ticket. A few years later, however, he was elected a member of the Common Council in this city, and served with honor for one term. To him is much as any other man is due the credit of pushing the elevation of railroad tracks to a consummation, and though the move was bitterly opposed at the time, the wisdom of Mr. Martine's foresight in this matter was long ago conceded by those who first opposed it. He was a member of the street committee. In 1893 he was nominated for Senator against the present incumbent, Foster M. Voorhees. Mr. Martine was averse to accepting the honor, but, like in the present Mayoralty contest, he was not the man to sulk in the time of his party's need, and he was defeated in the election, though he made a gallant fight and came out as popular as ever. In the conventions of his own party he has always been a potent factor, both in State and county. In the National campaign just ended he was the Democratic leader in Union county and one of the leading lights in the State. The platform of the last State convention was drawn by Mr. Martine and accepted by the convention without a murmur of protest.

In private life Mr. Martine's avocation is that of a farmer, and the sobriquet of "Farmer Jim" is not at all disagreeable to his ideas of courtesy. He is widely known as the "Farmer Orator." With his agricultural pursuits he has opened and developed as much residential property in Plainfield as any other man, and is now largely interested in improved property in the eastern end of the city. Martine avenue was named after him.

He resides in an old fashioned house on Cedar Brook farm, off Watchung avenue, where the air of hospitality always pervades. His home-life is not graced with a wife.

His Sixtieth Birthday.

Sunday was W. R. Mattox's sixtieth birthday, and his friends tendered him a surprise reception at his home, 426 Webster place. It was more in the shape of a family gathering, and the evening was spent most pleasantly in singing, recitations and games. Mr. and Mrs. Mattox received many useful and ornamental presents.

IN THE DARK CONTINENT.

A RETURNED MISSIONARY TELLS OF THE AFRICAN LIFE.

The Honesty of the Natives Was Exploited by Dr. Laffin Whose Words Did Not Picture Them So Bad at Heart.

Those who live in this country have very little idea of the real habits and customs of the natives of central Africa. Those who attended Dr. C. J. Laffin's illustrated lecture on "Light in the Dark Continent," which was held in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church Monday evening, were given a brief glimpse, however, into that interesting region where Dr. Laffin has been a missionary for ten years. The lecture was illustrated with very handsome stereopticon views. It was given for the benefit of the Sunshine Mission Band and was well attended, nearly every seat in the room being taken.

He first told and showed something of how that region was reached and the methods of transportation. The missions and native churches were described. He contradicted the usual belief of how the natives gather around the missionary to hear his words and told how the missionary often talks to only one man at a time. He referred to the constitutional laziness of the people there and said it was much harder to get them to work the six days than to rest the seventh. He spoke of the honesty of the natives and showed some of the pictures of the cannibal chiefs who had treated himself and wife so kindly.

He told his experiences on arriving in that country and how instead of being almost worshiped as he expected, he found that the natives pitied him instead, especially on account of his appearance.

The Central Africans are not, he explained, idolators at all and the little images that are brought to this country as idols are their fetishes which they superstitiously believe will cure their diseases. He related some of the ideas that the Africans have of the white people and said that the ideas of the latter were just as foolish as those of their colored brothers.

The great need, he said, was for more workers who were willing to sacrifice their life, if need be, to teach the natives the truth. The complete salvation depends on the native workers who accomplish what it would be impossible for the white workers to do, and he told something of the work they had already accomplished. A number of pictures of the native missionaries were shown as well as some of the foreign workers.

During the meeting hymns were thrown on the sheet and the audience united in singing them.

MOHAMMED WEBB COMING.

A Convert to Pagan Religion Will Present His Cause.

Alexander Russell Webb, who caused such a sensation some time ago by turning from Christianity to Mohammedism, after having served in the United States Consular service, is to lecture in this city next Saturday night in the support of Mohammedism. He was converted to the pagan religion while a Consul in the Orient, and after the expiration of his term of office decided to devote his time and wealth to propagating the religion in the United States.

During the first part of his lecture Mr. Webb will appear in evening dress with Turkish fez, while in the second part he will wear the full costume of an Arab of the merchant class, and will repeat the Mohammedan call for prayer in Arabic, exactly as it is given from the minarets of all Oriental mosques. He will also give the hours for prayer and describe the prayer itself with all its forms, prostrations and genuflections as performed in the mosque. This is a most impressive and instructive novelty. The lecture is free.

An Excellent Entertainment.

An instrumental and vocal concert, under the auspices of the Westfield Football Association, will be given on Tuesday, December 1st, in Westfield Club Hall. The concert will consist of banjo, mandolin, vocal and instrumental selections. George Jenkins, of Somerville, will give several selections, and Westfield's best talent will take part in the entertainment. The object of the concert is to raise funds to support the football team. A number of the Plainfield team are talking of attending in a body and thus assist their old rivals.

No Bridge this Winter.

The projections of the extension of Sycamore avenue from the borough to the city have been informed that they cannot hope to get a bridge across the brook before next summer.

Rev. and Mrs. Charles Scudder, of Newark, will spend Thanksgiving at the home of Mrs. Scudder's parents, T. R. Crosley, Duer street.

STORY OF A HOLY HOUSE

DR. BARNES' LECTURES TO SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

His Subject Was the "Tabernacle," and the Points He Brought Out So Lucidly Showed a Thorough Study.

Monday afternoon and evening the members of the Primary Teachers' Union had the pleasure of having Dr. C. R. Barnes of the First M. E. church, give two interesting lectures in Vincent chapel on the "Tabernacle," Dr. Barnes has made a thorough and deep study of the subject and he presents it in an entertaining manner. He gave a history of the "Tabernacle" and related many of the peculiar incidents in relation to its erection during Bible times. He told of the different chiefs and tribes that were associated with this holy institution, and of the many details connected with the ceremony.

The evening lecture was a continuation of the afternoon one, and he was assisted by Clarence Mills, who was dressed similar to a Jewish High Priest. Dr. Barnes explained the dress in detail. In connection with the lecture Dr. Barnes had erected a fac-simile of the "Tabernacle," with all the accessories, and in this way he was able to impress the subject on the minds of those present.

After the afternoon session, which closed about 4 o'clock, the members of the Union returned to the Y. M. C. A. building, where they held their regular meeting, at which time Mrs. Mosher taught the lesson. The latter part of the evening lecture was devoted to an informal discussion in general of the subject. The members of the Union desire to thank Dr. Barnes for his kindness in assisting them in the study of the Bible.

Union Young People's Meetings.

Two union Christian Endeavor and Epworth League meetings will be held on Thanksgiving Day morning at 9:30. One will be held in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, to which all the Christian Endeavorers and Epworth Leaguers of that section of the city are invited to attend. It will be led by E. E. Anthony. The other meeting will be held at Vincent chapel, where the Endeavorers and Epworth Leaguers of North Plainfield and the northern part of Plainfield are to meet. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these meetings.

Shot a Play Indian.

Two lads named Morelle and Burke were playing "Indians" in Stelle's woods last Friday, when Morelle fired an air gun at Burke, and the little stick he used for ammunition made a small cut on one of Burke's pedal extremeties. Morelle is a colored boy of about ten years of age, living on Central avenue. He was arrested yesterday by Patrolman Hartpence, but was released as soon as he was brought before Chief Grant. Burke is eight years old, and lives on West Fourth street. The injury was a very slight one.

Concerning Hunting.

The farmers about Berkley Heights and other nearby points are suffering from depredations committed by hunters. In many places the farmers have erected wire fences and some of the gunners carry pincers and pliers and, sooner than jump over a fence, they cut the wire and walk through. This is one of the main obstacles against hunting in that neighborhood. The farmers as a rule are not prejudiced to hunting on their land in the "open season," but they will not tolerate having their wire fences cut.

Sisters at Odds.

Justice Newcorn has issued a summons in the case of Mrs. Kittie August against Mrs. Margaret Killoran, both of the East End, and the case promises to be very interesting. The plaintiff and defendant are sisters and the former was living with the latter. Recently, Mrs. August missed her trunk and the contents. She was suspicious of her sister, Mrs. Killoran, and as a result she had the summons issued. Both parties will plead their own case.

Virtue.

Virtue consists in part in avoiding that which we might possibly have cause to regret. Therefore it is a virtue to avoid that exhaustion of your coal supply which in time of need might occasion your regret. Take heed, ye strivers after virture, and consult with Geo. O. Stevens & Co. as to the means of averting such a shock to your good intentions. Consultations free.

Justice Newcorn's Court.

Justice Newcorn has issued summons in the case of Huff against Clark, returnable Nov. 27th, and the case of Hand against Harger has been adjourned thirty days. The case of Schenck against Arthur was tried yesterday and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

"NOT FOR SCHOOL, BUT FOR LIFE" IS THE MOTTO.

Two North Plainfield Teachers Express Their Ideas on the Study and Methods in Kindergarten and Geography.

The Somerset County Teachers' Institute opened at Somerville, Monday morning, with a very large attendance of teachers from all over the county. All of the teachers in the North Plainfield public schools were present.

The meeting was called to order by Superintendent Metz, and after the opening exercises Superintendent Metz made a few remarks and gave the teachers as their motto: "Not for school, but for life." A paper entitled "The What and Why Periods," was given by Samuel A. Barr, Ph. D., city superintendent of Reading, Pa.

"Glimpses in Kindergarten Life," was next given by Miss Jessie Scott Hines, of the North Plainfield Public High School. Miss Hines stated that kindergarteners like to think and try to prove that everything they do is done with a distinct purpose. The kindergarten system should be fitted to be the prime factor in that true education, which awakens, nourishes and beautifies characters. All are somewhat familiar with the external form of kindergarten life, but the real idea is very little known. The kindergarten is not a school nor is it a playroom, but a combination of home and school. The kindergarten affords, by this position, an atmosphere of perfect freedom, which emphasizes individuality. The great idea is that each child shall freely be himself and that the kindergartener shall lead him to a loving consideration of his fellows and to a desire to be of use to all. Many illustrative stories added much to the interest of the paper.

The speakers of the afternoon were Dr. Andrew D. Warde, superintendent of the North Plainfield High School, and Dr. Baer.

Dr. Warde spoke on "The New Geography." He referred to geography as having more time devoted to its study than any other subject during the last fifteen years. Time was when learning a geography lesson meant committing to memory a list of meaningless words. Pupils were taught that the southern States produced cotton, rice and sugar cane, but what they were, why they were produced there and not elsewhere was not taught. As a better way than the "old method," Dr. Warde advised real journeys, where possible, supplemented with pictures and relief maps. The later years of geographical study should be devoted to establishing the relation of cause and effect. This was illustrated with many excellent examples.

"In his paper on "Spelling," Dr. Warde used his audience as a class and gave them some practical work in phonics, diacritical marks and orthography, and ended with a prize contest in spelling. It has not yet been decided who was the winner of the prize, two volumes of Ian Maclaren's works.

THE GUN WENT OFF.

The Man Who Handled it "Didn't Know It Was Loaded."

A case of "Didn't know it was loaded" occurred in Westfield Sunday evening, but fortunately no one was hurt.

James McCarthy lives with his parents on Rahway avenue, and one day last week loaned his shotgun to a friend to go hunting with. On Sunday the shotgun was returned to the McCarthy family, though no one seems to have known of the latter fact. The elder McCarthy was placing the gun in its case, when it was accidentally discharged. The shot passed through the front door of the house, leaving a large hole. The family and the neighbors were all startled, but all concerned are now congratulating themselves that the accident did not result seriously.

A Thanksgiving Appeal.

The Relief Association makes its annual appeal for provisions with which to supply dinners to the poor of Plainfield on Thanksgiving Day. Contributions of money and edibles may be sent to the Relief rooms, 544 West Front street, early Wednesday morning.

Mrs. C. E. Brooks, Sec'y.

Fell From the Roof.

While painting the gutter to his house on Cottage place, yesterday morning, Martin Stevens slipped and fell to the ground, spraining his wrist. The injury was not a serious one, however.

Important Change in Mail Service.

The New York and Grafton direct mail to the Pacific coast now closes at the Plainfield postoffice at 5 p. m., instead of 6 p. m.

MISSIONARY EXTENSION.

Courses of Lectures on the Subject to be Arranged.

Miss Alice B. Spangenberg, the superintendent of the Christian Endeavor Missionary Department, has recently sent out letters to the presidents of the local unions of the State, calling their attention to the plans of the department for missionary extension, and requesting them to bring the project to the attention of their executive committees.

A neat pamphlet has been published by the department, giving an explanation of missionary extension, its object and purpose, and something of what it has accomplished. It is recommended that the local unions of the State arrange for courses of lectures, according to the best judgment of the local committees.

The State department stands ready to furnish speakers at a maximum cost of $3 per night, and entertainment. This is certainly a reasonable rate and is only intended to cover their traveling expenses. Additional information will be gladly given upon application to the State Superintendent. This arrangement will hold through the months of February and March.

Guests of Brooklyn Knights.

The members of Crescent Division, No. 13, U. R. K. of P., of this city, will go to Brooklyn on the 2.07 o'clock train on Thursday afternoon of this week. They go as the guests of Rathbone Division, No. 27, of that place and they will participate in a short street parade, the members all appearing in full uniform. Following the parade supper will be served, after which the Plainfield delegates will assist in organizing the Orient council.

Not the Same.

It is not the original famous "Jolly Six" that will give a dance at the Olympia on Wednesday evening, but a new society. The original organization will give their dance about the middle of December.

"PATHWAY TO HEAVEN"

ANDREW E. KENNEY COMPILES AN IMPORTANT CATHOLIC BOOK.

It Has Been Approved by Archbishop Corrigan, of New York—The Illustrations Are From Plainfield Views.

"Via Coeli" (Vi-ah Skylee) is the name of a handsome publication which has just been issued by A. E. Kenney, of this city. It is a small prayer book for use in Catholic churches at the various services, such as the Mass, Benediction and similar devotions. There are already numerous books of this character, but until recently they have been made in Europe. Mr. Kenney has taken advantage of the many improvements in modern book making, and the little volume bears evidence of it. It is profusely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings, showing views of the different positions which should be followed during the various services, and which are taken from life.

THE GENUFLECTION.

Among some of the views which may be mentioned are "The Genuflection," "The Elevation," "The Blessing," "At the Rosary," "The Beginning of Mass," "Dominus Vobiscum," "Benediction," etc., all of which are entirely original both in design and execution.

These illustrations are based upon scenes taken by photograph early last spring in St. Joseph's church. Subjects were selected to pose for the artist with a view of portraying familiar scenes of devotion, and the attitudes in all of the illustrations are correct, displaying the etiquette of the people at services. The pictures have been re-drawn by talented artists and engraved with beautiful effect. They combine artistic merit, fidelity to life and first class workmanship. The positions have never before been produced in such a manner. The arrangement of the pictures show the altar views and the congregation alternately.

"Via Coeli" means the "Pathway to Heaven." The literary part of the book is a compilation of prayers and instructions which make the sometimes intricate service of the Catholic church more easy to follow. Many of the prayers are original contributions from the pens of devout people of the church. Two or three bits of poetic gems add to the general literary excellence of the work. This is the dedication:

GOD.

O Thou eternal one! whose presence bright
All space doth occupy, all motion guide,
Unchanged through time's all-devastating flight,
Thou only God, there is no God beside!
Being all-being spirit, Almighty One!
Whom none can comprehend, and none express,
Who filled Heaven and earth Thyself alone,
Enhancing all, supporting, filling, blessing,
Being whom we adore—God, and know no more!

In the work Mr. Kenney had the advice of Father Smyth and Father Murphy, of this city, and Father Miller, of North Plainfield. Miss Elvire Quintero, a graduate of the Sacred Heart convent of Elmhurst, assisted in the compilation. The work was submitted to His Grace, Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, and after a careful examination it received his approbation. The paper and binding are very fine and the press work shows careful handling.

"Via Coeli" will be in the market within a few days.

—Armstrong's hot soda—the best yet. Try it.

—Twenty-five dozen of fancy table celery for Thanksgiving at Neuman Brothers.

—Thanksgiving dinner will taste nicer if served on one of Peck's handsome linen table cloths.

—As usual Leggett, the druggist, has a fresh supply of Huyler's famous candy. Now is the time to leave your order for Thanksgiving.

—The statement that the borough fire department did not turn out till ten minutes after the alarm of fire Sunday morning was erroneous. They responded in three or four minutes.

—The following cases have been tried in Justice Newcorn's court and judgement was given the plaintiff in each: Westphal against Muldowney; Tvins & Co., against Arthur; Henry against Connolly.

NURSERY IDOLS OF LIFE AND ANIMATION

Laugh-Provoking Exhibit at the First Presbyterian Church.

DOLLS WITH ALL SORTS OF DEFECTS.

John Petrie Impersonates the Doll Tinker and the Number of Intricate Jobs He Has Thrust Upon Him, and the Manner in Which He Dealt With the Subjects, Prompted Roars of Risibilities in the Audience—Names of Participants.

Talk about poultry and cat shows, or even horse shows, they are not to be compared to the "live doll" exhibit that was given in the chapel of the First Presbyterian church Friday evening. With dull staring faces, except, of course, when their owners forgot and laughed, the dolls did some remarkable things and managed to keep the audience in one continual roar of laughter. Dolls of all varieties were there, from the extremely limp rag doll to the "Yellow Kid," loaned by the New York World, especially for the occasion, so they said, at least.

As if to prepare the minds of the spectators for the proper appreciation of the dolls, the front of the room and the curtain were appropriately decorated. All kinds of dolls hung about the walls in various artistic positions. On the curtain was a varied assortment of paper dolls cut from newspapers, while in the centre of it the picture of the Republican candidate for Mayor smiled at his peculiar companions in true Fisk fashion. The likeness was that published in last night's Daily Press.

There was a fair-sized audience present, but the entertainment was deserving of one much larger. What it lacked in numbers, however, it made up in enthusiasm. The different numbers on the programme were made evident to all by a large poster which hung from the wall.

The entertainment opened with a piano duet by Miss Josephine Petrie and Miss Lottie Remson. A charming little dialogue, "The Valentine," was given by Miss Grace E. Overton and Miss Mary A. Luckey, and then Miss Bessie Blair sang the solo "Dutch Dolls." Next came the "live doll" exhibit.

As the curtain was pulled to one side, "Dr. Kill's" repair shop for dolls was disclosed on the platform while the proprietor of the place was apparently fast asleep there, stretched out on a chair. Had some of the paint been removed from his face and had he been otherwise clad in civilized garb, the familiar features of John Petrie might have been recognised. A ragged coat and vest, which he removed when he got down to work, hid a striped shirt built on the Bing Bing plan. A pair of corduroy trousers and a grey high hat completed his equipment. His assistants were three in number. Miss Nora Williams, clad in a calico dress of mixed patterns with tight fitting sleeves and with her hair covered by a red bandana turban, wielded the the dust brush. Miss Flora Petrie, in another queer gown, assisted in looking after the dolls, while the understudy, George Taylor, rigged out in overalls and coat, made himself generally useful. All sorts of tools lay around on the tables and projected from the pockets of "Dr. Kill" and his understudy.

The dreamer roused himself to receive his first patient, which arrived on wheels or rather on roller skates. It, perhaps it would be better to say she, was a wooden doll and Taylor began to oil up the joints a little to the vast amusement of the juvenile occupants of the front row. Then one after another the assistants led and pushed the rest of the "dolls" on to the platform.

The identity of the various dolls was as follows: Talking doll, Miss Eleanor T. VanDeventer; walking doll, Miss Agnes Blair; wooden doll, Miss Lillian Hunt; china doll, Miss Edith L. Pruden; fairy, Miss Mary A. Luckey; negro; doll, Percy Dayton; rag doll, Miss Grace E. Overton; gypsy doll, Miss Margaret Clave; Japanese doll, Miss Elizabeth Bittenbender; baby doll, Miss Pansy Herring, and the "Yellow Kid," Frank Delaney.

Now there was something the matter with all the dolls, and they had been sent to the repair shop to be repaired. Dr. Kill and his assistants bustled around, oil can in hand, tightening a loose screw here and adjusting some of the mechanism there, and attempting to make the necessary repairs.

They first experimented with the walking doll to which there was a letter attached. It said that this 1892 model, low gear walking doll was all out of order and needed a new face. The steps were too short, read the letter, causing the doll to wabble. When Dr. Kill reached this part of the letter there came a suppressed gurgle from the doll, a choking sound, and its face assumed an expression that might have signified some internal trouble. They fixed the apparatus and the doll walked, but the matter was it didn't want to stop when it once began, and started off on every occasion, upsetting several of the other dolls, falling over everybody and causing Mr. Taylor an endless amount of trouble in rushing after it and catching it just on the edge of the platform.

The talking doll was pumped up with a bicycle pump, and then persisted in saluting all in French, and repeating that touching little hymn, "Twinkle, twinkle little star, etc.," in a very metallic voice. After shouting "shut up" at the doll until he was hoarse, Taylor finally stuffed a wad of paper in its mouth, effectively silencing its remarks.

But the rag dolls, those who had not laughed before, fairly screamed at its actions. It apparently had no spinal column, and was sufficiently limp to be well worthy of its name. It was constantly falling over, upsetting accessories, and had to be dragged about the platform. They tightened the loose screws in its head, oiled it and tried to pump it up, but with no avail, and it continued limp as ever to the end. A tag stated it to be the property of Judge Codington.

The "Yellow Kid" had a talking attachment but it was ruined by the shock caused by the doctor's remarks. He told of a terrible murder that had been committed in the afternoon, how the police, Marsh and Ayers had gone over to the City Hotel and hung a border. The "Yellow Kid" groaned and never spoke again. He was accompanied by a note from the New York World saying that they lent him until the next edition came out and requested that good care be taken of him. He was only upset twice by the walking doll. The Japanese doll was wrapped in newspapers after being oiled up and sent away.

The negro doll was an old fashioned "auntie," picked up in Central Africa, so read a card, by Fred Bettman in his latest missionary trip there. Taylor decorated its face with spots of white chalk while the doctor repaired it otherwise. Its pedestal was not firm and it showed a tendency to topple over especially after colliding with that "awful" walking doll. A china doll came from William H. Shotwell to have a new arm put on and its cracked face repaired. It smiled, wonderful to say, for it was supposed to have a china face, when the doctor poured oil down its neck. The old arm was sawed off and the sawdust emptied out of it. Then a new arm was found that matched the other exactly

The baby doll was dressed in the most correct baby fashion and cried "Mamma" at intervals in a feeble voice. Sometimes it hid its face and some foolish person in the audience thought it was laughing.

The gypsy doll was accompanied by a note in which Rev. C E. Herring said he had brought it home from Naples and wanted its cheeks colored and hair fixed, which was done in a way that suited Mr. Herring, who was in the audience, to express his complete satisfaction. The fairy doll was to frail to be dealt with harshly and Mr. Taylor contended himself with tightening a few loose bolts.

The remainder of the musical programme, which was given at intervals through the doll show, consisted of a piano solo by W. E. MacClymont, an autobarp solo by B. H. Pitcher, and a baritone solo by Mr. Tallamy.

The programme ended with an auction of the dolls in which the Dr. and his understudy acted as auctioneers while supporting the dolls. The negro doll was low man and sold for 6 cents while the walking doll, that had caused so many catastrophes, went for $21. The other dolls were sold at intermediate prices. The purchasers were requested to call this morning at the latch door, but it is not necessary to say that neither purchaser or dolls showed up. Then everybody adjourned to the shelves to partake of ice cream and cake, in which occupation the dolls were willing to join.

Miss Sadie Blimm, of Somerset street, entertained a few friends at her home Saturday evening. The playing of whist and dancing furnished their amusement. Those present were Miss Edith Hurlbut, Miss Martha Donahan, Miss Saidie Blimm, Miss Lou Crosson, Will Kitchen, Frank Vail and Will Morrison.

NO SERVANT; NO RECTOR

REV. E P. DYER TRIED AND TRIED BUT GET NO COOK.

Then the Family Went a Half Mile for Meals, But Owing to Mrs. Dyer Being an Invalid This Could Not be Continued.

At Metuchen, the hired girl reigns supreme. It is she who dictates the number of courses at dinner and how often coal shall be put on the library fire. There the mistress of the kitchen eats with the family. There she flounces out of the house whenever it suits her own sweet will. If you don't believe it ask the Rev. E. P. Dyer, rector of the smart parish of St. Luke's.

For ten years the Rev. Mr. Dyer has been a clergyman in the Protestant Episcopal church. Nine of them he spent as rector of St. Andrew's in Baltimore, his native city. Then he went to Philadelphia, where the cooking is good and the servant girl question pretty nearly solved. He received his call from Metuchen last August.

When the clergyman came to his new work it was with the enthusiasm born of a good cause and the thought that St. Luke's was the best parish in Metuchen, possessed not only of a charming little church, but also of a fine parish house and a cozy parsonage. It was with no little satisfaction then that the new clergyman installed his wife and nine year old daughter there. Alas, he reckoned without the hired girl!

"I'll just run around to the employment agency," he remarked to his wife, who is something of an invalid, on the day of their arrival, "and get you a cook."

But he didn't. He couldn't. Metuchen has no employment agent. So the family had to go out for dinner that night and for many nights afterwards, and the only place where they could get anything fit to eat, though Metuchen boasts itself of being a lively suburb, was half a mile away. Next day he tried again, seeking out the humble and lowly who might be glad to go out to service for high wages. But the humble and lowly wouldn't go out even for high wages, unless they could have every night off and Sundays and holidays.

The weeks rolled by and the months. The family went to New York, but as fast as he took a servant out to Metuchen just as fast did she want to go back to Sixth avenue or the Bowery. They tramped through the rain; they waded through the mud three times a day their weary half mile to get something to eat. Sometimes they got a girl from the neighborhood. Just as often she gave notice

"Let me do the work," pleaded Mrs. Dyer, but her husband wouldn't hear of it, having in mind her illness and the dire consequences that might follow.

And now he has resigned the pastorate of St. Luke's. On December 15th, Rev. Mr. Dyer will move out of the cozy parsonage and take his family back to Philadelphia.

"It has been fearful," said he yesterday. "It is a lovely parish and the people are so good to me that I am sorry to go, but it is simply a question of my wife's health. We cannot get a servant here and my wife cannot do the work. We have offered high wages; we have treated the girls as well as we know how. We could not get one to stay.

"The vestry has treated me kindly. They even offered to let me live somewhere else and keep up the parish here, but that would be unfair to them. I must go. But oh, how horrible is the servant question here! One of my parishioners invited me to supper the other night. He kept five servants. When the guests arrived, not one of the five was left. They had departed in high dudgeon"

Mr. Dyer has been well liked by his congregation. The vestry, though willing to do everything, could not provide a servant girl. So on December 15th Rev. Clarence Dunham will try to solve the problem.

EPWORTH LEAGUE RALLY

INTERESTING PROGRAMME RENDERED IN VINCENT CHAPEL.

Encouraging Reports Received From Various Societies in Their District—Good Work Being Done All Over the County.

The members of the Epworth League of the M. E. churches in this city, held a rally in Vincent Chapel, Friday evening, and it was a most successful entertainment, over three hundred persons, young, middle aged and old being included in the gathering. The evening's entertainment opened with singing "Coronation" and prayer by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Barnes.

President of the League R. W. Davis in a few well chosen and appropriate words welcomed the audience, after which Rev. Mr. Johnson, as a representative from Grace M. E. Church, told of the work and the much good being accomplished there.

Mr. Moorehouse spoke on behalf of the Westfield League which, he said, was holding regular Sunday and Tuesday meetings and they are prolific of much good.

A. H Strong spoke for the Scotch Plains League and said in part: "The Scotch Plains League appreciates these rallys, and as the members go back home they tell that they are not alone in the movement, and we begin to realize what a mighty force is marching with the Epworth League."

Mr. O'Donnell, of the Monroe Avenue Chapel, next spoke on "Personal Responsibility." "The M. E. church," said he, "is one of the best in the world, and the Epworth League has learned to do and endure in the church work. Human character—the human heart—is the work which shall endure, and the Epworth League is just this sort of an organization. The League is not simply a social organization, yet, through its religious training, many are brought into the church. Its great aim is to impress on all souls God's likeness; therefore, let us all work for the glory of God, who will give us victory, for He provides the strength and power."

Robert Douglas sang a delightful solo, and the audience appreciated his efforts to such an extent that he was obliged to respond to an encore.

Rev. Dr. Barnes the pastor, also spoke a few helpful and encouraging words. He spoke with partial reference to the practice some have of "serving God by proxy," as he put it. "A good many," he said, "can sit up all night to get the election returns, but they can't find time to go to church or Epworth League and one of the mainstays of the church and the official board so recognizes this fact." Dr. Barnes considered that the church had made a serious mistake in giving up the circuit system, as he termed it. All should be united and work harmoniously together, so that one society could consult with another. They should join in the benefit, intent and co-operation, and centre together to do all that is good in God's work—not hinder, but join and help one another. In conclusion Dr. Barnes said he favored these rallies for the good of the church.

Miss Edith Burt gave another of her charming readings, "The Spirit of Thanksgiving;" Miss Margaretta Barnes sang a delightful solo; Miss Burt recited and Mr. Douglass closed the vocal and instrumental part of the programme with a beautiful solo.

But this was not all, for immediately afterward the members of the League served delicious cream and cake in abundance to all present.

HOT TALK ABOUT A FIRE DEPARTMENT

Borough Councilman Disagree About the Need of Prideville.

DECIDED TO HAVE A NEW HOUSE.

Councilman McLaughlin Said that the Property Owners Were Asking Too Much for the Northern Part of the Borough—He Proposed a Paid Driver and Their Own Horses—Mayor Hegeman Insists That the Proposed New House is Needed—Only Two Dissenting Votes.

The adjourned meeting of the borough Council held Friday evening was anything but a quiet one though at the start everything looked calm and peaceful. As usual, it was late when Mayor Hegeman called the meeting, and there were present Councilman McLaughlin, Woolston and Valiant. Later Councilman Peck and Lounsbury appeared and as will be seen the two latter made things lively.

A petition was received from Susan C. Rafferty, Susan Clapp and Eleanor Roome, asking that a bridge be placed on Sycamore avenue across Green brook. The matter was referred to the street committee. This is the new street which has been extended from the borough to the city.

Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed presented a claim of $37.35 for the searching of titles relative to the purchase of property on Watchung avenue, and the same was paid. Mr. Woolston reported progress in the Watchung avenue work, and stated that F. A. Dunham had present with him the maps regarding Chatham street and the map of Watchung avenue and on his request Mr. Dunham explained the same later in the evening.

Mr. Valiant offered a resolution authorizing the Corporation Counsel to incur such expense as might be necessary in settling the claim of Mrs. Ptaschinka against the borough for injuries received by falling into an opening on Linden avenue. Mr. Woolston offered a resolution that the grade on map 5 prepared by F. A. Dunham be accepted as the proper grades for Jackson avenue, Race street, Chatham street and Pearl street, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MacLaughlin called from the table the resolution regarding the purchase of an assessor's map. He then offered a resolution that the Council purchase an assessor's map at a cost not to exceed $30 a section. The resolution was lost, as Mayor Hegeman voted no with Messrs. Peck and Valiant, while Messrs. Woolston and MacLaughlin voted in the affirmative.

Later, when Mr. Lounsbury was present, Mr. MacLaughlin moved that the matter be reconsidered, as the former member was in favor of purchasing the map, and he thought that the question should be brought up again. The motion prevailed after a heated discussion, a resolution being adopted that the map be purchased. Mayor Hegeman gave as his reason for voting no that he thought the borough was not in a position to expend $700 for the map, though he thought they should own one.

Mr. Peck then brought up the matter of the extra fire protection for the borough. He said that a new hose house, company and appurtenances had been considered for a long time. Plans for a house, the location of the same and estimates of cost had been secured. Mr. Peck submitted the following as the estimate of cost: Lot, $200; hose and fixtures, $600; house, $845; architect's services, $42.50; electrical appliances, $90; repairs of hose carriage, $75; house furnishings, $75; grading and fencing, $85; total, $2,015.50. For the construction of the house three bids were presented as follows:

Titus & Pope, $1,526; Pearson & Gayle, $1,150; E. E. Pope, $848.

Mr. Peck said that it was proposed to issue fire department bonds in sums of $500 and to retire a bond each year. The interest in all would amount to $175 at 5 per cent. The amount of bonds to be issued was $2,015.50. This would include the expense of $1,300 which was issued in building the new fire tower and purchasing the bell. The report made by Mr. Peck was received, and the latter offered a resolution that the council purchase a lot on Harrison street with a fifty feet front, for the sum of $300.

Mr. McLoughlin arose and objected to the scheme. He thought that too much was anticipated in protecting that part of the borough known as Bull Frog city. Continuing, the member said: "Harrison street is one of the best in the borough and I have made an investigation of the matter in question. I find that in that locality there are thirty-eight dwelling houses and twelve barns, aggregating about $35,000 in value. There are other parts of the borough which needs protection more than the one mentioned. East and west of Somerset street on Coddington avenue there is $67,000 worth of property which is very poorly protected. There are nothing but streams of water to defend upon. Most of the members in the new hose company live on Harrison street and work in Plainfield. The carrying out of the proposed plan will not decrease insurance rates. It would be much better if the borough would buy a team of horses and secure the services of a man as driver. In this way the horses could be worked on the streets and they would pay for their keeping. Next year the tax rate will increase and it's my duty to keep it down as much as possible." Mr. Valiant thought there was a great deal of truth in what Mr. McLoughlin had said, with one exception, and that was that the latter thought the new plan would only protect $35,000 worth of property. Mr. Valiant thought there was valuable property in Washington Park which would be protected also.

Mr. Woolston thought it was a good idea to carry out the scheme but he had changed his mind for the present for he could not see why it was necessary to go to the additional expense just now. He thought the borough might better purchase a team of horses and carry out Mr. McLoughlin's scheme. Mr. Valiant said that Mr. McLoughlin objected to the location and Mr. Woolston to the expense. He thought it would cost the borough $600 a year for a driver and the new plan he thought was the in favor of establishing a company to the proposed location.

Mr. MacLaughlin could not see why the Council wanted to locate the new house on Harrison street just to protect Bull Frog city. Mr. Lounsbury became interested and he believed the improvement was called for. He said said that the property in that locality, though some of it was only worth $1,000, was entitled to as much protection as any $6,000 house. He thought there would be far more heavy expense by buying a team of horses.

By this time the Mayor got interested and he took the floor. He spoke in part as follows:

"The subject has been handled with care and we are going to expend $2,000 for the improvement. The committee has gone over the subject and I have been interested from the first. Mr. MacLaughlin does not approve of the scheme and he has a right to his opinions. He advocates a system of economy, but the remarks he has indulged in he thinks are wrong. If we should purchase horses, secure the services of a man and do away with the primitive method of hailing the first ice wagon team when there is a fire, and he continues by saying that the horses could earn their own keep. The fact that the horses would be out working does not help things one bit, and thus Mr. MacLaughlin's beautiful scheme of economy is knocked in the head. To be economical one has got to spend money frequently. Then Mr. McLoughlin says that only $35,000 worth of property would be protected he says what is not so. The new company would be called to do service in any part of the borough. We want to show a spirit of advancement and it should be our aim to spread out. The question is whether you shall buy a beautiful team of horses or vote for the building of a hose house which is absolutly needed?"

Mr. McLoughlin replied by saying that the Mayor allowed the members to think that he was running down certain parts of the borough. He answered: "Why have we not water on Somerset street near Coddington avenue? The water company will not give it to us. We can't get hydrants for sometime to come, and I have not yet heard a good reason why the proposed scheme should be adopted."

The question on the resolution was called for at this time, and all but Messrs. Woolston and McLoughlin voted for the purchase of the lot.

NUPTIAL EVENTS, ONE IN CHURCH AND HOME EACH

Beaux Come from New York and Illinois and Take Away With Them Two Charming Plainfield Belles.

Grace P. E Church Opened to Receive a Couple Who Retired United in the Bonds of Holy Matrimony—The Details.

The Home of Mrs. C. P. Leggett the Scene of a Charming Event, and Filled With Flowers and Many Friends.

The marriage ceremonies of Miss Louise Cole Dryden, of this city, and Francis Gregory Moore, of New York, were solemnized Wednesday evening.

It was a church wedding and brilliant affair throughout. The Grace P. E. church, which the bride's family attends, was the scene of the ceremony and it was handsomely decorated for the occasion. Yellow was the prevailing color, and immense yellow chrysanthemums formed the principal decoration, set off artistically by the dark green evergreen roping that was hung in every side.

The church was crowded when the ceremony began, and among the guests were many who hold a prominent place in Plainfield society. The ushers wore black of the dress suits of the gentlemen were in contrast to the many beautiful and dazzling gowns of their fair companions.

At the appointed hour the grand organ swelled forth in a melody of sound, and the bridal party appeared. The bride, radiant in a gown of ivory-white satin, with chiffon and pearl trimming and tulle veil, was escorted to the altar by her father, J. Meredith Dryden. She carried white chrysanthemums. Then followed her six bridesmaids, charmingly gowned in white figured organdie over yellow satin, with yellow satin girdles and stock collars. They carried large bouquets of yellow chrysanthemums. They were the bride's sisters, Miss Fannie Dryden and Miss Amy Dryden; her cousins, Miss Edith Kensett, of Virginia, and Miss Mamie Kensett, of Baltimore; Miss Nannie Buck, of Baltimore, and Miss "Ted" Scrymser, of Staten Island.

The bride's mother was present, gowned in black satin, with chiffon and duchess lace and diamond ornaments.

The bride and her father met the groom at the altar. He was accompanied by the best man, his brother, Wm. W. Moore, of New York, and the ushers, Meredith Dryden, of Plainfield, brother of the bride; Fred H. Freeman, Mortimer A. Ruger and Morgan Winans, of New York. There they were received by Rev. Walpole Warren, D. D., dean of St. James church, New York, which the groom attends. The impressive Episcopal ceremony was read and then the organ spoke forth its triumphal wedding march and Mr. Moore and his charming bride away.

A reception for the immediate family followed at the home of the bride's parents, 120 West Seventh street. The house was decorated in the same manner as the church with yellow chrysanthemums and evergreen roping. The evergreen roping was significant and was used at the express wish of the bridal couple, for it was while assisting roping to decorate the house last Christmas that Cupid plied his art so successfully.

The wedding supper was served by Max Wiertz and proved a fine affair.

Most of the wedding gifts were displayed at the home of the bride and were numerous and costly, including silver, cut glass, and the like. The groom's gift to the bride was a furnished house, 817 Third place where they will take up their residence on their return from the wedding trip. Mr. Moore presented his ushers with handsome gold lovers' knot pins while Miss Dryden bore her bridesmaids dainty little pearl and gold ivy leaf pins.

The newly married couple left the house amid the usual shower of rice and caught the Philadelphia express leaving Plainfield at 9:35 o'clock. They will spend ten days at Lakewood and then return to Plainfield to take up their residence as has already been stated.

Among the out of town guests at the wedding were Mrs. T. Harrison Kensett, of Virginia; Mrs. John Kensett, William P. Hall, of Baltimore, Mr. and Mrs. George Currier, Miss Poillon, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Peat, Mrs. Wm. K. Weems, Miss Mary S. Benjamin and the Misses Winans, of New York.

Two pews were reserved at the church for the members of the brides Sunday school class and there were no proudder little girls in the city than those who, with wondering eyes, watched their Sunday school teacher become the wife of Mr. Moore.

Among the Plainfield guests were Dr. and Mrs. C. B. Thiers, W. J. R. Thiers, Miss Marie Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Dryden, Edward Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. Stanford Mount, Mr. Edward T. VanBuren, Mrs. D. T. VanBuren, Mrs. W. T. Pellitier, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Freeman, Arthur A. Freeman, Mrs. W. Reinhart, Miss Reinhart, Miss Grace Leggett, Mrs. J. A. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cruikshank, Miss Ethel Green, Mrs. Charles A. Fisk, Laurens H. VanBuren, Mr. and Mrs. August Kinnicutt, the Misses Borden, Dr. and Mrs. H. Carman, the Misses Duffy and Miss Jessie Richardson.

Mr. Moore is a New York lawyer and has his law offices at 45 Broadway.

GOT THE CROPS WITHOUT RENT.

Burnett Leased the Farm, Harvested the Products and Ran.

The case of Miss Blume, of Passaic, against Burnett, of Howard street, was tried in Justice Crosley's Court last Monday. W. B. Codington represented the plaintiff and W. A. Codington the defendant. It seemed that about five years ago Burnett leased a farm owned by Miss Blume and after retaining it long enough to secure all the crops, he gave up the place without making a settlement. Repeated efforts were made to have the difference adjusted but without success. The plaintiff claimed $200 and the defendant claimed that he did not owe her anything. The case was given to the jury at 11:30 and in a short time they returned with a verdict for the plaintiff allowing her $200.

Funeral of Walter Bass.

The funeral services of the late Walter A. Bass were held from the house on West Eighth street, Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock. Rev. E. M. Bodman officiated, assisted by Rev. Floyd Appleton, assistant rector of Grace P. E. Church, and a vocal selection "Nearer My God to Thee," was effectively rendered by Mrs. W. Freeman, alto; Miss Eagan and Miss Smith, sopranos; E. E. Runyon, bass. The impressive Episcopal service was used, and comforting words were read from First Corinthians, 15th chapter and prayer was offered by Dr. Rodman. The service concluded with the singing of "Rock of Ages," by the quintette. There was a large attendance at the services and many persons from out of town were present. Interment was at Hillside cemetery where Dr. Rodman officiated.

THE LEGISLATIVE GOSSIP

SOME OF THE MEASURES THAT WILL BE BROUGHT UP.

A New Borough Law, to Simplify the Work of Local Government, Will be One—Ballot Law Amendment Proposed.

The coming session of the Legislature will be of considerable importance if all the subjects that are scheduled are considered. There is talk of trying to make it the shortest session on record, but this will be impossible if any consideration whatever is given the important things that are suggested.

One of the subjects that will be considered will be a complete and general borough act, that will facilitate the government of the several hundred boroughs in the State, which in recent years have had a trying time because of the numerous conflicting borough laws. They are working under a temporary act, passed last year, to enable them to continue their corporate existence.

An effort will be made to get the Wood ballot law amended in many particulars. There is a demand for re-enactment of the sunset feature, and also for stricter provisions for the filing of petitions which create new parties. In the last campaign the National Silver Party filed a petition with 1,300 signers, nine-tenths of whom had no idea of voting for the ticket. The result of the election shows that only a few did vote. Because of this petition, several hundred thousand ballots had to be printed at a cost to the taxpayers all over the State of $5,000. It is proposed to amend the law so that those who sign petitions of this character must make affidavit that they intend to vote for the party they are assisting to have recognized.

Assemblyman Lloyd, of Camden, is going to make another attempt to get a Marriage License bill. New Jersey has been for years a Gretna Green, and the business has become so profitable to ministers that marriages are allowed that are disgraceful. Many attempts have been made to get a Marriage License law, but the ministers have opposed it and defeated it.

Equal Taxation will be the heavy theme that will come before the Legislature. The subject dragged wearily through the whole of the last session; this year it will come . . . report of the State Commissioners, of which Attorney-General Stockton is chairman. This commission has been sitting and collecting facts and figures.

The Constitutional Amendments will be a subject for much discussion. There are a great many old members of the Legislature who oppose the amendment for biennial sessions. The objections are based mainly on the idea that the people do not demand a reform in this direction. The amendments relating to the revision of the judiciary and the suppression of gambling will probably go through.

The wheelmen in New Jersey were a factor in the recent election. They voted with the Republicans, believing that they could secure the most beneficent legislation from them. The officials of the League of American Wheelmen have informed a number of the members of the Legislature that they mean to make a fight for the passage of a law similar to that passed in New York, requiring railroads to transport bicycles free of charge.

An effort will be made to change the government of counties by substituting Commissioners for Freeholders.

HOME FOR WAGONERS.

CHARITABLE PEOPLE INTERESTED BY THE STORY IN THE PRESS.

Two Youngest Children Will be Taken in the Children's Home, and a Place Found For the Third—Mother Willing to Work.

The widow and fatherless Wagoners are to have a happy Thanksgiving after all. Before The Press took up their case and told the facts as to their destitution and want it was not a happy prospect that greeted the family with the ravages of a severe winter ready to break forth with howling, piercing winds and blinding snow storms, but the story in this paper touched many hearts and charitable and sympathetic people were soon at work to relieve the conditions that confronted them in the isolated and miserable hut in Warren township.

As has already been told, Mrs. F. H. Wills, of LaGrande avenue, was the first person to go to the rescue of the forlorn family, and her gift of a big box of groceries gave them temporary relief. Mrs. Wills did not stop there, however, but she interested several other persons in the case and efforts were immediately made to get the various members of the family into comfortable circumstances. An appeal was made to the managers of the Children's Home to accept the two youngest children—a boy five years old and a girl seven years old. It was thought that there would not be room for them till December 1st, but yesterday Mrs. Horace Kimball, president of the board, found that they would be able to receive them by next Wednesday and she has notified Mrs. Wagoner to that effect. An attempt is being made to find a place for the other girl, who is thirteen years old, in some family, and anyone who is in a position to assist in that direction should notify the Children's Home Board.

With the three dependent children looked after, Mrs. Wagoner will be able to find work and provide for her self. She is anxious to work, but with the children to care for this would have been almost impossible.

In City Court.

The cases against the hackmen for their recent squabble and runaway were adjourned for one week in the city court Friday. The Richards was also adjourned to the same time. The Saunders case was adjourned to Friday.

Guinea Fined $10.

—Tomorrow evening at 7:30 o'clock the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregation church will hold a very novel Thanksgiving meeting. Several short, bright Thanksgiving stories will be read, and there will be special music. All Endeavorers and their friends are very cordially invited to be present.

TALK OF THE ARMENIANS.

St. Joseph's Holy Name Society Held Interesting Discussions.

The Holy Name Society of St. Joseph's church held its regular monthly meeting Sunday afternoon in the basement of the church. There was a large attendance of the members. The meetings of the society are made interesting by literary entertainment provided by the members. During the year of the organization's existance this feature has been cultivated and the attempts have been very successful. All sorts of subjects are taken up and discussed. The following have been the subjects at the three previous meetings:

"The Monroe Doctrine," by Arthur R. Phillips; "Our Attitude Towards Cuba," by Edward Ryan; "Cause of the Hard Times," by David T. Kennedy. Each of these questions were ably handled and were thoroughly discussed after being presented by those who desired to take part. Yesterday Mr. James Hurley, Jr., reviewed the "Armenian Question." His remarks detailed the frightful massacres that have taken place, which have in this nineteenth century eclipsed anything the world has ever known. Rev. Father Miller also spoke on the same subject and deplored the condition of these unfortunate people, and the apparent inability of the European powers to abate the atrocities. He said our sympathies should go out to the suffering Armenians and that some means should be adopted to make their wholesale slaughter cease.

At the next meeting Father Miller will speak on "Historic Battle Fields."

Manager Willey has been fortunate in securing for Thanksgiving matinee and night the latest New York success entitled, "McFadden's Reception," the funniest three-act musical comedy on the stage today, headed by Messrs. Foster & Williams, the "Beau Brummels" of comedians. They also present as an extra attraction Brannan and Daly, the greatest hit of years in New York, in their original characters, Dr. Parkhurst and Com. Roosevelt. The company has been pronounced by press and public to be the funniest of all farce comedies.

VANDALS AT THE PLAINS

MARAUDERS COMMIT THEFT IN THE CHURCH AND SCHOOL.

The Town-people Aroused and Have Employed Detectives to Rest Down the Guilty Ones—Punishment Awaits Them.

The residents of Scotch Plains and Fanwood are very much incensed over the depredations commited last Tuesday and Wednesday evenings by some unknown young men in that locality. They entered the public school and All Saints P. E. church and destroyed many things of value.

At the School-house the seats and interior wood work was mutilated and things in general were turned upside down. At the church they stole a portion of the communion service and several fancy articles were completely torn in shreds. The furniture was changed about and general destruction seems to have been the purpose of the intruders. Their actions were certainly devilish in the extreme. As soon as the facts were learned the citizens interested themselves and secured the services of two detectives who are now at work on the case. They are determined to catch the guilty ones and bring them to justice, and thus make an example of them.

FIRE LADDIES TO HAVE A TIME.

Will Have a "Wash" and Then a Turkey Supper Thanksgiving.

The members of Engine Company No. 2 are making preparations for a big time on Thanksgiving Day, in which they will combine business and pleasure. The business end of the affair will be a "wash," to take place along Cedar brook, near Park avenue. After this they expect to receive a delegation from Protection Engine Company, of Bayonne, and will show them the sights of Greater Plainfield. In the evening they will sit down to their annual turkey supper, to be given in one of the vacant stores in the Jersey Cycle Academy building on Watchung avenue. The occasion will be one of great jollity. It is expected that the Independent Fife and Drum Corps will be engaged to furnish the music for the parade which will precede the "wash."

For a Permanent Club.

A meeting of the Young Men's Republican Club was held in the Republican Association rooms Friday night with President Wm. N. Runyon in the chair. Secretary Frost read the minutes of the previous meeting and they were approved as read. A committee of three, consisting of the president, secretary and one member of the executive committee, was appointed to draw up a constitution and bylaws for a permanent organization. Adjournment was made to December 15th, at the same place and hour. The membership of the club is now 196, and it is rapidly growing.

Mrs. A. T. Runyon Surprised By Friends.

A very pleasant birthday surprise party was given to Mrs. A. T. Runyon, of LaGrande ave., Friday evening. It was arranged by her husband, and C. F. E. Wyckoff, of East Sixth street. Mrs. Runyon was presented with a handsome set of engravings by her guests. Refreshments were served at midnight and the party broke up about one o'clock. Those present were: Mrs. A. T. Runyon, Miss Fanny Mills, the Misses Wyckoff, Miss Stiglits, A. T. Runyon, John Stocker, Julius Williams, George G. Eckhardt and Thomas Wyckoff.

How to Prevent Croup

SOME READING THAT WILL PROVE INTERESTING TO YOUNG MOTHERS. HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THE DISEASE.

Croup is a terror to young mothers and a few words which may easily recognized and will never be forgotten by one who has heard it. The time to act is when the child first becomes hoarse. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is freely given all tendency to croup will soon disappear. Even after the croupy cough has appeared, this will prevent the attack. There is no danger in giving this remedy for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, druggist.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

HAS COME TO STAY.

Ex Senator Henry E. Winton, of Bergen county, Chairman of the National Democratic State Committee, has announced that the National Democratic party has come to stay. He says:

"The National Democratic vote in New Jersey was 6,474. To get a local status as a party under the New Jersey Election Law it should have polled two per cent. of the total vote, which would be 7,431 votes. The two per cent. was secured in Bergen, Burlington, Middlesex, Monmouth, Morris, Somerset and Union counties, and candidates for county offices can be nominated by convention instead of by petition. The National Democratic party will perfect its machinery in each county of the State by the formation of county committees, in order that there may be a Democratic organization free from Populism. The first organization now being in harmony with Democratic principles, the National Democracy of the State cannot and will not have anything to do with it as an organization. The only Democratic party is the only genuine Democratic organization now existing, and the future of the Democracy is in its keeping for principles are those laid down at the Indianapolis Convention; there is no mistake in the core and as such will renew public confidence in the Democracy. Its action so far has fully demonstrated that such Democrats are in control of its machinery and are guiding it once more through the paths of principle to the nation's honor."

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

The constitutional amendments which were passed last winter will come up for final consideration in the Legislature in January next. They are:

To give women the right to vote in school elections.

To provide for biennial sessions of the Legislature, the Governor and Senators to serve four years instead of three, and Assemblymen two years instead of one.

To prohibit pool-selling or gambling in any form.

Providing that no person nominated by the Governor and not confirmed by the Senate shall be eligible for appointment to the same office during the term.

Making the Court of Pardons consist of the Governor, the presiding Judge of the Supreme Court, and the Attorney-General.

Providing for a Supreme Court of fifteen members, to form the Court of Appeals, to be assigned by the Governor, and the remainder to be divided between the law and equity courts, assignments to be made by the court.

'Rah for the Tigers.

The Socialists bob up serenely in this campaign. They will bob down just as easy.

President Cleveland has appointed Andrew Kirkpatrick, of Newark, United States Judge for the district of New York.

The declination of Geo. O. Stevens for City Treasurer leaves the field to Alex. Titsworth, barring the Socialist nominee, Charles Grieb.

The two candidates for Mayor, Charles J. Fisk and James E. Martine, shook hands last night and casually congratulated one another.

A large amount of matter appropriate to Thanksgiving time is published in The Press today. Another installment will be printed tomorrow.

The example of Rahway Democrats could be followed with profit in Plainfield. In the former place the Democrats have decided to let bygones be bygones, and all factions have organized under one head for mutual warfare against other parties.

There is a good deal of talk nowadays about "cheap journalism." There is nothing very cheap about a business that will make a man several times a millionaire in ten years, as it has done in the case of the man who is held up as the high apostle of "cheap journalism."

It is sometimes the most unexpected that happens in politics, and this is how it was when James E. Martine was nominated for Mayor on the Democratic ticket Saturday night. Mr. Martine led the Democrats into the fight and when no other available candidate could be found to head

What wonders time does work. Now it comes to pass that little Tommy Russell, whom the matinee girls raved over in the delicate character of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" on the stage but a few years ago, has evolved in the course of human growth and enclosure to big "Tom" Russell, the sturdy quarterback of a college football team. But the girls who looked on before as "the dearest, sweetest little thing" can now regard him as "just the noblest, grandest fellow" that ever lived. Either stage or gridiron is a mecca for the hero-loving girls of the nineteenth century, so Tommy is not lost sight of after all.

The farmers of Union and Somerset counties have good reason to be indignant at the treatment they receive from hunters. Fences are broken down, crops trampled under foot and damaged, poultry killed and carried away, and even cattle and horses are shot and killed by unscrupulous gunners from the cities. Farmers have actually been obliged to resort to the law to protect themselves. As a rule they have no objection to hunters who hunt game legitimately, but so many abuse their privileges that the farmers are compelled to refuse all alike. It is with hunting as with other sports: a few "hogs" spoil it for all.—Elizabeth Journal.

SERMON BY MRS. HOWE

THE NOTED AUTHORESS TALKS OF THE LIFE OF PAUL.

Preached to a Large and Interested Congregation in All Souls Church Yesterday Morning—Her Uplifting Sentiments.

The rare opportunity of hearing Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, of Boston attracted a large number of people to the Unitarian church yesterday morning, when this distinguished literary woman preached an interesting and able sermon. The discourse was preceded with a fervent and eloquent petition to the throne of grace by Mrs. Howe. Her remarks were chiefly regarding Paul, as apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. Mrs. Howe spoke of the apostle's liberality to the Gentiles, which made the Gospel of Christ peculiarly adapted to all mankind. She said that in Paul's time there was much corruption among the people who were condemned to death for the slightest offence, and in these dark homes where crime prevailed suffering at times was more terrible than death. It was to these people at Ephesus, the speaker said, that Paul addressed his epistle, with the idea of lifting them up. It was not flesh and blood that had revealed the truth to these people but the Spirit of God. She urged all to receive the Holy Comforter and thus live better lives. Much of our time, Mrs. Howe said, was spent in darkness and ignorance, but no matter how poor we are we have the universe to study and from it we can learn much. She advanced the idea that we should not go back but treasure all possibilities. In closing the speaker urged all to secure freedom, justice and righteousness upon earth and thus be better prepared for the world to come.

The service closed with a few minutes silent prayer and the singing of a familiar hymn.

Many in the congregation remained to greet Mrs. Howe in person.

Sewing Circle Entertained.

The members of the Sewing Society of Warren chapel gave an entertainment Saturday afternoon last in the chapel. Despite the disagreeable weather there was an excellent attendance. Recitations were given by the following young girls: Nettie Lichentritt, Sadie Lichentritt, Pauline Phito, May Seader, Jennie DeMott, Belle DeMott, Alice DeMott, Clara King, Florence King, Maude Sharkey, Edith Demarest, Flossie Demarest, Gussie Patterson, Bessie Farlee, Nettie Wise, Grace Titus, Eva Titus, Grace Giddis, and vocal solos were rendered by Gussie Seader, Edith Squiers. A feature was the recitation of "Little Bo Peep," by Sadie Wilson, aged three years, and she was obliged to respond to an encore. After the rendition of the programme refreshments were served under the supervision of Mrs. William Wilson.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Poles have been erected along Codington avenue for the electric lights which the residents hope to have at an early date.

—There will be a dance in the Olympia Thanksgiving Eve., under the auspices of Frank Blatz, William Kitchen and John DeMeza.

—Many of the teachers from the North Plainfield Public School are attending the Somerset County Teachers' Convention at Somerville.

—Tuesday evening, December 1st, Inspecting Officer Claddox, of Rahway, will inspect John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, of this city.

—Dinner will be served in the afternoon ot Thanksgiving Day at the fair of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., which will include turkey and all the delicacies.

—The Independent Fife and Drum Corps has been engaged to advertise the fair of Franklin Council, J. O. U. A. M., at Ulrich's clubhouse on Thursday evening.

—The Church of the Heavenly Rest will receive $20 as their share of the profits from the recent entertainment given in the parish house by Mrs. J. H. Buckley and Miss Etta Raybert.

—Arrangements are already making for a card and domino party to be given by the members of Senate Lodge, No. 3512, K. of H., on Thursday evening of next week. There will of course be the usual elaborate feed.

—As the cold weather is approaching, the smoking room at the station has become a sort of rendezvous for young men and boys. This is particularly the case on Sunday nights. The more depraved of the younger element are not content to go there and sit out of the cold, but they cut up such capers as to make themselves obnoxious to the passengers and others, so Sunday night Officer McCue weeded out the intruders and told them to stay out under threats of arrest.

A Great Battle.

Do consumptives recover? Yes, thousands of them. Even after the disease has a firm hold? Yes, no doubt about it. After cavities have been formed and hemorrhages have occurred? Yes, even then. If the system is too weak, the disease will probably conquer, but if the body can be reinforced there is a fair chance for a winning fight. For twenty years, thousands have testified how they gained the victory.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil with the Hypophosphites is still coming to the rescue. Out-door life, fresh air, and good pluck are of immense value. But in addition to these the body must be supplied with that peculiar kind of fat which is found only in cod-liver oil, combined with valuable medicinal agents; and there must be the tonic effect which comes from the hypophosphites. It is a great battle, and a great victory is often gained.

THOMAS H. PITTIS DEAD.

He Was Rich and Had Many Peculiar Ideas.

The death of Thomas Hearn Pittis, aged forty-seven years, seven months and eight days, occurred at his home, 913 Central avenue, yesterday afternoon, after an illness lasting several months.

He was born in New York city in 1849 and has lived in Plainfield about twenty-five years. He was a man of peculiar ideas and made the boast that he never wore an overcoat. During the memorable blizzard in March, 1888, he was in Jersey City and in order to get home he walked all the way. He was a man of strong character and physical ability.

Mr. Pittis was a man of wealth and never engaged in any business. He leaves a widow, eight sons and a daughter. Of the boys, Thomas and Albert are doctors, Godfrey, Harold and William are medical students, and Bertram is a law student. The girl's name is Grace Constance Iseult Pittis.

Odd Fellows Meet.

The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of New Jersey met last Wednesday and decided to divide this district, which includes eleven lodges, into two districts. The one which includes Plainfield will now have five lodges. William Sammets, of Westfield, was appointed District deputy grand master of the district.

—A. D. Phillips, the electrician, is overloaded with work at present and was compelled to refuse an offer to go to Narragansett Pier, R. I., and do a piece of work in one of the mansions at that place. Among the many contracts he now has is the wiring of the new Lincoln School building and the North Plainfield High School building.

SPIRIT OF THANKSGIVING

REV. C. E. HERRING TELLS OF SOME OF OUR BLESSINGS.

The Benefits we Have Enjoyed in Church, Government and Society in the Pursuit of an Honest Life Tersely Reviewed.

Just at this season of the year when the minds of the people are turned toward Thanksgiving Day there are man things to be thankful for. At the First Presbyterian church last evening, Rev. C. E. Herring preached a sermonette on the subject: "Reasons for Thanksgiving This Year." It was an able discourse and will be found interesting reading. Mr. Herring said:

"There are certain definite reasons for Thanksgiving this year, which we shall do well to observe. Let us focus our minds on some of them. The discovery of Roentgen rays is proving to be of immense scientific benefit; surgery has made a wonderful stride in this discovery. Antitoxine has proved successful in the treatment of diphtheria. In international affairs there is a decided sentiment in favor of peace. Pending sea difficulties have been settled by arbitration. England and the United States are in favor of arbitration for the settlement of disputes. Lord Russell, Chief Justice of England, declared himself in favor of such arbitration. In National matters, we have passed through a most significant political campaign. Both sides have been intensely earnest, and though the defeated candidate has made a marvelous tour of the States, he and his party have submitted quietly to the will of the people. Utah has become a State without its polygamy. Gambling has had placed upon it severer laws than heretofore in many States.

"In educational matters, a consolidated free library has been secured for New York by the union of three of her great libraries. Women are receiving better opportunities for learning. Russia has decided in favor of a woman's medical institute.

"The attempts to join Church and State have been defeated in the Indian Appropriation Bill.

"In philanthropy, the English have been thoroughly aroused over the Turkish question. We remember with gratefulness the labors of Clara Barton and the Red Cross Army in Armenia. We rejoice in the fact that Dongola was so easily captured by the English and Egyptian troops, which indicates that Khartoum will soon be taken and that the Soudan will be under a civilized government. We rejoice to observe that the Negro is being treated with better grace, as illustrated by the St. Louis hotels opening their dining-halls to the Negro delegates to the Republican Convention.

"There is cause for Thanksgiving in the tendency to church unions for the propogation of the Gospel, in the fact that Li Hung Chang has given us his candid convictions that Christianity has been beneficent to China. The restrictions against the preaching of Christianity in the Chinese code are now removed. A consideration of these facts is sufficient cause as to life we turn hearts in thanks giving to Almighty God for all His benefits."

HIDDEN BOOTY FOUND.

Scotch Plains Church Communion Service Recovered.

The silver communion service, which was stolen from the Episcopal church in Scotch Plains on Thursday night, has been located. Two young men, named Wahl, of Westfield, were out hunting for rabbits on Friday, when they noticed a peculiar-looking package in the end of a sewer pipe, near Westfield. One of the young men dragged the package out, and at the same time out jumped a full grown rabbit. The hunters first dispatched the "cottontail" and then went back for the package, which they took home. When opened it was found to contain most of the stolen church property, all of which was turned over to Constable John M. C. Marsh, of Westfield. There was, of course, no clue that would lead to the identity or arrest of the criminal, yet the church was fortunate in getting back so valuable a set.

SURPRISED AT HER HOME.

A Delightful Affair at the Home of Miss Bessie Giles.

A very pleasant surprise party was given to Miss Bessie Giles, of East Sixth street, Monday night. It was planned by Miss Cora Richardson, of East Sixth street, and Miss Giles was invited to Miss Richardson's home for the early part of the evening while the guests assembled. When all was ready Miss Giles was marched home to find to her surprise that the house was full of a merry party of young people. The rest of the evening then passed delightfully with games and dancing, while refreshments were served toward the close. The gay party finally broke up at about 1 o'clock.

GOT AWAY WITH $1,000

A PLAINFIELD YOUNGSTER RECORDS AN EMBRYO JESSE JAMES.

Louis Milligan 15 Years Old, Entered a West Fifth Street House, Grabbed a Bag of Cash and Valuables and Vanished.

Two lads from this city have mysteriously disappeared and no trace has been found of them. One of them is now wanted for grand larceny.

Last Wednesday Louis Milligan, of West Fourth street, was seen to leave a West Fifth street residence and hurry into the back yard, stopping but an outhouse for a moment. Then he hurried out to New street and out to Fourth street. He jumped aboard a trolley car and disappeared. Soon after the woman living in the house missed a bag she had containing several hundred dollars in cash and a number of certificates of deposit, all valued at about $1,000, belonging to her husband.

She supposed that she had misplaced it, but a careful search failed to find it. Then her neighbors told her of how Louis Milligan had been seen going out of the door, and suspicion rested upon him. The outhouse was examined and there was found the bag, minus its contents.

At last, on Saturday night, the case was reported to the police. It was also found that Charles Wilson, of West Fifth street, an old friend and playmate of Milligan's, was also missing and had not been seen since Wednesday.

Sometime ago these two lads, who are only fifteen years old, ran away and were at last found in the railroad yards at Buffalo. Milligan ran away several times before and has been known as a wild lad. His mind has run on the wonderful achievements of the heroes of those fascinating yet penny-covered dime novels and he has longed to become a second Jesse James or "Almond Eyed Dick, the Boy Detective." He is a stout lad with red face, sandy hair, and was dressed when he disappeared, in blue ribbed knee pants and jacket. He wore a new light bicycle cap and black shoes with pointed toes.

Wilson has light hair and eyes, sharp, features and was dressed in a gray mixed suit, gray golf cap, almost new black shoes with pointed toes.

Young Enterprise.

Two very successful stereopticon entertainments were held in the home of J. Hervey Doane, of LaGrande avenue, on Friday and Saturday afternoons. The stereopticon was under the management of Harold Moore and Alden Moore, while Clyde Doane acted as doorkeeper, business manager and treasurer. Peach baskets served as seats and all were occupied while the attendance was so large that some had to stand. About a hundred views were shown and the audience departed well satisfied that they had received their money's worth. The youthful entertainers realized quite a little sum from their two entertainments, which they will devote to the purchase of a turkey for some poor family's Thanksgiving dinner.

—The Music Hall building on West Front street is being connected with the sewer.

—L. E. Hart, of West Front street, is making several improvements about his house.

—A new fence is being erected around the property at the corner of Liberty and Third streets.

LAMP FELL, THEN FIRE.

A LIVELY BLAZE ON SOMERSET STREET EARLY SUNDAY MORNING.

Neighbors Awoke to Find His House Afire—Both Borough and City Fire Departments Turned Out Lively Work.

A somewhat exciting disastrous fire that broke out at 1.15 Sunday morning in the Justice of the Peace office of H. S. Thomas, on Somerset street, over Philip Maag's harness shop. Mr. Thomas recently took possession of the office for the purpose of carrying on his legal business. He had fitted up his office in a comfortable and suitable manner, with a desk stove, lounge and easy chairs. He also had a large and costly organ in his office, and much of his time outside of his business as a reporter for the News, was spent in his office, and as usual he stopped there Saturday evening at a late hour, to prepare a talk which he was going to give at the Washingtonville chapel last evening. While perfecting his work at a desk on which he placed a large lamp, he dropped off to sleep. Mr. Thomas does not remember how long he slept, but he was suddenly awakened at 1.15 by an heavy crash. In an instant he learned that he had knocked the lamp off the desk and the room was in a blaze. Easily, without coat or hat, he ran to the corner of Pearl and Somerset streets and sent in an alarm of fire from Box 141. The bell rang fully ten minutes before the borough fire department put in an appearance. In the meantime Mr. Thomas ran back to get his coat and hat. He ascended the stairs and found the room dense with smoke and the heat was almost unbearable. He went on, however, and by crawling on his hands and knees, and holding a handkerchief to its nose, he succeeded in getting the two articles. By the time he reached the street the department had two lines of hose were laid from Craig's place.

Patrolman Flynn, of this city, was standing at the corner of Front and Somerset streets, and as the fire seemed be gaining considerable headway, he thought it advisable to pull box 12, which was done at 1.25. The city department arrived at the same time the borough department. The former laid one line of hose from Noe's hose carriage. The hook and ladder truck came in handy and several ladders were used to reach the upper part of the building. The firemen did great work in confining the flames to the office where it started. A considerable amount of water was used and the whole building was soaked. The roof over Martin's blacksmith shop was badly burned and the one over the office was entirely consumed as well as everything in the office excepting the stove and a portion of the organ.

Mr. Thomas had a few valuable papers in his desk which he saved, but his typewriter on top of the desk was about ruined. It was nearly an hour before the firemen finished their work. Nearly everything in J. E. Townsend's office, was soaked and he sustains damage to be $200. Mr. Thomas places his at $250 and no insurance. He and Mr. Maag were the only two in the building who had no insurance. Horace Martin had several bicycles in the room over his shop which were damaged, but his loss will be slight. Mr. Maag's damage is chiefly from water. Mr. Townsend's loss is heavy on account of the many handmade patterns he had, which were ruined, but the insurance will cover his loss.

On this side the chemical engine, hook and ladder truck and No. 1 hose carriage responded, but the chemical was not called. The borough firemen in charge of Chief Fairchild and his valuable assistants deserve credit for their work, which shows that they are ready for any call. They were ably assisted by Chief Doane, First Assistant Chief Martin and several firemen from this side of the river. Mr. Thomas intends opening another office as soon as he can find one suitable and convenient.

At the time of the fire it was raining very hard and it was with difficulty that the firemen worked. The fire attracted a large crowd of people notwithstanding the lateness of the hour. Considering all things the borough department responded very quick, as they have many things to contend with which the Plainfield department have not.

FARMER JIM FOR MAYOR

MR. MARTINE TO LEAD THE DEMOCRATS IN MUNICIPAL CAMPAIGN.

He Was Nominated by Acclamation, but With Several Other Offices There Was a Lively Fight Among Delegates.

The delegates that attended the Democratic city convention held in the Bryant school building on Saturday evening were unanimous in one thing, and that was that they wanted James E. Martine as their nominee for Mayor, but when it came to the other nominations there were two factions on the floor, and at times the convention was very lively as a consequence. There was a tinge of comedy here and there that some of the delegates did not appreciate. There were some of the delegates that believed that a Democrat was a Democrat whether he was an advocate of gold or silver, as the chairman remarked. The other faction held that a Democrat who had taken the side of "honest money" was a traitor to the cause and had no place on a Democratic ticket. That was where the trouble came in and caused all the excitement.

Most of the delegates were present and a score of spectators, among whom were a few members of the Republican camp, who came down to see the fun, and they saw it. Mr. Martine was not a delegate, but he acted as substitute for John Ross, of the Second ward.

The convention was called to order by Peter Flynn, Jr., and he was made permanent chairman. Michael J. DeCourcy was elected secretary, Elmore D. Moffett was chosen judge, and Edward Birmingham and Edward C. Searing inspectors. They were sworn in and then the secretary read the call. The credentials were received and it was decided to allow the chairman of a delegation to cast the vote for the full delegation, although some were absent.

The candidate for Mayor was first nominated. It was understood at the first of the meeting that the Farmer Orator was to be the candidate and there proved to be no opposition. Nominations were made by wards. John Angleman, of the First ward delegation, nominated Mr. Martine as their candidate, and Gilbert S. Martin, of the Second ward, seconded the nomination. The other wards had no other names to present. F. M. Bacon from the Third ward remarked that he would like to name John Mortimer for Mayor if the latter would accept. Mr. Mortimer was there and sat on the proposition immediately. It was then moved and carried that the secretary cast a ballot for Mr. Martine as the Democratic nominee for Mayor.

Nominations for City Treasurer were then called for and John McCarthy named George O. Stevens. Then the first mutterings of the approaching storm might be heard. Somebody asked if he was a Democrat or a gold man and the chairman replied that he was a Democrat, but it was evident that they didn't quite agree on the meaning of the term. A motion that the nomination be made unanimous and that the secretary cast a ballot for Mr. Stevens was made and carried before the opposition realized what had been done.

Wm. E. Garidner was named for City Collector without opposition. Edward Birmingham was named but refused the nomination.

The fun came in the nomination of a member of the Board of Education, which came next. There was a silence after the call for nominations and then Edward C. Searing named A. H. Atterbury. John Casey immediately objected, saying that Mr. Atterbury was a gold man, and then named J. J. Kenney, remarking at the same time that he had no authority to make the nomination. Mr. Kenney, it might be remarked, is known as a staunch silverite. Mr. Atterbury's name was then withdrawn and so was Mr. Kenney's. After another pause Mr. Bacon named E. H. Ladd, Jr., as the candidate. Again Mr. Casey objected for the same reason. Mr. Martine entered the arena with the remark that Mr. Ladd was so much of a Democrat that the Republicans could not stomach him. A lively little debate followed and then the question came to a vote. Ballots were passed and the vote resulted as follows: Kenney, 13; Ladd, 4. The nomination was then made unanimous.

Auguste Saltzman and Jeremiah Manning were unanimously nominated for Commissioners of Appeal.

That ended nominations, but not the fight, for Mr. Casey moved that the nomination of George O Stevens be reconsidered. It was lost on a vote by hands, 19 to 5. Mr. Casey appealed from the decision of the chair but the decision was sustained by a vote of the convention. When Mr. Casey made his first motion someone asked his reason for doing so and he answered that it was because Mr. Stevens was a gold man.

The chairman was authorized to appoint a committee to fill vacancies and he appointed Michael J. DeCourcy, Edward C. Searing and Frank M. Bacon.

Mr. Martine then made a few remarks, thanking the convention for the honor they had conferred on him. He thought the municipal government should be under home rule, by the people who spent most of their time in this city. If he was elected, he said, he had no pledges to make, but would try to make the government economical and honest, and not one starting in club cars and private clubs.

After taking up a collection for Janitor Hope the meeting adjourned, while some of the delegates continued their argument in the hall.

J. J. Kenny refused to accept the nomination for member of the Board of Education and John Cory was named in his place.

Nervous

People often wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they start at every slight but sudden sound; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and nervous

Dyspepsia

The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood which is continually feeding the nerves upon refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. In such condition opiate and nerve compounds simply deaden and do not cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich, red blood; gives natural sleep, perfect digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

HIS WIFE FAITHLESS.

HUGO KURZHALS INSTITUTES PROCEEDINGS FOR DIVORCE.

Found Her in Company With a Brother Barber in a Hotel in New York.—Misconduct Began Going on For Some Time.

Gossips of Westfield were considerably shocked by the announcement made late Friday afternoon that Hugo Kurzhals, formerly of this city, had taken the initial steps to secure a divorce from his wife, Laura. Winfield S. Angleman, of this city, has been retained, and has drawn up a bill to be filed in court. This was the first intimation that there was any trouble between the couple.

It now transpires that Kurzhals claims that he has for a long time suspected his wife. Kurzhals is proprietor of the high toned barber shop of the town, and has lived here for nine years. He has made considerable money, and a couple of years ago erected one of the finest business blocks in town. The Kurzhals couple had their home on the second floor of the block, and lived in comfortable style.

The man in the case is Charles Mitchell, a journeyman barber, who acted as Kurzhals' assistant a couple of years ago. Mitchell became friendly with his employer's wife, and as a result was discharged. He thereupon set up a rival barber shop, and succeeded in getting many of his former employer's wife. Both rode bicycles, and they met frequently and took bicycle rides together.

Kurzhals suspected that they were meeting in New York, and he set detectives to watch them. On Thursday Mrs. Kurzhals took an afternoon train for New York, and Mitchell left on the next train, followed by one of the detectives. Mrs. Kurzhals and Mitchell met in New York and went into the hotel at the corner of West and Liberty streets.

Kurzhals was summoned to the hotel by the detective, and found the couple together, and it was all his friends could do to prevent his doing them bodily injury.

Mrs. Kurzhals' maiden name was Laura Hegeman, and her former home was Asbury Park. She is slight and very pretty, is a member of the Westfield Baptist church, and since her residence there has been prominently identified with the W. C. T. U. and church work. Kurzhals is taken a prominent part in politics, is a member of the fire department and several societies.

Mrs. Kurzhals returned to town on Thursday night, and has been stopping with a friend.

When seen by a reporter Mitchell denied that there had been anything improper between him and Mrs. Kurzhals. He said that he met her by accident in New York Thursday, and invited her into the hotel to have some lunch and a glass of beer. She accepted the invitation, and when they were interrupted he left. He says that it is his intention to continue his business in town, and declares that the whole matter is the result of business jealousy on the part of his former employer, who is taking this method of injuring him.

Kurzhals has many friends in Westfield, and they have made vague threats that if Mitchell persisted in staying in town he might get roughly handled.
